When the strangers were safely hidden, Letty approached the blueberry bush slowly, all the while making a soft, calling note. An answering call—a pause—another call and Letty was close to the nest. Stretching out her fingers with a bit of cracker between them, she called again.

A whirr of wings, a lilt of song, and the male bird was on her finger. Again Letty called the soft note and the mate raised her head from the nest to answer. Then she spread her wings and flew to join her mate.

Letty opened her lips in a gasp of surprise. The nest held four funny, half-feathered baby birds!

Then she became conscious of a peculiar clicking sound among the bushes where the two strangers were hid. But she was so interested in the baby birds she did not pay much attention.

The birds finished their cracker and flew around her head. Mother bird flew back to the nest, but father bird perched on her shoulder while he sang a "Thank you"—then he, too, flew away.

The strange man and the girl came from their hiding place, and Letty promised to go with them down the lane and into the pines to hunt for more nests. What a nice time she had. They ate luncheon by the side of a little brook in the pasture, and Letty and Anne went in wading. Then they hunted for more nests, and Anne's father took pictures of them, and of the birds they saw flying here and there.

A happy sun-kissed girl bade them good-bye in the early afternoon and hurried to mother to tell her all about it.

Bob came home at supper time, tired and cross. It had been a long hike; they had lost their way and gone several miles beyond where they should; then when they reached the camp they found some people occupying it, and so they had to turn around and come right back. Some of the boys had brought things to cook on the camp stove, so there was very little cooked food they had to eat, and although they shared it, they were all tired, cross and hungry.

Letty tried to tell Bob about her day, but he was so cross she gave it up, and as the days went by she almost forgot about it, only sometimes when she was feeding her song sparrows she wondered where her stranger companions were now.

It was months later, in the middle of the winter, when Brother Tom came home one night and said:

"There is to be a wonderful picture in the theater tonight. It is pictures of birds. If I could afford it I would take the whole family."

Mother laughed as she said: "Tom, the strangest thing has happened. Letty has received six tickets to the lecture, with the famous lecturer's compliments. We cannot understand it, but Letty is taking us all tonight."

But when the lecturer stepped out on the platform, Letty squeezed mother's hand. "It is my stranger," she said. "I wondered why he asked my name and address."

Suddenly the family gave a gasp of astonishment. There in the pictures they saw Letty—their Letty—on tiptoe approaching the song sparrow's nest; they heard the little call, they saw the birds fly to her outstretched finger, and the nest with the baby birds. Then they understood.

After the pictures were over, the lecturer came to where they were and introduced himself to father and mother. Anne had already found her, and the two girls were chatting away like old friends.

Before they left it was arranged that Letty should go next vacation time to visit Anne, who lived in a big city, and a wonderful time they promised her.

"My, but you're lucky," said Bob, after they reached home. "To go to Benton and see all the things there are to see, the museums, the parks, the zoos and everything."

"Letty's adventure is still going on," said father, giving her hand a little pat. "You see, she had the courage to go in search of it, and perseverance to keep on until she found it."—The Sentinel.

Fuzzy Fur and the Magic Music.

Fuzzy Fur, the little brown bear, was very much surprised, and for two reasons. The first was that some other bear had visited his very best berry patch while he was away and had eaten all the berries. The second was that as he went rumbling, grumbling down the hill he suddenly heard a most entrancing sound that was not like anything he had ever heard before.

The sound was more soothing than the sighing of the wind in the trees. It was more entrancing than the tinkling of the brook as it tumbled down the mountain-side. It was more melodious than the song of the mockingbird swinging on the topmost bough of the oak in the moonlight, or the roundelay of the golden-throated oriole singing in the flower-bejeweled thicket.

To Fuzzy Fur it was more wonderful than anything he had ever heard. He forgot his hunger as the sound floated to him across the valley, and suddenly he decided he would go and find that music.

Now, when Fuzzy Fur wished to find anything, he had a sure and easy way of doing it. He wrinkled his nose and followed the scent as it floated by on the breeze, and when his nose got there the rest of him would be right behind it. So Fuzzy Fur turned his nose to the breeze and sniffed.

He smelled many things, but nothing that was new to him. Apparently this magic music had no scent by which he could find it. He could smell things at a much greater distance than he could see or hear them. It was just as well that he could, for the dangers that lurked in the forest were usually silent dangers.

Fuzzy Fur knew that a mountain lion, crouching on the branch of a tree high above the trail, could remain motionless and silent for hours, but his nose told him the lion was there long before he came to it. He knew, too, that some things have no scent. A baby deer, for instance, weak and helpless and unable to protect itself from enemies, had no scent, and if it kept perfectly still and silent an enemy could pass right by it and not know it was there.

This magic music, then, must be something like that, for there was no strange scent on the air.

"Well," thought Fuzzy Fur, "if I can't smell nor see it, I can hear it, so here goes."

Up came one foot and up came another. Down went one foot and down went another. Over fallen trees, through tangled vines, over slippery rocks those feet took Fuzzq Fur, until he found himself on the trail that led to the house where Billy lived with his Uncle Jim, the forest ranger. But Fuzzy Fur kept right on, until, when he turned a corner, he saw Billy and Uncle Jim in the garden under the apple tree.

There was a scent of cake and jam and sugar and all kinds of good things now, but Fuzzy Fur's nose took no notice of them, which was most unusual. Nor did he pay any attention to Uncle Jim and Billy, though at any other time he would have stopped and hidden among the trees, or gone away again.

Fuzzy Fur thought of only one thing, and that was the music that held him spellbound. He saw Billy with a queer looking thing tucked under his chin. Billy was sawing away at it with a funny looking stick, reminding Fuzzy Fur of the lumbermen he had once seen sawing trees. But instead of the harsh, rasping noise the lumbermen made, Billy was making the magic music that had lured Fuzzy Fur and made him forget his hunger.

Uncle Jim and Billy had their minds on the music, too. Billy's fingers twinkled up and down the violin as the bow swept across the strings. Uncle Jim's feet tap-tapped to the music as it was wafted away to blend with the whisper of the breeze and the rustle of the leaves in the treetops where the first stars were beginning to show.

Then, suddenly, abruptly, the music ceased.

Uncle Jim looked up with a startled, "What's wrong?"

"A bear," whispered Billy. "Behind you, right close to the fence."

Slowly and deliberately Uncle Jim turned his head.

"It's that rascal Fuzzy Fur;" he said. "But he's not up to mischief this time, so we won't frighten him away. Quick! He's going! Start playing again."

Fuzzy Fur had indeed been going, but when the music started again he came very close to the wire fence, and, poking his nose between two strands of wire, he opened his mouth and put out his tongue as though to see if he could taste the music.

"Bears are extremely fond of music," said Uncle Jim as Billy kept on playing the violin. "They will forget all about food, and even about possible danger when they hear music. It seems to fascinate them in some strange manner so that they can think of nothing else."

Uncle Jim turned again and saw Fuzzy Fur standing up on his hind legs, gazing eagerly at the musician. Sometimes Fuzzy Fur would pat the fence post with his paw, as though beating time, and sometimes he would mark time with his hind feet until he almost seemed to be dancing.

"Are all animals as fond of violin music as that?" Billy asked.

"Not all animals," said Uncle Jim. "But bears will forget everything else when they hear violin music. If there was a honeycomb right under Fuzzy Fur's nose at this moment, I'm sure he wouldn't know it."

"Isn't he enjoying himself, though," Billy chuckled.

"I believe," said Uncle Jim, "that if you moved slowly and deliberately, and kept right on playing, you could walk up to him."

"I'm going to try!" Billy got up slowly to his feet.

"Don't make any jerky move," warned Uncle Jim. "Just move steadily."

Slowly, one deliberate step after another, Billy advanced, keeping his fingers running up and down the violin strings and the bow sweeping back and forth across them, until he stood where he could have reached out a hand and touched Fuzzy Fur. For several minutes he stood there playing, with Fuzzy Fur swaying his head from side to side delightedly, and padding away with his feet on the pine needles.

And then, when Billy's fingers were so tired that he couldn't play any longer, he stopped.

For a moment no one moved. Then, with a sigh that seemed almost human, Fuzzy Fur dropped to all fours, nodded at Billy, as much as to say, "Thank you for the music", and trundled off along the trail.

"I just couldn't keep playing a moment longer," said Billy, rubbing his fingers to get the stiffness out of them. "I'm glad we didn't frighten him away."

"I think Fuzzy Fur enjoyed his visit immensely," chuckled Uncle Jim. "And I don't think you will ever be as close as that to a real wild bear again."

"Oh, I'm not so sure," replied Billy. "I think I'll try it again some evening. I know we all had a good time—you and I and Fuzzy Fur."—Junior World.

The Little Lost Hope.

Betty looked under the bed and over by the chest of drawers and pretty nearly everywhere, but she could not find her lost shoe.

"Oh, dear!" said she, very much put out. "Where can it be? Perhaps I left it downstairs last night."

"Which is a very bad habit," remarked the Chest of Drawers.

"Yes, indeed," said the Big Rocking Chair.

"An extremely bad habit," agreed the Bed. "There is a place for everything, you know."

"Certainly," added the Little Red Rocker.

Betty really looked dreadfully provoked. It certainly was no concern of theirs that she could not find her shoe, but she thought it best not to say anything, for they were talking just like mother talked, and, of course, everybody knows that mother-talk is always quite right.

Then she took another look, behind the door, in the closet, under the little red rocker, and when the shoe was not to be found there, hippity-hop she went downstairs.

"Do-o-ng!" clanged the Grandfather Clock in the lower hall.

"Ting!" echoed the little Swiss Clock on the mantel.

"Half-past eight," exclaimed Betty. "Oh, dear! I fear I will be late for school. Have you seen my other shoe, Grandfather Clock?"

"Tick-no! Tick-no!" answered the Grandfather Clock in his stern way.

"Have you, Little Swiss Clock?"

"Tick-not! Tock-not!" retorted the little clock quickly.

"Oh, my! Oh, my!" wailed Betty. "I have to eat my breakfast, feed the gold fish and gather my books together. Then if I look again for it I am sure I shall never get to school on time."

"Tick-no," agreed the Grandfather Clock.

"Tock-not, tock-not," repeated the Little Swiss Clock.

Then hippity-hop went Betty into the living-room, peering into every hole and corner.

"Ha!" cried the Big Mirror, who saw almost everything. "What is the trouble, Betty?"

"I have looked high and low, but I cannot find my shoe," answered Betty in great distress. "Perhaps you have seen it, Big Mirror?"

"I have indeed," replied the Big Mirror, in a reproving tone of voice. "You pulled it off down here last night, Betty; and, what is more, you left it down here."

"Oh! so I did," said Betty, very much elated. "I remember that I left it beside the Wing Chair."

But when Betty looked beside the Wing Chair her other shoe was not to be found.

"Have you seen it, Wing Chair?" she asked.

"I won't tell," replied Wing Chair mysteriously.

"The puppy was in here a moment ago," said the Big Mirror. "You had better run quickly, Betty, and see if he has carried off your shoe."

Betty went hippity-hop all through the house searching for the puppy, and at last she found him in the kitchen under the cabinet, fiercely shaking her shoe.

"Stop, naughty puppy!" she cried, endeavoring to grab the shoe, but the puppy was much too quick, and round and round the room he raced with the shoe in his mouth.

Betty raced round and round after him, crying, "Drop my shoe! Drop my shoe, naughty puppy!"

But, of course, the puppy did not drop the shoe, for he was having a perfectly beautiful time, thinking all the while that Betty was playing with him, and he shook it and shook it and growled with impish glee.

Then, just as Betty was about to catch him, he darted under the big kitchen stove.

"Now," he said, cocking his little head sidewise and peeping out, "you can't possibly get me."

"Oh, yes, I can," cried Betty thoroughly out of patience, and down she went on her hands and knees and recovered her little shoe from the puppy's sharp teeth.

"There!" she cried. "I did!"

The puppy cocked his head sidewise again, and didn't say a word.

"I am glad Betty found her shoe," said the Stove.

"I'm glad, too," said the Kitchen Chair.

"So am I. So am I!" said the Kettle, beginning his steam-song.

And the puppy under the stove went off to sleep, dreaming of the fun he had with Betty's shoe.

So, Betty hurried and reached school on time, after all. But after that she always saw that her shoes were in her room when she went to bed. That saved her a lot of trouble, and she was able to get to school on time.—Exchange.

HIS KINGDOM.

Kathleen Hay.

I want to belong to His Kingdom,
The Kingdom of Love, not hate,
Where kindness holds sway forever,
And mercy's the crowning trait.

I want to belong to His Kingdom,
Where quarreling and jealousy cease,
Where good and not evil is practiced,
That Kingdom of joy and peace!

I want to belong to His Kingdom,
And live for others each day,
In the light of His love dwell forever,

of the graduates to witness the commencement exercises. It was a thrilling occasion for all.

The play, "Votes for Women", was really a splendid one, which, no doubt, must have tantalized any audience. The boys wore blue overalls and straw hats while they performed different sorts of domestic work, such as rearing the child, sewing old clothes, sweeping and scrubbing the floor, and washing the dishes. On the other hand, their wives managed governmental affairs. The traditional "Virginia reel" ended the play in stirring climax of the clapping of hands. The success of the play is due in large degree to the untiring efforts of Mr. Diman. From any point of view he has the genius of a dramatist.

If there is any moral in that play, we sincerely hope that it will obliterate the egotism that exists among males particularly. But, needless to say, there is a comment on it, which is the disenfranchisement of women in the Philippines.

We just feel proud of the fact that so many, rather quite a number, of the boys and girls are graduating from the intermediate and high schools annually. We hope that this will continue so that every young generation in this surrounding country will have an opportunity to get a secular, as well as a religious, education. These are of vital importance in effecting a metamorphosis in the moral and physical rudiments of life among our own Igorot tribes.—The Mountain Province Churchman.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Leading to Union of Three Groups of Methodists.

An epoch-making event concerning American Methodism occurred in Chicago this week when representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Protestant Church met and drew up a proposed constitution calling for a union of the three bodies.

If the combination is finally effected, it will form probably the largest, numerically, Protestant denomination in the entire country. Constitutional procedure for effecting the union will require probably five years.

Under the proposed constitution, six jurisdictional conferences would be set up. The constitution proposes regional administrative units and regional election of bishops, a departure from traditional Methodist policies.

Present Methodist Bishops will remain in office, under the plan, but several new bishops will necessarily be elected. Greater autonomy for foreign mission jurisdictions is provided for under the plan.

Leading representatives of all three units of the Methodist Church involved in the proposed union were present at the three-day session, held at the First Methodist Church, Evanston. The plan for a union of the groups has been under consideration for a quarter of a century. The break betwen the Northern and Southern groups resulted from the Civil War.

Religious Educational Session.

"Bridging the Gap for the Child," will be the theme of a two-day conference of Church School Superintendents, teachers and clergy, to be held at St. Peter's Church, Chicago, September 7 and 8, under auspices of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education. Plans for the conference, the eighth annual, are announced by Miss Vera C. Gardner, diocesan director.

The Rev. John B. Hubbard, St. Mary's, Park Ridge, will give the opening address. Other speakers and leaders will include: Miss Marcella Prugh, Winnetka; Mrs. Ada Cordick, St. Bartholomew's; Mrs. Norris Boehmer, St. Mark's, Evanston; Miss Katherine Martin, St. Joseph's; Mrs. Gowan C. Williams, Glen Ellyn; Mrs. Cleon Bigler, Western Springs; Miss Evelyn Spickard, Atonement; the Rev. John Heuss, St. Luke's Pro-Cathedral, Evanston, and the Rev. Alfred Newbery, Atonement.

One of the features of the conference will be the first showing in the Middle West of the motion picture, "The New World", depicting the history of the Church in the United States and prepared in connection with the last General Convention in Atlantic City.

Officers of the conference are: the Rev. John S. Higgins, chairman, department of religious education; the Rev. Richard C. Talbot, Jr., dean; the Rev. J. R. Pickells, chaplain; Miss Grace Deland, secretary; Mr. Frank B. Wyckoff, treasurer.

St. Alban's Opens September 19.

St. Alban's School for Boys, Sycamore, will open its fall term on September 19, with prospects for a better enrollment than last year, according to announcement by the Rev. Dr. Chas. L. Street, headmaster.

Dr. Street announced the appointment to the faculty of Mr. Harold Holt, a layman and teacher at Proviso High School. Mr. Holt is a candidate for holy orders and has been taking the services as lay reader at Trinity Church, Niles Center. He will teach history and English at St. Albans. Mr. Walter McNeil of Elgin has been appointed assistant business manager of the school.

Plan Young Peoples Conference.

Youth's outlook for 1936 will be measured by opinions of young people of Northern Illinois attending a conference under sponsorship of Gamma Kappa Delta, to be held at Lake Geneva, August 30 to September 2. Mr. Leigh H. Hunt, President of G. K. D., announced the plans which call for open and frank discussions with relation to the Church's program for youth.

Courses of special interest to young people will be offered. The Rev. James McN. Wheatley of Fort Wayne, Ind., the Rev. Ray Everett Carr, St. Peters, Chicago; the Rev. John B. Hubbard, Park Ridge, and the Rev. John Heuss of St. Lukes Pro-Cathedral, will be among the instructors.

NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. Ernest V. Shayler, D. D., Bishop.

Church School to Be Started in Omaha.

The Rev. Vernon Lane, rector of St. Martin's, S. Omaha, will open the Galahad School for Boys on September 9. This school will be sponsored by the Church, but will be open to all who wish to attend. A former Presbyterian Church has been leased for one year, with the option of purchase if the venture proves successful.

It is not proposed to seek a large enrollment, but for the coming year only twenty boys will be accepted, selected because of their character and studious habits. There will be cultural subjects appended to the regular public school curriculum.

Only third, fourth and fifth grade work is available at first. The boys will be required to wear a uniform during school hours, consisting of a white shirt, with black tie, blue blazer with a white shield, and a monogrammed red "G" on the right sleeve, blue shorts and a close fitting cap of the same material as the blazer. The Rev. Vernon Lane will be headmaster, Mr. Clarence Sutton teacher of the third grade, Rev. George Tyner teacher of art and Miss Irene Goosman teacher of piano and violin. An athletic coach and a fourth grade teacher are yet to be appointed. The school will be governed by a board of counsel of ten members, of which Bishop E. V. Shayler will be the chairman.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop

Daughters of the King Hold Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Daughters of the King of the Diocese of Western Michigan was held in All Saints' Church, Saugatuck, August 13. At a Corporate Communion all the members present renewed their vows as members of the Order.

Officers for the year were elected as follows: President, Miss Georgia R. Russell, of St. Luke's Church, Kalamazoo; Vice-president, Mrs. J. A. McNulty, Emmanuel Church, Hastings; Secretary and Treasurer, Miss C. Falkingham, Benton Harbor; Extension Secretary, Mrs. M. V. Burlingame, Grace Church, Grand Rapids.

The session closed with an admission service for new members nad installation of officers. The Rev. J. A. McNulty, rector of Emmanuel Church, Hastings, was in charge of the services, assisted by the Rev. A. L. Schrock, vicar of All Saints' Mission.

Vacation Bible School Has Become Community-wide.

Emmanuel Church, Hastings, has just completed its fifth annual Daily Vacation Bible School. Under the leadership of the rector, the Rev. J. A. McNulty, this school has grown each year, until it is now a community-wide project This year the Life of Our Lord was studied, emphasis being placed upon the relation of everyday events in the life of Jesus to everyday events in our lives No text-books are used in the school, everything being memorized. At the close of the four weeks' term, five pageants depicting major incidents in the Life of Christ were presented under the direction of Fr. McNulty. All of the "properties", including the scenery, were made in the handicraft classes of the school.

Fine Spirit of Friendship Developed Between Roman Catholic and Episcopal Congregations.

Sometime ago the Roman Catholic Church of the Blessed Sacrament at Allegan burned to the ground. At once the Vestry of the Episcopal Church of the Good Shepherd, of which the Rev. Albert Linnel Schrock is rector, with the advice and consent of Bishop McCormick, offered the Roman priest the full and free use of our Church. He gratefully accepted and since that time his congregation has been using our Church and our altar, with all the ornaments and equipment, for one or more Masses every Sunday, and on the principal Holy Days, and for Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament. A fine spirit of friendship between the two congregations has resulted. The Roman Catholic congregation is building a splendid brick and stone Church to be completed in the early autumn.

By all means use some time to be alone, Salute thyself; see what they soul doth wear.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"Christ is calling us today, through all the circumstances of the time, to make it quite clear that the purpose of God is world-fellowship."

He whose life is dominated by love lives under the spell of an undefeatable spirit.

I have never seen a war out of which any permanent peace has come.—Kitchener.

"We can never rightly pray against others."

"We are compassed about with infinite Power, and we have only to open wide the doors of our soul to drink it in."

To want what God wants is to sanctify ourselves for the sake of others; to grow into such union with the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, that their love for the world will be ours, their longing to save all men will be ours.—A. H. Neile.

"God's spirit falls on me as dewdrops on a rose,
If I but like a rose my heart to Him unclose.
The heart wherein God dwells—what church can holier be—Becomes a moving tent of heavenly majesty."

No teacher untaught by Christ has dared to say of the Supreme—whether Person or Principle—that supremacy consists in utmost service. For Plato, as for Mohammed, while all things else must serve the Supreme, the Supreme is no servant. But when God became incarnate He said, "I am among you as one that serveth."—Bishop William Temple.

O never star
Was lost; here
We all aspire to heaven, and there is heaven
Above us.
If I stoop
Into a dark tremendous sea of cloud,
It is but for a time; I press God's lamp
Close to my breast; its splendor soon or late
Will pierce the gloom. I shall emerge some day.
—Robert Browning.

Christ taught us that from within, out of the heart of man, comes all that can exalt, and all that can defile him. From within outwards, from the individual to society, from the hidden man of the heart to outward behavior—that is the method of Christ, and the process of social regeneration which alone can call itself Christian.—Selected.

"THE RADIANT CHRIST"

The famous large oil painting of "The Radiant Christ," by an unnamed artist, which is now on exhibition at St. Margaret's Church, Washington, D. C., is regarded as one of the most inspiring, intriguing and epoch-making paintings in the realm of art. It portrays the felicitous relationship between the Saviour and little children. It is having a most beneficial effect among children. Every little girl who sees the painting, expresses a desire to hold the Saviour's hand and walk with Him. At the foot of the mountains in the distant background may be seen, at left and right, the suggestion of two small villages, a pathway leading to where the three figures have stopped.

It is the work of an artist whose conception of the Christ differs greatly from those who have portrayed Jesus as the "man of sorrows," and who has given us a Radiant Christ. (See page 11.)

IMPORTANT

We should like to take this opportunity to urge those subscribers who have not paid their subscriptions to do so by return mail. The Southern Churchman is making a valiant fight and it is a terrific drain on our treasury to have to send out some thousands of bills each month for past due accounts. The bills are small, but in the aggregate they amount to a large sum, which we need to carry on the work. We shall appreciate tremendously your co-operation.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dr. Keller's Method Approved.

August 19, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

The parsons, dedicated to God, play ball with the prisoners in the workhouse, and mix thus with "sinful men". By and by, they put on surplices and stoles, and perhaps copes and miters, and get down on their knees along with those who wear silk hats to church, and make confessions that proclaim themselves to be "sinful men".

It is a fact that one of these sets of "sins" consists of overt offenses against the persons and properties of people, and society protects herself against them by bolts and bars. And there is that difference between them and other "sins", which are more like cancers against which bolts and bars are no protection, and we ought not to try to deny the importance of that difference. But the Lord was aware of that when He said: 'I was in prison, and ye visited me not," and: "Inasmuch as ye did it not to the least of these my brethren." And, the only kind of visiting that seems to do much good to the visitors or the visited is the kind that stresses the common level of brotherhood, and of sinfulness, and subordinates the superiorities and the condescensions. More power to the wise Dr. Keller and his following.

Bishop Brent playing baseball with the soldiers, on Sunday afternoons, at Baguio in the Philippines, with a barkeeper for umpire, and a vociferous gang of military prisoners for chief rooters, rises to memory in this connection. The Bishop had played cricket, but never baseball. His first time at bat, he hit a weak one to the pitcher, who threw him out at first, with yards to spare. The umpire promptly squalled: "Safe!" The pitcher and others besieged the umpire with bitter remonstrances, and the Bishop took advantage of the digression to steal second, then third, then home. Players tagged him out from time to time, only to hear the umpire squall more and more loudly: "Safe!" By this time, the umpire looked like the centre of a hornets' nest. Whereupon, being a stalwart Catholic, he withered these objectors as follows: "What's the matter with you ginks? Don't you know nothing at all about religion? Ain't he the Bishop? Then how in —— is he goin' to get out?"

Information Desired.

Mr. Editor:

May I ask the courtesy of your letters column to inquire what experience my brethren of the clergy have had with patients in Hospitals for the Insane when the question arises of their making the Christian confession? On the face of it, it may seem absurd to propose to a crazy man that he "join the church". It may be assumed that he is necessarily incapable of determining the issues involved. Yet our hospitals have a creditable record of complete recoveries from mental disease, and it seems a fair proposition that such recovery would be assisted, under certain conditions, by the definite act of confession, sealed and blessed in Holy Baptism and Confirmation.

I recall the case of a young man in my field years ago who was markedly feeble-minded, whose friends doubted whether he was a proper subject for Baptism. I advised it and later presented him for Confirmation. He memoried, with infinite labor, a large part of the Catechism and became, within the limits of his mental capacity, one of the most valuable members of the Mission to which he belonged. He, however, was not confined to an Insane Hospital. Would his Baptism have been permitted if he had been?

I shall be specially grateful for information from chaplains in such institutions, either through your columns or private correspondence.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen

The Church and Labor Day.

There has been a natural reaction in the minds of many of our church people. With the advent of much social reform during not only the days of the new deal, but during the past many years, the plights of labor and unfair conditions of workers have been brought to the fore. Many a manufacturer knew that he had not had any part in the exploitation, and are we mistaken in saying that when it was properly carried out, the older type of paternalism was as agreeable and pleasant for the workingman as anything ever devised in the modern machine age? Such manufacturers or employers of labor have resented the implication which they feel in a good bit of the talk of today that they are a group of villains with no regard or care for those who work for them.

Unfortunately the just have to suffer for the unjust. Is that not the story of Christianity? For everyone who was fair and kind in his treatment, in accordance to the older ideal, there were many who did exploit, and the Church, following the inheritance that came through Our Lord from the great Hebrew prophets, must of necessity protest against such exploitation. That the laboring man has not always treated the fair employer fairly can hardly be denied, but for every such instance is there not a much larger list the other way?

Of course where our Church has fallen down only too sadly is in not carrying religion to the laboring man. On Labor Day, there is almost a need for the bishops to declare a day of penitence and fasting, for the people have not been witnesses to the great mass of workingmen in our country. We have passed beautiful resolutions of sympathy for them in their struggles for a better wage and better living condition, but we have not been on the whole a Church composed of people who were willing to witness to the laboring man and to try and reach him.

One other thing that we can do in regard to labor is to help those fine souls, exemplified in our own Church by Mr. Spencer Miller, in their endeavor to educate the workingmen of our country to the real problems that they are involved in. Institutes for labor are pitifully attended. The clergy and Christian employers should encourage those workingmen whom they can influence to attend such institutes where new and greater horizons are discovered. Each cleric can well ask himself whether he knows when such institutes are held and resolve, if he is in ignorance of them, to do his part towards finding out and encouraging the continuance of such fine educational methods which may save us from bloody revolution and at the same time make no compromise with those things which are detrimental to the human race.

We have left the day when only one or two men worked for another man. Thousands work now in huge numbers for corporations. A better intelligence is needed in both capital and labor to promote peaceful understanding. The Church can well serve as an inspiration toward better understanding and can also serve as the mediator to promote intelligent approach to hard problems.

The Status of Various Organizations.

It has been stated in at least one publication that there is jealousy in the ranks of the members of the staff of the National Council over the success of The Forward Movement and the leadership so successfully displayed by Bishop Hobson. This should be categorically denied, and while it might not be dignified for the staff members of The National Council to make such denial, we can state that we know positively such accusations are composed of mere stuff and nonsense.

While it might be true that after The Forward Movement Commission had been founded by General Convention, there was misunderstanding as to just what functions this body should have and just what were its relations with The National Council, a very friendly conference was held in New York between the leaders of the two groups and these misunderstandings were swept away.

A number of our readers have wondered just what were the functions of these two children of General Convention. Both are creatures of the only body capable of governing the Church—the General Convention. The National Council is engaged in carrying on the missionary work and oversight of the mission fields. It has boards of social service and religious education to aid and inspire local and diocesan work in such fields. It has a field or promotional department which also, on request, helps the various local groups interested in awakening the church membership to the situation facing the Church throughout the world. It only does its work as the agent of the General Convention.

The Forward Movement can be said to have equal status with The National Council as a creation of the General Convention. But its function is finding new

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

A Message of Radiant Hope.

The Church of England Newspaper, August 9, 1935.

The publication by the Missionary Council of the Church Assembly of the third Unified Statement has once more brought vividly before the whole Church its world task in witness to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Without question this new volume under the arresting title of "World Wide Witness" is the best of the series. It is a cure for pessimism in a world of perplexity, for it bears a message of radiant hope. It is a challenge to the whole Church in a critical period of its history. It is an attempt to explain the place and influence of the Church on its international side in this bewildered and disillusioned age in which we live.

It opens by asking the pertinent question, What is the purpose of God for the Church? and the answer comes to us, not in any well-known ecclesiastical or theological way, but from the front line of the Church in action in the Mission Field. God's purpose is, we are told, "A Church whose activities are dominated and determined by its commission." This is illustrated in a variety of ways, but from Jerusalem we are given the interpretation of an Educational Board that the teachers "should be inspired by a sense of conviction to share their personal experience of Jesus Christ, both by life and word." This brings us to the "personal responsibility" of individual units in the Church for the spread of the Gospel, and we are told that God's purpose is "a Church whose every member realizes responsibility to make Christ known."

Because Christianity is a religion of life centering in a person, it offers no theory for a solution but a way of deliverance in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. A Jewish leader, Rabbi Solomon, puts the matter more tersely than I can. He says: The consciousness of the presence of God has come to millions of men and women through Jesus. Time has not faded the vividness of His image. Poetry still sings His praise. He is still the living comrade of countless lives. No Moslem ever sings "Mohammed lover of my soul," nor does the Jew say to Moses, "I need thee every hour." If, as we believe, Christ is really the answer how can we bring out message of Him effectively to the world? A study of this report gives us the experience of Christian leaders all over the world and a true summary of the conclusion reached would be that the Church grows as it witnesses.

War Exports.

Louisville Courier-Journal, August 21, 1935.

The Import-Export Bank in refusing credits to Fascist Italy in order to buy American cotton for the manufacturer of high explosives is not motivated entirely by a desire to maintain the neutrality of the United States in the Italian-Ethiopian dispute. The action is based chiefly on sound banking methods. It is actuated by the financial risk involved. For Italy to pile up in the United States a huge debt for war materials would mean only one thing, another uncollectable debt. The move, however, indicates a trend in government policy. By putting an embargo on cotton to this extent, the administration is frowning on the exports of war materials to both belligerents. Though it cannot act definitely and effectively in the matter until Congress has passed legislation empowering it to license or ban the shipments of war material, it is thoroughly within its province to take this step. As a banking proposition this refusal of credits to Italy emphasizes again the financial weakness of the Fascist State. London bankers have also called attention to it and exports of coal for Italian factories and ships are now being held up until payment is made in advance. The decision of Premier Mussolini to use the gold reserves of the nation for outside purchases has pointed to inevitable bankruptcy of the country. Wall Street bankers, it is reported, have also been approached on the question of extending credits. This, however, they cannot do on account of the Johnson act forbidding loans to defaulting nations. Therefore it is reasonably certain that the United States will not finance Mussolini's Ethiopian war and then be left with the bag to hold.

Home Rule for Scotland?

Presbyterian Banner.

Our Presbyterian friends in the north of Ireland resisted home rule for their island because they feared it would be "Rome Rule." It seems likely that Presbyterians in Scotland will have to begin to fight for home rule to save themselves from the rule of the Roman hierarchy. Scotland is in a critical condition, materially and spiritually. The industrial depression set in shortly after the war and it was intensified later by the world-wide depression. The spiritual crisis has its roots in the social structure. Long ago capitalists invited cheap labor to come in from the south of Ireland, thus dispossessing Scottish workmen who could not compete against the low wages the Irish were willing to receive. These immigrants were Roman Catholics and their number now is around the million mark. Under the Education Act of Great Britain in 1918 a voluntary school may be established anywhere and the school authority can be compelled by law to provide suitable buildings and equipment at public expense. The Catholics have taken advantage of this. At a time when many schools are understaffed and poorly equipped, some even being closed in the name of economy, handsome new buildings have been erected at the behest of the Roman Catholic Church, buildings in which "Catholic" teaching is given at the expense of the taxpayers, most of whom are Protestants. This is a cause of misgiving and friction.

"The United Methodist Church."

The Christian Sun, August 22, 1935.

Meeting last week in Evanston, Illinois, the joint commission from the Northern and Southern branches of the Methodist Episcopal Church and from the Methodist Protestant Church, voted to temporarily, at least, adopt the above name for the united bodies. The decision was reached after the committee of fifteen had debated the question for approximately three hours. It was understood that there would be opportunity given for objection to the present designation when the full constitution was presented for adoption to the three Church groups.

Lutheran World Convention to Meet.

According to announcement by Rev. Dr. John A. Moorehead, president, the Third Lutheran World Convention will be held in Paris, October 13-20. "Lutheranism and the Present World Crisis," will be the theme of the convention and vital matters including political crises, youth movements, social welfare problems and home and foreign missions will be dealt with.

The Problem of the Movies, and Some Other Matters

Our contemporary, the New York Churchman, has been carrying on a valiant fight against the movies, or rather, their producers, for several years. But unfortunately the publishers have been sued for libel and as a result of the trial they will have to pay the large sum of $10,000, unless, on appeal, the judgment of the lower court is overruled, which we sincerely hope will be the case. It would seem that the frontal attack upon such a deeply entrenched industry is not apt to be as effective as one might wish it to be. For one thing, our Church papers, unfortunately, reach only a limited number of readers, who, as a rule, are apt to be already converted to the views expressed. Public opinion can be thoroughly aroused only when the public generally is reached and persuaded.

The Indirect Attack.

We believe that the indirect or flank attack, as we may call it, would be more effective in this particular instance. The Roman Catholic League of Decency has made a good beginning along these lines. What is needed more than anything else is to bring home to professing Christians generally that they are responsible for the low estate into which the movies have descended and that it is in their power to bring such pressure to bear upon the producers as to make them realize that good movies pay better than bad ones. If the pulpits of all the Churches in the United States would condemn, not the movies, but the Christian people who tolerate them and encourage their production, a much more effective censorship could be carried out than is now being attempted by special committees for that purpose.

Make the Movies Worthwhile.

The movies have come to stay, and can be made the means, not only of wholesome entertainment, but of giving a great deal of valuable information, and thus help to educate the masses of the people. The Christian people of the nation should be redeeming the present situation by resolutely and consistently refusing to countenance any films which are of an unwholesome, immoral, or even doubtful kind. But at the same time they should give their presence and support to those which are worthy of their countenance, and are of a genuinely wholesome character. If this policy were pursued, the bad films would soon disappear and the better class of pictures would take their place and the problem of the movies would be solved. Church papers have but a limited circulation, but if all the pulpits of the nation would boldly proclaim the truth that a great measure of responsibility rests directly upon their people and that they have the power to transform the whole movie situation in a very short time, preachers would be rendering the greatest service to the nation which has been given in this generation.

Personal Sin Is the Greatest Evil.

It is too often the case that reformers direct their attacks too exclusively against secondary causes instead of primary ones. This was the case in the temperance campaign, which brought about prohibition. In their zeal against the undoubtedly great evils of intemperance, the reformers seemed to put the whole blame upon alcohol as if its influnce were something too strong and powerful to be resisted, and that the only way to make men temperate was to do away with it altogether. An American writing from Paris during the political campaign in 1928, wrote the astonishing statement that the Latin races could be trusted with alcohol "whereas Americans couldn't," or words to that effect. This, of course, is not true, but the tendency has been in America to neglect to train the people, and especially the children, in the duty of self-control. While alcohol is a powerful evil, yet there is no reason why anyone should become its slave. Intemperance is a sin for which the person yielding to it is chiefly responsible.

Temptation Cannot Be Exiled, But Can Be Resisted.

The very fact that we are surrounded by temptations of one sort and another lays a strong responsibility upon Christian teachers to build up the characters of their people in order that they may be strong enough to resist such temptations from whatever source they may come. The defeatist attitude that men cannot resist the temptation to drink is fatal to moral progress. Doing away with temptation is impossible, as was seen in the attempt to drive alcohol from America. While one form of its abuse was removed another immediately sprang up to take its place. The sin is in the man, not in inanimate things.

> Erect himself, how poor a thing is man."

To teach him to do this is pretty much the whole duty of Christian teachers. Strong men and strong women, by the help of God's grace, made capable of meeting life, its duties and responsibilities, with a courageous heart, and of overcoming temptations, as they arise, are the only 100 per cent Americans, of whom we know, and it is the duty of the Churches to create such Americans.

Personal Reform Needed to Bring About General Reforms.

If the Churches can only do this they will gather strength all the time and win those who now stay outside, because they think that they are just as good, if not better, than Church members. Toleration is a good thing in many respects, but the easy-going toleration of the many evils which have sprung up in the national life shows a weakness of character, a lack of moral fiber, which is the greatest evil of all, and should be remedied as soon as possible. "It is not in our stars but in ourselves that we are underlings." It is here that the reformers can strike most effectively and help to create a strong and righteous nation.

Man's Godlike Qualities Must Be Revived.

It is the divine in man which needs bringing to the surface, so that its power and glory may be manifested and seen of all men. The mere training of the mind, without the discipline of character, is a dangerous experiment, since it may well result in blurred consciences, in an absence of moral scruple and integrity of purpose, the loss of which would menace the national life instead of giving it strength and permanence. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." Prov. 14:34.

Diocesan Rural Conference

By JAMES S. BUTLER,

Rector of Christ Church, Holly, Mississippi.

DIOCESAN CONFERENCES can be thought of from several points of view. In this article we want to think of them in their capacity as aids in training Christian leadership. As agents to this end, in all likelihood diocesan conferences will be confusing to many of us. To eliminate as much misunderstanding as possible we will begin by clarifying terms. To some of us the only diocesan conference with which we are familiar is the annual convention, council, or convocation, which is held as the business organ of the Church within the diocese or missionary district. There are, at least in some cases, a few elements about these meetings which are helpful toward training religious leaders. Yet they are not the type of conference we have in mind as the agent in the cause of leadership training. The conference of our thoughts here is that, such as is held primarily to develop leadership, having relegated business to other times. These conferences may be held with varying set-ups to advantage; local situations will determine what is best. They may include representatives from the entire diocese, both clergy and lay; or be limited to the clergy or to the laity; or again they may be limited to a section of the diocese. But these conferences in every case have a definite purpose and strive to reach a definite group of leaders whether that be clergy or lay, rural or urban, mountain or Indian, or whether it includes all the work within the diocese; it attempts to build and to develop leadership in some way in that integral group therein represented. Our interest will be primarily with the development of leadership in our Rural Work, but not limited to that. We shall begin by studying the problems and the handicaps there are to be overcome and then by applying to these handicaps the contribution diocesan conferences have to make.

In discussing the handicaps and difficulties under which the Rural Work of the Church is done, we shall separate for emphasis and clarification the problems of the clergy and laity—for there are different angles to be viewed for each group.

LET US BEGIN our thinking with the clergy's difficulties. Perhaps the first handicap because of its effect on sapping the ambition and vision of the rural clergy is loneliness. Each rural clergyman is set in a community, or in several communities, with the burden of the Church's work on his shoulders. He has no one with whom he can talk over his problems. He is left, so to speak, to work out his own salvation. He feels that he is up against odds which he must fight alone. Few are the men who are able to lose themselves, when such conditions are present, in the reading of those things which interest them—few can in any way, while left in their local places, forget the separation which surrounds them. This loneliness is psychological. It weighs on the thoughts and mind of the clergy.

Coupled with loneliness is isolation, which is a result not of the working of the mind of individuals, nor of the feeling of the tremendous load which must be borne alone, of physical conditions—isolation or separation from libraries, from educational features present in the larger places. Isolation also comes as a result of being cut off to some extent at least from the outside world because of poor roads and because of the distances from any group of people who might be of help in making the clergyman feel he belongs.

This line of thought leads us to the loss of professional contact which tends to develop rather than to lessen the loneliness and isolation so common among our rural clergy. Rarely is there another Episcopal clergyman near enough at hand so that conferring or association at frequent intervals is possible. Rarer still is there a clergyman of one of the denominations who will furnish this needed personal professional contact.

It is true that in most communities the clergyman is allowed personal associations and contacts with lay folk. Yet, there are some communities where even this is denied. In the places where it is possible the leaders are few; those with whom the priest could find complete congeniality are rare and often his personal friendships are of short duration or of limited extent—or value. Of course the priest has contacts with people wherever he works or he fails to do his task. This contact, however, is in a priest-to-people relationship and not personal. It is the personal relationship alone which can help to alleviate the feeling of loneliness and isolation and fill the personal intellectual and social vacuums in the life of the clergy; and it is this association which is rare.

But just one minute! There is one outlet—one source of intellectual and social relief—one place to which the clergyman can go for help—if his wife is what she should be. But her help, no matter how valuable it may be, is not enough. She, as well as her husband, needs outside personal relationships. They can help each other best when they have other associations from which to draw.

So much for the pressure of the situations in which the rural clergy find themselves. But these situations, this pressure, leads on to other ill effects in the attitudes and thinking of the clergyman himself. He is apt, because he is so cut off, because he is left so much by conditions to fight alone, to develop incarcerated parochialism which becomes hide-bound. He feels he is left alone; he will fight alone and will take care of his own—his own congregation—first. He then forgets there is anything beyond and he crawls into his shell of parochialism and stays there never to come out unless forced to do so.

In this new attitude he has lost (if he was fortunate enough to have possessed it in the beginning) the visions with which he began his work. He has forgotten that the entire church is a corporate organization. He remembers only his own small part of the Church's work and thinks it all important in relation to all the other work that is being done. He withdraws from the Church's corporate life, so to speak, removing all the contribution that he and his congregations could give to the life of the Church. Or on the other hand he takes the attitude that he is a special case. No man ever had to combat such difficulties as he has Certainly not of the same kind. Feeling this way he either sits back and lets life and the Church's work rock along as if it were too difficult to tackle, or he surrounds himself with a feeling of superiority in conquering difficulties ahead. Both attitudes are bad and need some corrective.

In rural places one of the greatest dangers to the Church's work is an aloofness toward the denominations. Refusal to cooperate with them as a principle will do more to wreck the Episcopal Church, particularly in the small places than anything else. There are times when cooperation is impossible, but as a rule cooperation is advantageous to the Church.

Coupled with this aloofness is the attitude of too many clergy that their ministry extends merely to their congregation. The pastoral work of our priests must extend beyond parish and mission boundaries to the entire community.

SO MUCH FOR THE CLERGY. We often realize the handicaps under which they labor, but at the same time think little of those which confront the layman in the small country church. From him we get our clergy and hence he is very important. His handicaps and difficulties are as great as those of the clergy.

He is not isolated in the sense that the clergyman is. He has a privilege of social contacts not open ofttimes to the clergy. At the same time, however, there is a sense of loneliness and isolation which, as a Churchman, he feels as truly as does the clergyman. He feels he is one of a small group. His Church contacts are limited. He must labor in a small group or leave that which means so much to him.

It is to him that so much of the parochialism is due. He has never, in many cases, had a vision of his Church extending beyond his parish, or of its definite corporateness, or of his responsibility beyond his local community or truly beyond his own congregation. To him who has seen so little of the Church's work, the small problems of his local congregation seem insurmountable. He assumes the difficulties are greater in his parish than anywhere else.

Too long has there been developed a superior feeling of aloofness among our lay folk in relation to the denominations. This is a handicap, which is far-reaching, to the use and value of our lay folk in their life as Churchmen.

We have painted a drab picture, but by it we do not intend to be pessimistic. We do not intend to infer that all of these handicaps confront every priest or every layman. But these are difficulties which need in some way a kind of tonic to decrease their ill effects. They need something that will help to eliminate them and to build up in their stead religious leaders with a broad vision of the mission of the Church.

Diocesan conferences can help in this task to a large extent. By such gatherings, bringing together clergy and laity, much of the isolation and loneliness can be done away with. The clergy make contacts in this way with those who are doing the same kind of work in different places; a fellowship is created which binds the clergy of the diocese together in such a way that new life is created and the psychological sense of loneliness is alleviated with a feeling that there are others working with them in the whole work of the Church.

The layman begins to realize that his little congregation is not all of the Church, but that there are others who belong to the same Church and are working for the same end. A feeling of fellowship and the corporateness of the Church for the first time dawns on the laity who receive a Church contact and attitude never before approached in the past. This is done by associating with other laymen from his diocese. Parochialism begins to fade and a vision of the one unified Church appears on the horizon—a vision so badly needed by the clergy and laity all over the Church.

By associations with others and discussions of their problems, both laity and clergy begin to realize that the difficulties that they have had are shared by others elsewhere. Their problems are not so peculiar after all. Their problems are not so impossible of being conquered as hitherto they supposed. This new understanding gives new life, new courage, new enthusiasm to the work ahead of each individual and each group—a result of meeting together in diocesan conference.

But there are other assets of diocesan conferences. The conference may be set up in such a way that the outstanding achievements within the field may be coupled with the most advanced methods coming from the leaders of the work. Such conferences give new thoughts, new ideas, refreshed outlook and in general assist in the work in hand.

WE MUST NOT THINK that a diocesan conference works these results by magic. That will not do. Unless it is set up with a definite purpose behind it and with a definite aim ahead, nothing will be achieved. There must be someone who has seen the need in that diocese or section of the diocese—such as unified corporate fellowship—and around such need, set up the conference toward correcting the trouble now existing.

So often it is true that one section of our diocese does not understand another, because it has never been thrown in close contact with it. Or clergy doing one phase of the work—e. g. urban, or mountain—give an exalted place to that work minimizing all other. Frequently these can learn to understand one another if they gather together in conference and study the work of the others. Then the proper relationship will grow between the various parts of the work in the diocese. Each section will receive its proportionate share of the whole.

These conferences may be set, featuring some outstanding visiting lecturer—One who is an authority in his field and is an active Churchman, and who is in sympathy with the work of the Church, and has an understanding of the particular problems facing the conference. Or they may be worked out, using only those men available within the diocese. In any case, there should be a definite unity of plan throughout the entire conference and an adhesiveness which binds it together.

Circumstances will determine whether this conference should cover the entire diocese, only one section, or whether laity alone, clergy alone, or both clergy and laity should be present. In the plan the purpose should be to bind together in fellowship the section met together and to give instruction of one kind or another to help meet a problem facing the group or to build leadership needed in that group.

WE MUST NOT FEEL that we are attempting something new and different here. This method of conference gatherings for fellowship and instruction has been used and is being used in many of the service groups in our nation. Perhaps the best organized and those who can be expected to work in unison better and more efficiently than any other with which I have come into contact is that of the extension workers. They meet together in conference gatherings for one section to play together, developing a fellowship which is primal to their corporate work; to learn together from leaders of their field and from each other that they all might be benefited by projects others are carrying on.

I give the following examples of diocesan conferences because in some way I have been directly or indirectly connected with them. There likely are others elsewhere conducted with as excellent results as these. Adhesiveness and unity are two characteristics necessary to make a conference successful. So many conferences do not stick together. They seem to be made up of several integral parts which seemingly have little or no connection with each other.

This was not true of the latest spring meeting of the Convocation of West Tennessee. It was my privilege to be present. Many different subjects were discussed, but the program was so planned and led (and I think this was the secret of it all) that one could not help but feel that all that happened that day belonged together—a credit to the Dean of the Convocation. The fellowship created by that convocation resulting from this feeling of unity was a powerful force.

Unity of purpose among the clergy of a diocese is a very potent factor in the work of that diocese. If some conference of the clergy can be called with some definite object in view by the Bishop, such unity can frequently be developed. Such was done in Mississippi at the time of the Church Wide Endeavor. This movement was big enough to cement the clergy through its leaders—its Bishops—together to feel that they were working in unity more than before.

Perhaps the best run organization in the Church in Mississippi is the Council of Church Women—Mississippi's branch of the Women' Auxiliary. At their annual gathering the programs are planned so systematically that business and spiritual matters are so intermingled that a definite unity is present, and neither business nor spiritual fellowship is sacrificed for the other. This was not accomplished until the Bishop withdrew so far as leadership is concerned and turned the organization over to the women themselves. They have accomplished a great deal.

Again in Mississippi the Rural Convocations did a big work. At first these convocations were held solely for rural clergy and laity, but this arrangement was not satisfactory. The city Church people did not understand the rural problem. Hence all the Church people of the diocese were included, given parts on the program, until now the Rural Work of the Church in Mississippi is much better understood than otherwise could have been. When these convocations are resumed they will be limited to Rural clergy and laity. They accomplished the task of making those in different phases of the work in the diocese understand each other.

Let us use such conferences as a post-graduate course —a clinic for study for our professional religious leaders—the clergy—and as a field of training for our lay leaders. By so doing we shall have made use of one of the most valuable agents for the training of religious leadership.

Belief and Life

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,

Bishop of Washington.

ADDRESSING a man, a soldier, who had come to Him in behalf of a favored servant who was seriously ill, imploring His healing ministry, Jesus responded, in answer to the man's expressed partial faith, "As thou hast believed so be it done unto thee." On another occasion where like aid was sought by a father in behalf of his afflicted son, the Master observed: "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth." In every case where His ministry was sought, He demanded an expression of confidence in His healing power and belief in the efficacy of His ministry.

On one occasion where He was ministering in a community, it was written concerning Him: "He could there do no mighty work because of their unbelief." It is evident that His power could not be exercised where doubt and unbelief prevailed. On occasions, He recognized the limitations of faith in Him and His power, as disclosed by the suppliant. This was notably true in the instance of the father who sought the healing of his demented son, where, in response to Christ's query, "Canst thou believe?" the father cried out: "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief."

The gentleness of the Master in dealing with those whose faith in Him was partial and incomplete, was repeatedly manifested, and in no case was it more so than in that of one of His own immediate followers, Thomas, to whom He gave the evidence of His resurrected life, saying, "Be not faithless, but believing." Throughout His entire ministry, Jesus insisted upon the necessity of belief in Him and His divine power. He could not be the Saviour of men without their ready recognition of and obedience to His will.

The recognition of this fundamental need must be stressed today. There is a popular fallacy abroad that it matters little what a man believes so lonlg as his habit and practice are consistent. As a matter of fact, the denial of faith in Christ is a negative creed. Where we believe in our potentialities and powers we give expression to a creed. As a matter of fact, the accepted laws and usages of our domestic, social and economic life are nothing more or less than creeds or codes that govern us in our relationships. It is frequently assumed that a so-called breadth of mind is expressed where one claims freedom from the innovations of any credal system. Such assumed breadth of mind is frequently nothing less than an expression of immature and superficial judgment, the betrayal of an incapacity to rightly appraise the import and significance of Christ's life and ministry. In periods where great and far-reaching changes are in process, all creeds of every sort and kind are under suspicion. We are largely creatures governed by the capricious whims and fancies of the age in which we live. The temperature of our faith rises or falls, affected largely by the environing conditions of our life, our prosperity or our adversity. It certainly becomes increasingly clear that we must live by some well-defined standards or norms that govern us in our individual conduct and in all our contacts with our fellows. Robert Louis Stevenson was right when he said that no man may say that he has made any success in life until he can write at the head of the page of his life's journal, "Enter God." It was his fixed conviction that efficient living begins with the affirmation which is the first word of the Bible—"In the beginning, God." Donald Hankey in his fascinating war books, in which he described the prevailing characteristics of the British Tommy, declared that, in all his contacts with the rudest of these men he inevitably found that behind their rough exteriors resided definite, if articulate faith in God. Poor as it was, it was a creed. To use Hankey's phrase the Tommy was ready to bet his life there was a God.

The recovery of our impaired beliefs is indispensable to the recovery of our happiness, our prosperity and our peace. We need to be reminded of the old aphorism: "God sleeps in the stone, dreams in the animal and wakes in the man."

Yellow Primsoses

By MARY F. GOODWIN,

Historiographer of the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

"A primrose by the river's brim
A yellow primrose was to him
And nothing more,"

wrote Wordsworth who, above other poets, loved nature and translated many of her greatest beauties to those who have eyes and see not.

PEOPLE there are who go through life blind to some of the most beautiful works of the Creator. To appreciate many of the lovely things with which we are surrounded, we have to cultivate tastes and senses which may otherwise lie dormant all through life.

A person brought up in the mountains, who as a child, had his attention called to the beauty of the surrounding hills and the glory of the sunsets, never in after life fails to see and appreciate these things; and to him the low country, which undoubtedly has a beauty of its own, always looks unfinished. Where a mountain-born man has enjoyed a wide vista, he has to learn, in the low country, to see beauty in small bits. One can learn to appreciate the light of the setting sun as its sifts through the trees, or to enjoy the beauty of a solitary tree set in a level field as one would appreciate a valley becoming indistinct in the gathering mists of twilight while nearby peaks may still glow with the parting touch of the sun.

What is true of the appreciation of nature is also true of the works of man. One person may see beauty in paintings which appear commonplace to a mind less trained in artistic values. On the other hand, if one looks only for artistic values, he may lose a great beauty which the artist felt but expressed poorly. There is in the Tate Art Gallery in London a painting by G. F. Watts, which is not considered "good" by critics. The understanding spirit which inspired it appeals to the heart rather than to the eye. The subject is the Flight into Egypt. The artist shows Joseph leading the little donkey on which is seated the Mother with her Babe. The hour is dusk; in the fading light one may read the weariness on the faces of the parents and feel the slowness with which the little company is moving. The face of the Babe is filled with radiance which is in strong contrast to the surounding twilight. He is smiling, and all unknown to His elders. He is playing with some cherubs which are accompanying Him. These little figures are floating from the direction from which the travellers have come, those nearest the Babe are wide-awake, carrying garlands of flowers in their hands, those farther off have their eyes closed as if they were still unaware of their new surroundings. The title of the paintings is "The Slaughter of the Innocents." It is the reverse of the scene as it is generally depicted. Looking on this picture, one's heart is moved by the conception of the immedate reward received by these "first fruits unto God and to the Lamb." To the art critic this may be but a yellow primrose, but to the discerning heart it is the very truth of God.

As with paintings, so with poetry. Poems which may be mere rhymes to one person contain almost overwhelming loveliness for another. A yellow primrose may be all very well on the river's bank where it belongs, but it may also be the opening of the gates of heaven to him who can see farther than the banks.

In another manner, it is also true that the hobbies which mean so much to some men, are but primroses to the public at large. A connoisseur in any field bemoans the lack of interest shown by the average layman in his own particular brand of primroses. The lover of old glass is astonished at the boredom his friend may portray when confronted with a rare specimen of the glass-blower's art. So old furniture may seem important to one person, and trash to another—even worse than yellow primroses.

THERE is a hobby which is not always beautiful in itself, but more than most things, it is fraught with the human element which called it into being. This is the study of old manuscripts. One can so easily see in his mind's eye the writer as he penned his lines with his quill pen, making abbreviation which saved the upward stroke of the pen, which seem to have been particularly difficult. The careful chirography of the amanuensis who copied most of the official papers, the careless copying in the letter books of the masters themselves, the personal letters, and other hastily written notes all show something of the peronality behind the pen. In the letter-book of the peppery John Custis, one sees more of this quick temper in the sputtering of his quill when his ire was aroused than in the written words—though these were not always restrained.

In handling and reading many old documents, both public and private, dating from the time of Henry VIII to the present day, there are two which I remember as arousing my interest and excitement as soon as I saw them. The first is a little letter written in a painfully neat childish hand beginning "Sweet Papa", and telling of the progress of the writer in his Latin and other studies. It is signed "Your Dutiful son Charles". The writer was the unfortunate Charles I of England who, a few years later lost his life. How futile his childish efforts seemed! The second manuscript is in the Library of Congress. It is simply an invoice or other business letter from a London merchant to his correspondent in the distant colony of Virginia. The date is 1666. But on the outside of the paper, hurriedly penned are the words, "Haste, post haste, on the King's service haste!" The urgency in this case was that the letter carried the first news of the burning of London, which, even as the words were written, was fiercely sweeping the greater part of the old city, including the Cathedral of St. Paul. One reads in his English history of the "Great fire" which finally put an end to the black plague which had ravished London for a year, but how close this document brings the whole affair! The people in Jamestown were then mostly from the immediate neighborhood of London, their family fortunes were perhaps consumed in this conflagration. We can see them gathered around the tavern bar listening with breathless interest as the news was communicated to them, discussing it afterwards with resignation born of the certainty that it might be weeks or even months before further news of the catastrophy could reach them.

The cultivation of the faculty of seeing something of the mind of the Creator, whether God or man, in his works, unlocks a door which brings infinite pleasure to the beholder. It is an art in itself to apprehend the thought behind the material manifestation, and how it enriches life.

Yellow Primroses? Yes, but how much more may be seen in them by those who have learned to use their eyes and their imaginations.

The Speech No Man Makes

By RANDOLPH ROSEWELL PAGE

Columbia, South Carolina.

MR. CHAIRMAN, Members of The Steering Committee, Ladies and Gentlemen:

At the convergeuce of spring and summer you are here met to dedicate to the hallowed memory of The World War dead, this massive work of stone.

The honor tendered me as your spokesman on this singular occasion forms a swelling surge through my frame, filling me with gratitude and a sense of conflict akin to awe, lest upon this heart-touched hour, I prove a disappointment to you. The analysis of my feelings is indeed difficult to make, almost causing in my being a flush of shame, wondering, if some of these tugging emotions be of cowardice, for your selection of myself is indeed a strange incident, as I belong not to your code of life, and the time is here forced upon me to tell the truth in memory and honor of the sacred dead, though such stating may mean a new death to some ties of life here around knitted.

On the deeply cut words within this edifice of stone I cannot lift my eyes with approval, for I see written in imperishable form, that which I deem untrue. In the sparks of the stone, I feel a cold glint of irony as I read:—That those men willingly died that we might live; that with high resolve they went to the slaughter that war should be no more; that with proud volition they bled for the defense of liberty and democratic government; that with effulgent spirit they wished to wash with their blood the path of The Prince of Peace.

Now, alas! My friends, the time has come for those who teach—whether from the pulpit, platform, stage or book—to tell the truth even though that teaching forms a sword piercing their own souls.

In luxurious offices of cushioned carpets and softly resting chairs, the destinies of these boys were formed. The round-table of the princes of the financial marts of the world concluded their vainly sacrificial end. In the concourse of their speech they said—"We must not lose our wealth; we must preserve the gains of lucre we have made; the investments of the future must be fortified. The same frenzied appetite courses through our veins, making us brothers, and beyond our own selected, privileged few, we know not God, nation nor man." Thus in the blackened atmosphere of consuming greed was their course decreed.

Willing, they died! How can one breathe that parching insincerity? By military blast and armed squads they were horded together in the confinements of enlistment. Or else, thither sent by the yet more powerful force of fomented public opinion. This steeping of the public thought being formed by master psychologists playing on the instruments of a servile press, the age-old bigotries of the college chair and the wretched blindness of the pulpit.

Here allow me the privilege of parenthesis to say that, were the pulpits of the Christian world as unified, synchronized, fervent and untiring in preaching peace and setting forth the wickedness of war and the gross incongruity of Christians participating therein, as they were in serving as recruiting stations for the armies, then all the world's armies would be demobilized in six months. This could also be greatly facilitated by the women of the world, who are ultimately the worst sufferers, would they refuse to countenance in any way, things militaristic. Refuse to be fascinated by uniforms and sounding brass; refuse to lend their applause to military display, turning their backs upon all things savoring of war.

Oh, blind leaders of the blind, how foolish to say that war can end war! Those who trust in the sword must live by it. The idea of ending hatred and bloodshed by creating more hatred and more bloodshed!

Such teachings as these that were then given and followed are contrary to all elemental human impulses and to the truthful interpretation of all history.

AGAIN digressing, let me say that, in my poor and meagre judgment, I believe, that in The Day of Judgment, a wickedness, for which The Church will have to answer, on a past with the world's most colossal and wretched, is that it served as a recruiting station in The World War.

Oh, the falsifying of patriotism! To tell these poor boys that they were fighting for democracy, while some of the allied nations had never been democracies, were not then and have not since been.

Fighting for liberty! No, not liberty, but liberation! The liberation of unbounded greed, debauchery and bestiality. Here is where their liberty was taken from them. The freedom of thought, of speech, of action; the liberty of conscience and even worship were here ensnared. For some disbelieving in their participation were forced to choose between God and Caesar and, fearing, chose Caesar. One of mankind's greatest sketches of inconsistency ever etched in history, this fact of making these boys fight for supposed liberty, regardless of their wish, opinion or conscience. Only the most magnified interpretation of The Constitution could justify sending these boys to fight in a cause they understood not, in a foreign land and against a foe for whom they had no self-defending score, regardless of their wishes, opinions or beliefs. Oh, that some master satirist could here be employed to teach the ugly contortion of The Constitution we have of late years had to endure:—Perfectly all right to go into a home of love, tear the son from its embrace, send him to die in a foreign land, regardless of how this disrupted his communion with God. But, or, no, you must never go into the tills of big corporations and touch the ill-gotten gains to relieve the needs of suffering man, made suffering by this inordinate lucre—that would be unconstitutional!

That these men fought this war for Jesus Christ and His causes was a teaching and propaganda that gave to the history of Western Civilization its most colossal and wretched hypocrisy. Fighting for Jesus Christ! Oh, how can it be said by those who love the truth and God! Go with me to the trenches and see the leering, sneering expression on the faces of the Anti-Christian creedman as one who drinks from The Holy Grail assists him in murdering another one who drinks from that Chalice. Christian helping heathen kill Christian—this in the name of Christ—The Saviour of all! No wonder we are confronted with the breaking down of missionary enterprise. "Behold how these Christians love one another," might have won pagan Rome, but it did not have the chance on The Western Front.

Of those of you who would countenance war, I beg that you view again some sketches from its panorama. As for myself, while marching to this pile of stone made beautiful by the hand of art, I felt again the softening of the battle ground and with its recurrent vision my senses burn and whirl. My ear drums roar and seem to burst and in a plantasmagoric spell my eyes see and know a thousand things indescribable by man. Onward there I move not knowing how. The fire of shell grows more scorching; the roar of explosion more shattering; the nipping of sharp bullets more frequent; the mire deepens and the tugging tightens. Ah, such mire! That made of rain, mud and blood compounded by shell. Land trodden deep in the blood of thousands of brothers of Him who died for man. And then the chilly, drizzly night with its searching lights piercing the suffocatingly darkened air. Not the light of the merciful storm of thunder and lightning that glorifies our Creator but the masterful Satanic accomplishments of the pyrotechnic science destroying man.

Now, there seems to be no order in the disunited movement of the figures moving about me. Swooningly I stagger on, my chief concern being not to tread down the dismembered parts of my brothers, made intermittently visible by the glare of the flare and the flash of shell. And in the broken, wetting darkness and feverish delirium, those yet gasping out their parting breaths seem to see the evil of it all, as a witch, flitting from this form to yonder hand and on to that protruding arm and then to that dismembered skull. And this was preached in The Name of Jesus and democracy! Again we are formed and the scene is changed. The column moves in the sleety night through a village once lovely and whose people were once happy. The village now is blasted with shell. Life seems to have departed from its streets and joy and happiness from the homes. Only enough lights are found here and there to enable the passing trooper to grasp the awful reality of the moment, as gazing through the broken windows of a house, before the cheerless hearth, the drooping, moaning figure of a widow is seen and coming out on the wild wind, the wail from the fatherless crib is heard.

Ten millions dead. Ten millions down. Ten millions disrupted for life. Millions upon millions of broken hearts, lives and dissevered homes. This in The Name of The Prince of Peace!

But it does not matter now. Greed is abated for a pace and the unscrupulous rich have won. We need no further war now until other gain is seen or that already possessed is endangered.

My fellow citizens, those of you who love your brother men, now is the time for you to throw the force of your lives behind the cause of peace. And I recommend that you insist that no man be allowed to vote for war who himself is not going to the battlefield.

You wish for a memorial to The World War? You have the inescapable ever present one. Go among the listless on your streets; the slums in your city; the cemetery out yonder. This all is mouldered into a memorial engraven in the heart of man.

In conclusion, I call on all those who lead in Christ's Name, to teach that for Christians to engage in war is to besmirch the Baptismal Cross upon their brow—crucifying afresh their Lord.

PROOF.

If radio's slim fingers
  Can pluck a melody
From night, and toss it over
  A continent or sea;

If the petalled white notes
  Of a violin
Are blown across a mountain
  Or a city's din;

If songs, like crimson roses
  Are culled from the thin blue air,
Why should mortals wonder
  If God hears prayer?

"THE RADIANT CHRIST."

The Frontispiece.

The painting is six by nine feet in size; the coloring is gorgeous. Although the age-old conception, as depicted by the early masters, has, in a way, been preserved, there has been a change of expression, one that depicts His true character. We know He was acquainted with grief, but we also know that there were times, particularly when in the presence of bright, happy children, when He was filled with joy and laughter, as portrayed in this painting, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." "And He took them up in His arms, put His hand upon them, and blessed them." In this picture the mirth of the blessed children is reflected in Him, and we are at once reminded that He was a Being of Radiance, Hope, Effulgence, Courage, Exaltation, Encouragement and Inspiration.

Why such a portrayal has never before been done in the history of art, is indeed mystifying, but it is more needed now than at any previous period in the Christian era. The great artist who has marvelously wielded his brush, wisely saw fit to so represent Him, and we know that it is a true and faithful conception. Christ suffered the humiliation of the Cross for our sins, as well as to bring joy and not sorrow into the world; and joy will be ours if we will only follow in His footsteps. As loyal and consistent followers of the Son of God, let us keep this glorious image ever before us. A picture that should go down through the coming ages as one of the great master-pieces of the present generation.

The several Washington clergymen who have viewed the picture speak of it as a "noble work," and an "inspiration".

"The primary object in giving this picture to our people is to arouse them from their religious indifference, apathy, lukewarmness and supineness," said Mr. W. J. Moore, who is managing the exhibit during its stay in Washington.

"It shall be my purpose to see that a reprint is placed in every Sunday School in the United States, if it is humanly possible."

Anyone desiring information regarding the painting may address Mr. W. J. Moore, The Northumberland Apartments, 2039 New Hampshire Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C.

endeavors for exercising the spiritual and missionary motives. It is in a sense an executive "committee on the state of The Church". It is especially to study the world in which we live today and recommend betters methods for reaching this world based upon the command of Christ to go into all the world. So it naturally concerns itself with study and literature and with methods both old and new that will deepen discipleship. It hopes to find ways and means to overcome the discouragements that have resulted in the world-wide depression which has been not only economic but spiritual.

To set up a straw man of jealousy is probably the easiest way to fill up space and write about something that one knows nothing about by reason of lack of interest or information. But no such straw man actually lives in reality. The National Council has made mistakes in the past and may make more. So might The Forward Movement, but both are needed to carry on the work of Our Lord, as we see the needs today.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

MEETING OF THE SYNOD.

Program of the Woman's Auxiliary and Cooperating Women's Organizations in the Province of Washington, September 10-12.

In St. Andrew's School, Middletown, Delaware, at 5 P. M., Tuesday, September 10, the Synod will open with a devotional service; this will be followed by a general assembly of the women. Mrs. F. W. Baker, president of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of Delaware, will welcome the delegates. Greetings will come from the Daughters of the King, Girls' Friendly Society, Church Periodical Club, Church Mission of Help and Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses.

Thursday morning a report will be heard from Miss Sallie Deane, representative from Province III to the National Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Diocesan presidents will make two minute reports of work begun since the Triennial meeting. All Provincial officers will report.

Speakers on Missions will be Dr. John W. Wood, National Executive Secretary, on Latin America, and Deaconess Heath Dudley, Grub Hill Mission, Chula, Va., on Opportunities in the Rural Field.

A feature of the afternoon session will be: A symposium—Missions in the Home, by the Junior Woman's Auxiliary, arranged by Mrs. Dennis of Virginia, Mrs. Mulchter of Washington, and Mrs. Sampson of Philadelphia.

The Rev. D. A. McGregor, Ph. D., and one of the National Secretaries of the Woman's Auxiliary, will speak on Mission Study and The United Thank Offering, respectively.

Mrs. W. E. Herndon of Pittsburgh will lead a conference on Educational Value of All Phases of Auxiliary Work.

A conference of the Junior Woman's Auxiliary will be led by Miss Deane of Virginia.

The closing address will be made by Mrs. Beverly Ober of Maryland, member-at-large on the National Board from Province III.

The Daughters of the King have arranged an interesting program as follows:

"High Lights from the Triennial," given by Miss Boyd.

Discussion—'Responsibility of Junior Women to C. P. C.", leader, Miss Jean Phillips, Diocese of Easton.

Discussion, "Corporate Gift," leader, Miss Miller of Maryland.

The program for the Daughters of the King has been arranged by Miss Janet Soper, President of Washington, and Miss Frances Arnold, National Field Secretary Girls' Friendly Society, will represent the Girls' Friendly Society.

The Daughters of the King will arrange the Quiet Hour for all organizations on Thursday.

Below is listed Provincial Officers:

Mrs. Wm. Rote, Jr., Pennsylvania, President.

Mrs. Cuthbert Green of Middletown, Delaware, is Chairman of Hospitality for this meeting.

Mass meetings will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, when the Women's Organizations will join with the Synod.

Delegates are expected from the following dioceses, which comprise the Province of Washington: Bethlehem, Delaware, Easton, Erie, Harrisburg, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh, Southern Virginia, Virginia, Southwestern Virginia, Washington, and West Virginia.

Mrs. Frank A. Holladay, Secretary.

News from the Front

(The Southern Churchman believing that missions constitute the life of the Church hereby invites the missionaries of our Church to write letters to this paper describing the work they are doing in an interesting way, so that our people may know more of what is going on in the mission field.)

Mission Work in the Region of the Lower Yukon River.

Bishop Bentley has made his summer trip to the Lower Yukon this year, in a small outboard motor, the "Discovery", to save expense in running the fine new Pelican IV., especially fitted up for the comfort of the Bishop on his long summer journeys. From the mouth of the Koyukuk River, where it joins the Yukon, to our isolated mission of St. John's-in-the-Wilderness, at Allakaket, is a distance of five or six hundred miles of the winding river through an almost uninhabited region. The trip was made in early June.

Returning down river, the Bishop reached Anvik on June 29, about 220 miles below the mouth of the Koyukuk. The next day, Sunday, service was held, and one girl confirmed, the only candidate left after the closing of the school, the others having been dispersed to various camps. The next day Bishop Bentley, with Mr. Chapman, went forty miles down river to a white man's camp, where one baby was baptized, and a communion service held. Starting out again the next, they visited three or four camps on their way to Shageluk. There, in the house of an Indian communicant, two others of the former Anvik pupils who had been prepared, were confirmed, and the Holy Communion was celebrated.

Going on, they reached Hologochaket, about thirty miles distant, and spent the night at the house of a white man, Ira Wood. The next day there was one baptism, and the confirmation of another school girl. Mr. Chapman writes:

"Mr. Wood was running his sawmill and had quite a gang of men at work, but when we were ready for the service, he stopped the mill, so that his workmen could attend. From Hologochaket, we went out through the Slough to the Yukon and up to Phillips' Camp, and his two little girls were confirmed. We visited the camps from there on down, reaching Anvik at nine in the evening; a three days' journey."

So the Shepherd of this humble people finds his sheep in the Wilderness; two baptized, five confirmed. Mr. Chapman writes further:

"July 7. Anvik.—Over fifty people were in church this morning, one family from their camp four miles above, and three families from the mouth of the Bonasila River. To see the girls who were formerly of the mission school attending church service of their own free will, is fine."

M. S. Chapman.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

THE CHURCH'S LIBRARY.

Characters: Tom, Arline, Jack, members of Y. P. S. L. Harold, also a member, who has just returned from the Young People's Provincial Conference.

(Tom, Arline and Jack are all standing together when Harold comes in.)

Tom: Welcome home, Harold. What kind of a time did you have at Sewanee?

Harold: We had one of the best times you ever saw. It was great. I sure hope I can go back next year.

Arline: Were there many girls there?

Tom: Yes, there were more girls there than boys, but we had a wonderful time.

Jack: I wish I could go off to some of these Camps or Conferences or osmething, but my Father tells me I must earn my own money, and the movies and "dopes" take every penny I can scrape together. I wish I could get to a place where they have a decent library. I like to read good boks.

Harold: You know that is funny. At Sewanee they pointed out that we all have in our homes one of the finest libraries that was ever gotten together.

Jack: They must be talking about someone else's home, not mine.

Tom: Oh, yes; I know what you are talking about. A book agent came to our house the other day selling "The Best of the World's Literature," a library he said should be in every one's home.

Arline: But you said it was in every home. You know we have practically no books at my house; we have not gotten them all shipped down from the city, where we used to live, you know.

Harold: But this Library is there. I saw it the other day. It is the Bible.

Jack: But that is only one book. What do you mean by calling it a library?

Arline: I get you, Mother and Father were teling us the other day that the word Bible means library in some sort of language. I think it was Hebrew.

Tom: No, I remember now, Jim, my brother. who is in the Seminary studying for the ministry, told us it was Greek. But why call one book a library?

Arline: I know that. It is because there are a lot of books in it. Isn't that it, Harold?

Harold: Sure, and not only that, but there are all sorts and kinds of books in it, too. For instance, there are the books the Jews used to call the "Law". They, strange to say, have in them some of the most interesting stories ever written.

Tom: You can call Law interesting if you want to. But learning the Scout laws and the Ten Commandments is all I want to know about law.

Harold: That is because you do not realize that the Books of the Law are the first five books of the Bible and have the stories of Adam and Eve, and of Moses, and of Joseph and people like that in them.

Arline: Anybody whose head was not like granite would have remembered a thing like that from our Bible class last year.

Tom: I had rather be hard-headed than soft-headed, like Miss Adams said you were in school last year.

Jack: But what else is there? Have they got any stories in the Bible that would make good movie plots?

Harold: D. W. Griffiths thought so; you remember, he took the "King of Kings" from the Bible, and also the "Ten Commandments".

Jack: I like poetry. Is there any of that in the Bible?

Arline: Of course there is. Don't you remember the rector spoke the other day of the Psalms as being one of the most beautiful books of poems ever written?

Harold: Nor is that all. For all through the history books of the Bible we have poems quoted, like a song that Miriam, the sister of Moses, sang. The trouble is that the way our Bibles are printed we have poetry printed like prose, so that we do not notice that it is poetry. But our teacher at the Conference had a Bible there with the poetry printed as poetry in it.

Tom: Are there any jokes in the Bible?

Harold: Sure there are. But people so often consider it a crime to laugh at anything in the Bible that we do not notice them. For example, do you remember how Jesus asked if a man gathered figs from thistles, and again where it says, "He that thinketh himself to be something when he is nothing deceiveth himself", which is simply a long way of saying that a swelled head belongs to a sap.

Arline: I think I will have to read my Bible more and look for some of these jokes. Where can I find some of them?

Harold: The Book of Proverbs is full of wisecracks, if that is what you want. To get their humor though, we have to put them into modern slang, or at least that is what some of us found out.

Tom: If all that is in the Bible, why doesn't somebody tell a fellow. That is what the rector ought to tell us in his sermons.

Jack: If you would come to church more often, maybe you might find out that he does tell us a bunch of interesting things.

Tom: I don't see what right you have to talk. But go on, Harold, I suppose that you will tell us next that there are love stories and adventure stories in the Bible.

Harold: Of course there are. Go home and read the books of Esther, and Ruth and the Acts of the Apostles, if you don't believe it.

Arline: What are those great long books by Isaiah and Jeremiah and people like that about? I believe they are the Prophets.

Harold: They are about the Prophets. Gee, but some people are dumb. The Prophets were the great men of the Hebrews, the great preachers of their times.

Tom: You call them great men, but did they ever do anything but preach?

Harold: I'll say they did. Jeremiah was so active one time that they put him in a dungeon shaped like a bottle. There was so much filth and muck in the bottom of it that when they wanted to get him out, they had to put down ropes with rags to put under his arms to lift him up by. Then Isaiah was sawed in two, because he would not stop telling the people of what God wanted them to do.

Jack: Maybe they were not such sissies, as I thought them.

Arline: When Jesus talked about the Law and the Prophets, I suppose He was talking about the Old Testament. But when He spoke of the Scriptures, I suppose that was when He was talking about the New Testament. That is what I heard one of those boy evangelists say the other day when he was preaching on the street.

Harold: You just ought to have heard our Counselor on the subject of boy and girl evangelists. She sure did get warm on that subject. She said it was as if a person would call in a boy or girl when they were ill instead of a doctor. Of course, a boy or girl could not know enough to really teach the Bible correctly.

Arline: But if that was not right, what is right? What are the Scriptures?

Harold: As I have said, the Law was the first five books of the Old Testament, then the Prophets were another bunch of books of the Old Testament that told of the great preachers and what they said and did, and also another bunch of books that we would call historical, and the Scriptures were a third bunch of the books of the New Testament.

Arline: Why did they call the historical books the prophets?

Harold: Because they considered that a prophet was a man who told people about God, and as they considered that God worked through history, and their historical books pointed this out they called them the earlier prophets.

Jack: I suppose the reason that we have the prophets only in the Old Testament is because when Jesus came they did not have anything else to prophesy about, isn't it?

Harold: That is what I thought. But they said the Book of Revelation in the New Testament was also a book of prophesy, only of a little different type from most of the others.

Tom: But what are all these Epistles in the New Testament? Are they the books written by the wives of the Apostles?

Arline: Of all the dumb questions. Don't you remember that Epistle is the Latin for a letter.

Harold: Yes, they are letters that were written by the Apostles at various times and on different occasions to churches or people to tell them various things they ought to know.

Jack: But who picked out and said which books there were that should make up this library we call the Bible?

Harold: That is the most wonderful part of it all. For people had a great many books on religious subjects that they used to keep together. But little by little those we have in the Bible were kept and the others were discarded, not because anyone told them to discard them, but because they were not as good as the others. You see, people considered they were the best that told them best about God. So, after people had been agreed for a few hundred years as to what were the best, Mother Church simply recorded the fact of that decision.

Arline: But Minnie Jones, who is a Roman Catholic, said the Protestants had left out a number of the books of the Bible. What were they? And what did she mean?

Harold: I was just coming to that. Some of the books were written not in the Holy Land, but in Egypt and the scholars thought that a number of heathen ideas had crept into them and there was a question as to what should be done with them. The Roman Catholics said put them in with the rest and do not confuse people. Most of the Protestant Churches said we should simply throw hem all the way out so that they are not usually printed in the Bibles we see on the market. But Mother Church said we will put them between the Old and New Testaments for people to read for instruction in life, but not for doctrine about God. These we call the Apocrypha.

Jack: This is all very interesting, but there is a peach of a picture on this afternoon and if we want to see the show before supper we had better be going.

Arline: All right, let's go. (They go out.)

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

LABOR SUNDAY MESSAGE, 1935.

Issued by the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, through its Department of the Church and Social Service:

For over five years the people of this land have suffered untold hardship. Millions have vainly sought work. Some 20,000,000 men, women and children have been thrown upon public relief. Other millions have lived in constant fear of the same fate. In city, town and country, many American families have been reduced to living standards unprecedented in our history. All this has produced strife and bitterness. Both in our great cities and in rural areas labor unrest, strikes and lockouts have grown in number and severity. In many areas troops have been called out. Armed bands have sought to intimidate those who would protest against their conditions of labor. Scores have been killed and hundreds have been injured in these conflicts. But this crisis is not confined to our own land. In nearly all countries the outlook is similar. Governments have seemed powerless to solve the problems created by modern civilization. And over all there hangs the constant threat of war fought with the devastating weapons created by science.

The churches of America have not been and cannot be indifferent to this situation. They cannot pass by on the other side and say it is not their concern. The Founder of their faith declares that He came that men might have life and have it abundantly. The conditions under which men live and secure their food, clothing and shelter in no small measure affect their spiritual as well as their physical well-being. Men may justly ask today for some word of hope and counsel in this fearful time. Especially may those who toil look to the disciples of the Carpenter of Nazareth who said: Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden. The organized opposition to the Christian Church today is in no small measure due to its failure adequately to meet a justified expectation.

Abundance For All.

But in the midst of our suffering a glorious truth shines clear. For the first time in human history, man has the technical knowledge to solve his economic problem. He can at last provide sufficient material goods for an abundant life. Since the depression the researches of scientists and engineers, the findings of private and governmental commissions, have been reiterating this same basic fact. The natural resources of the United States of America and the industrial and agricultural equipment are sufficient to give every man, woman and child the material basis for the good life. Recent governmental estimates and other authoritative studies have indicated that had our plants been used to capacity in 1929 over $4,000 in goods and services could have been supplied to every American family. Nevertheless, 16,000,000 American families, or nearly two-thirds of our people, actually received in that year less than $2,000. That was six years ago. Since then inventions and improvements in technological processes have marched steadily on. The clear truth is that from a purely physical, engineering point of view we could now produce enough fully and completely to banish poverty. Yet, in spite of this potential plenty, restricted production in both industry and agriculture is the rule, while devastating poverty and unemployment continue. We have the natural resources; we have the machinery; we can produce enough for all. This good news must be proclaimed to every worker with hand or brain.

Effective means must be found to eradicate sins of selfishness and to make this abundance available for all. The solution of the deplorable maladjustment in distribution is adequate income for the masses and security of employment. Only by a more equalized ability to purchase can the anomaly of want in the midst of abundance be solved. To achieve such an end new forms of social control must be designed. New ways must be found.

Freedom of Discussion and Organization.

But these new ways cannot be found unless men are free to discuss frankly and openly the problems before them. We rejoice in the great American principle of free speech and press which is enthroned in our federal and state constitutions. This principle has its roots in the Christian faith. We would solemnly point out that the changes which must come in our economic set-up can come peaceably only if the channels of communication are kept open. True Americans and true Christians must be ever alert to repel any attempt to deprive them of these civil rights so important in a democracy. Moreover, they must champion these rights for the weakest among us, for if one group be suppressed it will only be a question of time until such suppression is extended to all who dare voice opposition to those temporarily in power.

Again it is important on this Labor Sunday, as we extend our greetings to the toilers of the nation, to point out the basic importance of organization. Employers have found it decidedly to their benefit to band themselves together for mutual aid and counsel. It is equally important that the men who labor should band themselves together that they, too, may bargain collectively through their own freely chosen representatives. We rejoice that the churches have gone on record in their Social Ideals for > "The right of employees and employers alike to organize for collective bargaining and social action; protection of both in the exercise of this right; the obligation of both to work for the public good; encouragement of cooperatives and other organizations among farmers and other groups."

Such organization of those who labor with hand or brain is essential if justice for all is to be achieved. It is good to recall that the American labor leader, Samuel Gompers, declared: "I have been jealous that the American labor movement should never lose its character of a great crusade for human justice."

Finally, the churches must ceaselessly proclaim that out of the heart are the issues of life. True religion must stand always not only against exploitation but against the very desire to exploit. The Christian religion demands now and must always demand that both human hearts and human institutions be controlled and judged by that mind which was in Christ Jesus.

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND.

An Important Communication to the Bishops and Lay Officials of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who are interested in the continued successful operation of The Church Pension Fund:

On February 15, 1935, I mailed to all of the Bishops, Clergy and Lay Officials of the Church a statement setting forth the implications, as we saw them, of the Social Security Act in the form as originally drafted, in so far as it might affect the continued successful operations of The Church Pension Fund. While being in full sympathy with the ideals of the proposed legislation, the Trustees of the Fund felt it their duty to place before the Church certain facts which were considered to be important.

On August 14, 1935, after it had been passed in an amended form by both Houses of the Congress, the President signed the Bill and it became law. The Social Security Act, in its present form, contains a clause excluding from its provisions the employees of religious, charitable and educational institutions, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual. The exact wording of the clause is as follows:

> "Service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual."

We understand that this relieves churches and similar ecclesiastical organizations of the taxes imposed by the Act. There appears to be no reason, therefore, why the Church should not look with confidence upon the continued successful operation of The Church Pension Fund.

This should not be confused with the so-called "Clark Amendment", offered by Senator Clark, proposing a similar exclusion for employees of industrial corporations which maintain private pension systems providing benefits equal to or in excess of the Government provisions. The Clark Amendment was opposed by the administration and was finally withdrawn, subject to further study.

The Social Security Act will not affect the proven value of legal reserve life insurance companies, such as the Church Life Insurance Corporation, a subsidiary of The Church Pension Fund. It does not eliminate the need for life insurance as a means of protection for one's family. Its benefits are distinctly limited and, although they will afford income to many who might not otherwise be protected, no one should fail to maintain any existing insurance or other similar protection.

Bradford B. Locke,
Executive Vice-President.

"CHURCH OF THE AIR" TO BEGIN FIFTH YEAR ON COLUMBIA, SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 1.

The "Church of the Air" series of religious programs will begin its fifth year of broadcasting over the WABC-Columbia network on Sunday, September 1, when representatives of the Episcopal and Jewish faiths speak from New York and San Francisco over a nation-wide hook-up, during the morning and afternoon periods.

Clergymen conducting programs were first offered the facilities of the "Church of the Air" in 1931, when Columbia announced that a morning and afternoon period each Sunday would be available to all representative faiths.

The first morning and afternoon programs of the fall series will be devoted to the Episcopal and Jewish faiths. The morning service, heard from 10 to 10:30 A. M., EDST, will be conducted by the Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs, D. D., Editor of "The Spirit of Missions." Spencer Miller, Jr., Consultant on Industrial Relations of the Department of Christian Social Service of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church, will speak on "The Church and Social Idealism."

Miller was graduated from Amherst in 1912 and received degrees from Columbia University in public law and mechanical engineering. In 1915, he became an assistant to the warden at Sing Sing. During intervening years he lectured extensively and has been connected with numerous welfare and social service movements.

A mixed quartet comprised of Rhoda Arnold, soprano; Evelyn MacGregor, contralto; Norman Horn, tenor, and Roger Kinne, baritone, accompanied at the organ by Sidney Raphael, will be heard singing two Episcopal hymns, "Lead Us, O Father" and "Through the Night of Doubt and Sorrow."

The afternoon period from 1 to 1:30 P. M., EDST, will bring an address by Dr. Irving Reichert, Rabbi of Temple Emanu-El, San Francisco, entitled "These Things Shall Not Pass Away."

Since the first program in 1931, 240 representatives of religious thought have broadcast during the morning and afternoon periods of the "Church of the Air" series. On the first program were William Cardinal O'Connell, Archbishop of Boston and senior ranking prelate of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States; the Rt. Rev. Irving Peake Johnson, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Colorado; and Rabbi oJnah B. Wise, eminent Jewish leader and teacher of New York.

LAYING OF CORNERSTONE OF HOLY TRINITY CHURCH, MORON, CUBA.

In the city of Moron, Republic of Cuba, on August 7, at 9:30 in the morning, many of the townsmen stood in the grounds of our School listening to the hymn, "Onward Christian Soldiers." The hymn was sung in Spanish by a large choir of young Cuban men and women —students of Trinity School and members of the Young People's Society of the Episcopal Church in Moron.

It was a very special occasion. The municipal band was there in uniform, the Mayor of Moron, the Chief of Police, the Head of the Health Department, architects, engineers, workmen, visitors from other towns; in brief, hundreds of people thronged the school grounds or stood near the fence to witness something that will both further the Cause of Christ and His Church and also the spiritual development of the city of Moron. Moron, at last, was to have a much-needed church building. "Onward Christian Soldiers" was the opening hymn as well as one reason for the laying of the cornerstone of "Holy Trinity" Episcopal Church in this city.

For many years the services of the church were conducted in our school building. Both school and church have grown so much that need of a larger and, of course, more suitable place for the church was increasingly felt. Thank God our prayers were answered.

The ceremony was a very impressive one. The American and Cuban flags were waving together as Cuban and American clergy and laity took part in the service.

We proceeded to the spot where the cornerstone was to be placed. An American clergyman began the reading of the fifteenth Psalm in Spanish, and the people read the responses.

Bishop Hulse read the prayers; a Cuban deacon read the lesson taken from Genesis 28:18-19; the rector, the Rev. Ramon C. Moreno, greeted the visitors and onlookers. Then followed other prayers and the Apostles' Creed. A poem written by a famous Cuban poet in honor of this occasion was read by a member of the congregation.

While the municipal band played, preparations were made for the laying of the cornerstone. The secretary of the Executive Committee, together with other members of that organization and three members of the Woman's Guild took note of the things that were to be deposited in the Stone. One of the things was the "Constitution of the Sociedad de Jovenes" of the Church.

People stood in reverent silence as appointed members of the Executive Committee placed their right hands on the cornerstone, while three women held ribbons that were tied to the Stone. Then the bishop said in Spanish, "Si el Senor no edificia la casa," i. e., "If the Lord does not build the house"; and the people replied, "In vain do they labor, those that build it."

We wish you could have been there with us that day. It was inspiring to hear and to sing that hymn, "The Church's One Foundation—Is Jesus Christ Her Lord"—"De la Iglesia cimiento—Es Cristo el Salvador."

Following this, the Rev. Salvador Berenguer, priest of the Episcopal Church, a man recognized as being one of the most eloquent and forceful speakers in Cuba, got up on a table and in a clear voice and persuasive manner addressed the mutlitude.

He made the people see more clearly that the real and only foundation of the Christian Church was, is, and ever shall be Jesus Christ Her Lord. That His love for His Church was so great that He gave His life for Her. That the message of the Church ought always to be that great proclamation that Christ made at the beginning of His mission of self-sacrificing love for you and me:

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me,
Because He anointed me to preach
good tidings to the poor;
He hath sent me to proclaim release to the captives
And recovery of sight to the blind,
To set at liberty them that are bruised,
To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."

R. H. Gooden.

BISHOP BARNWELL'S TRANSLATION.

A sufficient number of consents to the translation of the Rt. Rev. Middleton S. Barnwell, D. D., Bishop of the Missionary District of Idaho to be Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Georgia, have been received by the Presiding Bishop and this change of status is, therefore, effective, subject to the date set by Bishop Barnwell for his transfer of responsibility.

In the meantime the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D. D., has designated Bishop Barnwell as Bishop in charge of Idaho until further arrangement is authorized.

THE FAITH AND ORDER MEETING, 1935.

By the Most Rev. William Temple, D. D., Archbishop of York.

Twenty-five years ago the first of a series of World Conferences was held in Edinburgh—the World Missionary Conference of 1910. It took as its starting point the actual agreement of the Churches, and deliberately excluded points of difference. Its purpose was to promote such common action as was possible on the basis of the agreement which existed. When it was over, Bishop Brent—honored throughout the Anglican Communion and far beyond it—urged upon the Protestant Episcopal Church of America that the Churches should meet also for the precise purpose of considering their differences with a view to the promotion of further unity. Thus in 1910 the invitation was issued which led to the inauguration of the Faith and Order Movement. The war interrupted the preparations, and the first World Conference on Faith and Order could not meet till 1927, when it assembled at Lausanne under the chairmanship of Bishop Brent. It set up a Continuation Committee, which has met each year except in 1932 and 1933, when financial considerations prevented the holding of any such international gathering.

That Continuation Committee has just concluded its meeting for this year, at Hindsgaul in Denmark. Fifty-nine members attended, representing nineteen different countries and twenty-nine different Churches. Among these were the Bishops of Gloucester and Down; Archbishop Germanos and the Bishop of Novi Sad; Dr. Deismann, Dr. Otto Dibelius, Dr. Zoellner, Bishop Heckel and Professor Piper; Dean Briloth, Professor Norregaard and Pastor Norborg, representing respectively Sweden, Denmark and Norway; Bishop Lehtonen from Finland; Professor William Adams Brown and several colleagues from America; Dr. Barbour from Scotland, and others well known in many parts of the world.

The main business to be done was concerned with direct preparation for the second World Conference, fixed some years ago for 1937. It was decided to hold this in Edinburgh, thus renewing association with the mother-conference of 1910. Four main subjects will be under discussion:

1. The Grace of Our Lord Jesus Christ.
2. The Church of Christ and the Word of God.
3. The Church of Christ: Ministry and Sacraments.
4. The Curch's Unity in Life and Worship.

In preparation for these, four international commissions have been appointed. The first, led by the Bishop of Gloucester, has already presented its report, based on the impressive volume,

"The Theology of Grace." The second, led by Dr. Zoellner, is at work upon a most extensive synopsis; the third, led again by the Bishop of Gloucester, is far advanced in a most thorough study and exposition; the fourth, led by Dean Sperry of Harvard Divinity School, has been more lately constituted, but is working to a scheme full of interest and hopefulness.

No one can dispute the thoroughness with which preparation is being made for the theological work of the Conference. In addition to this, the Conference will be opened by a statement of the Church's Witness in the World Today, and will be invited to close with an Affirmation of Union in Allegiance to our Lord Jesus Christ. Also opportunities will be given for statements by speakers representing different Churches each setting forth what the life and worship of his own Church means to him. Thus it is hoped to relate the program to the realities of the world-situation, and to keep the theological discussion in close touch with spiritual experience.

The conditions of our meeting in Denmark were delightful. Our Danish hosts surrounded us with kindness. On the Sunday morning before the Committee met I was allowed the privilege of preaching in the Cathedral of Odense. The congregational hymn-singing was a joy to remember, and it is clear that this is one of the outstanding features of the Church of Denmark. In such surroundings cooperative work was easy, and I believe that all our decisions represented a genuine common mind in spite of wide differences of national and ecclesiastical background.

The mere occurrence of such meetings is more important than their achievements as represented by Minutes. People who exert some special degree of influence in their own countries are drawn into understanding and friendship; thus a gathering which meets to illustrate the unity that exists among Christians and to develop and deepen that unity becomes itself a potent force in bringing to actuality that aspiration.

The Jerusalem Bishopric.

Developments in the Near East, and not least in Palestine itself, are giving an added importance year by year to the Anglican bishopric in Jerusalem. Both from a political and from an economic point of view Palestine is becoming more and more the centre of Middle-Eastern life, while from the religious standpoint the Holy City, where are gathered representatives of all the churches, must always have a unique interest. The increase in the number of Jews alone creates a new situation. In 1921 they were 11 per cent. of the population; in 1935 they had become 25 per cent. They are not only the most expanding, they are also the most vigorous element in the population. They have brought with them many Western ideas and needs. Tel Aviv must be a sore disappointment to many earnest Zionists, because it has provided a home for a denitely anti-religious Communism, a new and sinister feature. The methods of Christian missions must be considerably modified by these changes. The Jew in Palestine today does not need the material and cultural help that once offered opportunities of influence. The work must proceed from a more definitely theological basis.

Relations with the Orthodox Churches form another important part of the work of the Jerusalem bishopric. A letter published in The Guardian last week asking for prayers for the new patriarch shows how carefully Dr. Graham Brown fosters these connections. Canon Bridgeman, who has particular charge of this work, points out in the very interesting annual report of the Jerusalem and the East Mission, just issued, that the Orthodox Church has been, and should be again, the strongest bulwark of the Christian faith and living in the Holy Land. The same report gives encouraging accounts of the way in which other Communions are giving help to the Orthodox and Armenian Churches. A new responsibility has come to the Jerusalem diocese by the inclusion of Iraq, which was until recently under the direct supervision of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The report records the valuable work of Mr. D. C. Dunlop while he was chaplain in Baghdad, not only among the British, but by his solicitude for the Assyrians too. These ill-treated people will have a special claim on the sympathy and protection of the Bishop in Jerusalem. It ought to be more widely realized among English Church people than it is that the Jerusalem and the East Mission is likely to be one of the great strategic points for Christian development and Christian unity. A study of the annual report would do much to bring home the new situation.—The Guardian.

Anglican Bishop Visits New Jerusalem Patriarch.

The Anglican Bishop in Jerusalem, accompanied by his clergy in Jerusalem, July 23 called upon the Patriarch-elect of Jerusalem to assure him of the prayers of the whole Anglican Communion that God would bestow His blessing on him and upon the people committed to his charge.

The Patriarch-elect replied, thanking the Bishop, and saying that he hoped that the good relations and cooperation which had existed between the two Churches in the past might continue in the future.

Reforming the Calendar.

The movement for a fixed Easter and an otherwise reformed calendar has now been taken up by the Royal Statistical Society. Their interest in the matter is due to the fact that our present calendar makes it difficult to compare exactly statistics from year to year or within the year. Their report, recently issued, rightly rejects the notion of a thirteen-months year, which would entirely break with the past, but asks for such changes that Easter should always be on the same day, and indeed that a given date in any month should always fall on the same day of the week. This latter can only be effected if one day in the 365 is counted as a dies non, to which it is rightly objected that some of the churches at least would demur against a week of eight days, even though it came but once a year. Statistics would be simplified if each quarter of the year except the first or last were of equal length, and if the month of February were given two extra days drawn from say March and August. Then each of the three first quarters of the year would consist of one month of thirty-one days and two of thirty days, the additional day coming at the end of the year and an additional day placed somewhere in the course of every fourth year. But all this would require a great deal more than putting in motion the Easter Act of 1928. As an instalment of reform, it would be a great step forward if Easter were always fixed for say the Sunday nearest to April 10. The annual variation would then be no more than a week. The universities, schools and business fixtures which depend on the date of Easter would thus be much less disturbed than at present.

General Smuts' Grave Note.

That great statesman, General Smuts, has again uttered a challenging note of warning. Speaking at Capetown on Monday, he pointed out that a war in Abyssinia would have grave repercussions for the league. If it failed at this critical stage people would no longer look to it for security, and we should be back to the old system of alliances of pre-war days, and Europe would again be divided into hostile camps. General Smuts went on to emphasize the seriousness of the fact that: "The trouble might spread all over the continent of Africa and they would find that every African would sympathize with Abyssinia."

That is another aspect of the situation which is too often ignored. The fact is—if the conflagration once flares up no one on earth can tell where it will end, and no one can prophesy what the consequences will be.

Lines of Appreciation.

"To Our Blessed Bishop."

You have followed Jesus faithfully
For nearly fifty years;
Some of them have been happy,
While some have held sorrow and tears.
But all have been full of service
For Christ, your Master and King;
And when your long journey is over
Precious souls for your hire you shall bring.

Ever pleading God's mercy to sinners,
Not sparing your prayers or tears;
Just giving your best to the Master,
Nor counting the sad, weary years.
But I know that your feet must grow tired,
That your heart must often ache,
As you go out to seek some wanderer
For Jesus' blessed sake.

And so each time I hear you
There's a little twinge of fear
And a prayer that God will let us
Keep you for many a year.
For what would we do without you,
Our Shepherd, Father and Friend;
God bless and keep you always
Until you reach life's end.

Laymen Gather to Form League.

Nearly 100 laymen from all parts of the Diocese of North Carolina gathered at Pittsboro August 19 to perfect organization of the Diocesan Laymen's League.

The meeting was held at St. Bartholomew's Church, and the devotional exercises were conducted by its rector, the Rev. Royal G. Shannonhouse. After a business session, the laymen adjourned to the churchyard for luncheon, after which they concluded their deliberations with election of officers and general discussion of the league's objective in the diocese. Alexander B. Andrews, of Raleigh, prominent church worker, was elected president.

The principal speaker was Bishop Edwin A. Penick, of Raleigh, who outlined the plan of organization, stated the ten major objectives and pleaded for wider participation in the affairs of the church on the part of the laymen. The Diocese of North Carolina has taken the lead in organizing units of the Laymen's League and now has more than fifteen branches of the league throughout the diocese.

Mr. Andrews, the first president of the diocesan organization of the laymen, is also president of the Laymen's League of the Church of the Good Shepherd in Raleigh. He has been a leading figure in affairs of the diocese for a number of years. Other officers of the diocesan body besides Mr. Andrews are as follows:

Vice-Presidents, A. H. London, of Pittsboro, and Hobart Steele, of Burlington; C. R. Cunningham, of Winston-Salem, Secretary; Peter A. Wallenhall, Treasurer. Members of the Diocesan Executive Committee elected were: Colonel J. W. Harrelson, of Raleigh; R. A. Williams, of Burlington; J. R. Nicholson, of Greensboro; Ogburn Yeates, of Asheboro; George Irwin, of Winston-Salem; Pembroke Nash, of Tarboro, and Mr. Worrell.

Raleigh had a large delegation present, including R. M. Cornick, Linton Smith, J. S. Holmes, Arthur B. Morgan, Frank T. Ward, I. M. Bailey, G. L. Nisbet, of the Church of the Good Shepherd.

Hancock Church Observes Centennial.

Old St. Thomas' Church, Hancock, used as a hospital during the Civil War, celebrated its 100th anniversary August 25 with an impressive pageant.

Many notables of the old church, as well as men in public life, were present, including Governor Harry W. Nice and Bishop Helfenstein, of Maryland. The Rev. Francis M. Cooper is rector.

Parish Willed Land and Residence as Memorial.

St. John's Parish, Bandon, Ore., was willed a block of ground in West Bandon and a large residence by the late Mrs. William Horsfall, widow of the Rev. William Horsfall.

In the will Mrs. Horsfall expressed the wish that the gift be in the nature of a memorial to her husband, and that the church building be moved to the property, and that the residence, in which she and her husband had lived while residing in Bandon, be converted into a parish house and rectory.

Summer Work in the Diocese.

About the middle of June two Seminary students took up work for the summer in the diocese.

Edgar T. Ferrell, of Lynchburg, has charge of Christ Church, Marion, in Smyth county. Mr. Ferrell has just finshed his second year at the Virginia Seminary. His present address is 100 Cherry Street, Marion.

George F. Packard is in residence at Splashdam in Dickenson county. His home is at Ruxton, Maryland, and he has just completed his first year at the Virginia Seminary. Splashdam is a mining community in the coal fields in the southwestern part of the diocese and in the territory formerly known as the Associate Mission Field. Though residing at Splashdam, Mr. Packard will do general work under the three clergymen having charge of this field. The resident missionary at Splashdam is Miss Florence F. Pickard. It is only a coincidence that Mr. Packard will assist Miss Pickard.

Annual Meeting in Salem.

The sixteenth annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in the diocese will be held at St. Paul's Church, Salem, October 22-24.

Our Executive Committee hopes that at this meeting we will be able to return to a plan we used in the diocese several years ago, that of announcing where the annual meetings are to be held for three or for five years in advance instead of only one year. One decided advantage in this plan is that thereby the places of meeting may be arranged more carefully from a geographical point of view.

Conference and Field Board to Meet September 5.

A conference has been called for September 5 at 11 A. M. to be held in the Mayo Memorial Church House, Richmond. This conference will be preceded by a meeting of the entire Field Board of the diocese at 10 A. M.

The program of the conference at 11 A. M. is in charge of a committee of which Bishop Goodwin is chairman. The conference itself will be made up of leading clergy and laymen from over the diocese who will be asked to take over the work of helping the local committees organize for the annual Every-Member Canvass. There have been some fifty acceptances of the invitation to this conference. There is evident a renewed desire throughout the diocese to make the annual canvass so effective this year that special appeals will be unnecessary. This is in accord with the express wishes of Bishop Tucker, who will be personally present at the conference on September 5 to give an address.

The Woman's Auxiliary will be represented by their president, Mrs. Robert T. Barton.

H. S. Osborn,
Chairman of the Field Board.

Mission at Alberene Near Completion.

Announcement has been made that the mission, which is nearing completion at Alberene, in Albemarle county, will be formally consecrated in the early fall by one of the bishops of the diocese.

The mission was first constructed at Lydia, near Stanardsville, in Greene county ,but was torn down and removed to Alberene, where it is being constructed on a larger scale. It will have a seating capacity of 200.

The first services were held in the mission, which is known as the Jewel chapel, last Sunday evening by the Venerable Archdeacon Frederick Neve, who raised the fund for the original Jewel chapel. A brief address was also made by Archdeacon W. Roy Mason.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Student Work.

Announcement is made of the appointment of Mrs. John Luther as director of student work for the Church at Northwestern University, Evanston, succeeding Miss Daphne Hughes. Miss Hughes has accepted a scholarship at Bryn Mawr for the next two years.

The student work is provided for by funds from the United Thank Offering of the Woman's Auxiliary nationally. The director is under supervision of the Evanston Council of Student Work, composed of representatives of Episcopal churches in Evanston and the Western Theological Seminary.

Mrs. Luther for the past two years has been doing similar work at the University of California. She received her training at St. Margaret's School at the University of California and attended Northwestern University. She will have charge of all church students' activities at Northwestern, starting with the fall term.

Choirs Plan Conference.

The Rev. Canon Winfred Douglas, of Denver, will drect a course of instruction for choirmasters and organists of the diocese of Chicago this fall, according to announcement by Mr. Stanley Martin, president of the Diocesan Choirmasters' Association. The course will be given at St. Mark's parish house, Evanston, in November and will cover a week. It is intended to aid the choirmaster in his various programs and will be the first course of its kind given by the local association.

Centenary Fund $541,000.

A $10,000 contribution to the Centenary Fund of the Diocese of Chicago, together with several other substantial sums, has brought the fund to $541,000, according to a report by Wirt Wright, Executive Vice-President. A special gifts committee of twenty prominent Churchmen, under chairmanship of Colonel E. J. Blair, is working on larger gifts.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Edward C. Morgan has been appointed assistant to Dean Walter H. Gray of the Pro-Cathedral Church of the Nativity, Bethlehem, Pa. He succeeds the Rev. Kenneth E. Heim, who has gone to St. Stephen's Church, Ferguson, Mo.

The Rev. Frank H. Lash, of the Diocese of Washington, has become chaplain of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, north of Chicago, which was recently re-opened. Mr. Lash officiated last week at the first services to be held at the station since its re-establishment. Regular weekly services will be held there. Mr. Lash has been a chaplain in the naval service since 1927.

The Rev. Francis Bloodgood, of St. Andrew's Parish, Madison, Wis., accompanied by Mrs. Bloodgood and his two boys, are staying for three weeks at the American School of Oriental Research, Jerusalem, while visiting the Holy Land and taking part in an archelogical seminar conducted by the director of the school, Dr. W. F. Albright of Johns Hopkins University. He is taking advantage of the opportunity to study the missionary work of the Church in Palestine and to see something of Zionism at first hand.

The Rev. Lloyd R. Gillmett, assistant at Emmanuel Church, Boston, has accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Duluth, Minn., effective October 1. St. Paul's is the largest and most influential church in the Diocese of Duluth. The Rev. Mr. Gillmett has been unusually successful in working with college students and other young people.

The Rev. Dr. Manfred Lilliefors has succeeded the Rev. Dr. B. W. Bonell as president of the College of St. John the Evangelist, Greeley, Colo. Dr. Bonell had given up his work at Greeley because of continued ill health and moved to Windsor, Colo., where he has taken charge of St. Alban's Mission which he

A LITTLE TE DEUM.

With hearts responsive
And enfranchised eyes,
We thank Thee, Lord—
For all things beautiful and good, and true;
For all things that seemed not good yet turned to good;
For all the sweet compulsions of Thy will
That chased, and tried, and wrought us to Thy shape;
For things unnumbered that we take of right,
And value first when first they are withheld:
For light and air; sweet sense of sound and smell;
For ears to hear the heavenly harmonies;
For eyes to see the unseen in the seen;
For vision of The Worker in the work;
For hearts to apprehend Thee everywhere;
We thank Thee, Lord.

If the Spring Flows.

Adrienne halted on the Sussex high-road, observing with curiosity the little rustic gate, over which she read this sign: "Come in."

A high picket fence had barred her from the forest, all the way indeed from the cottage by the mill, where she was visiting. And here was an invitation to enter. She peered through this rustic gate and saw a winding path, which verily seemed to wind and beckon until it lost itself amidst the green.

Still wondering, she lifted the latch, opened the gate, went in and followed whither this alluring path might lead. And now she found it to be a path that wound its way with such playful windings among mighty trees and through screening undergrowth that she wondered yet more as on she went, pausing here and there to observe a bright flower or to look up into overhanging boughs and discover a song-bird revelling in its music or to peep at the sky which winked through the stirring foliage.

Presently the path led down a gentle slope and into a far-flung grassy dell. She here came into a sylvan festival of wild flowers, which looked up at her with many a nod of bright and friendly welcome. And now she heard a murmuring tinkle and looking about observed a tiny stream, clear as crystal, which made its way joyously amidst the blooms and glanced back at her wherever it might throughout the length of the dell.

"Beautiful, isn't it?"

"Oh!" she exclaimed with a jump, and whirled.

"Excuse me," he apologized. "I'm sorry. I didn't mean to startle you."

He sat on a log beneath a low-hanging gum tree. His bronze hair glinted and blue eyes twinkled merrily. His gray flannel shirt was open at the collar and he smoked a curiously-carved pipe.

"In fact," he added, "I'm glad you came. How do you like my flowers?"

Hereupon Adrienne, seeing the friendly look in his eyes, contrived to smile.

"I think—they are—lovely," she heard herself answer, and wondered at her far-away voice. Yet she knew now that she was unafraid.

"You came in at the gate by the road?"

She nodded.

"Good. And so has many and many another, young and old, high and low, and all since I cleared out the spring."

She glanced about, puzzled.

"You see," he continued, "it got so clogged up with weeds and dead leaves it finally quit flowing. You really couldn't blame it, could you? That must have been quite a while ago, because one day last fall I chanced along and saw that the grass and all the little plants had dried up and everything was drab and ugly. So of course I discovered the trouble, and went at once and got a hoe and shovel and came back and set to work. When all the obstructions were cleared away the spring began to flow again and wound its way on down through the dell, and now you can see the transformation."

He stood up and together they surveyed the luxurious growth of grass and abundant bloom of wild-flowers before them.

"Look at those columbines," he directed, pointing to a radiant cluster, "and at those forget-me-nots beyond. Don't they look happy?"

"Yes," spoke Adrienne, viewing their fresh beauty. "And what are those yonder?"

"Those? Why they are wild roses, blushing pink and fresh as a sweet young maid."

He tapped the ashes form his pipe.

"Yonder are the fringed gentians," he added, pointing again, "and just beyond are the blue-bells and wild geraniums. And over there are the anemones—wind flowers, I call them. They look shy, don't they? I believe they would run if you jumped at them."

Adrienne laughed.

"And look!" she exclaimed, herself pointing now. "Aren't those lady's slippers down by the willow?"

"I think so," he answered. "And if you don't watch out you'll step on the violets."

"Oh!"

She drew back, and sure enough in the grass at her feet nestled perhaps a dozen, very fresh and dainty, and very, very blue.

"They are trusting little things," he commented, smiling. "They weren't scared a bit."

"And I almost did step on them," said Adrienne. "I'm so glad I didn't."

"'Twas the kind hand of providence that saved them," he remarked, yet smiling. "Come, let me show you my spring."

They found it at the foot of a gray boulder, fringed with ferns, whence it flowed quietly upon its life-giving mission. On a projecting ledge was a gourd dipper, which he filled with cold, clear water for her to drink. Whereupon he stood silent, looking down into the colorful dell and reflecting upon the wonder of its new-found bloom.

"The Bishop of London was here the other day," he told her presently, "and when I showed him how the spring had wrought such beauty, in a place so bleak before, what do you think he said?"

"What?" she questioned.

"He said it was the same in a human life, which can have little of beauty and joy until the way from the source is cleared. Then the Divine Spirit flows in and makes it a place of glory."

Now as Adrienne pondered this she heard the soft tones of a distant bell.

"That's for me," he informed a little ruefully.

She looked up, wondering.

"You live at the castle?"

He nodded.

"Oh! Are you—are you the Duke?"

"The same," he said, bowing, "and very humbly at your service."—J. C. J., in The Southwestern Episcopalian.

Labor Sunday.

This day would have had little meaning to our fathers, but many changes are taking place in our day that would have seemed strang to them. The church cannot remain indifferent to its age and must keep pace with it or it would become obsolete. Formerly the church kept largely apart and aloof from its social and industrial environment, but now such problems are knocking on its doors and have gotten inside. Practically all our denominations, including the Roman Catholic, issue deliverances on these matters, and exceptional is the pulpit that has nothing to say about them.

It is not incongruous or difficult for the church to do this, for it is originated among the common people and was democratic in its organization and spirit from the beginning. Christ Himself was a working man and so were His disciples and Paul the first great Christian missionary supported himself while preaching by his trade of tent making.

The church has a direct interest in the rights of men as well as in their duties, and so it has ever looked after the downtrodden and oppressed classes. The Good Samaritan is one of its favorite parables. The laboring men have risen in the scale of democracy and are abundantly able to look after their own rights and their organized voice and demands have become influential and often compelling in all councils.

The main business of the church in this field is to uphold and apply the mutual rights of men and especially to bring to bear upon all industrial problems the light of Christian principles and sympathy and brotherhood. There are technical questions in this field which the church is not authorized or qualified to determine, but it can insist upon the fundamental principles and spirit that should be dominant in settling them. More and more this attitude and action of the church are being adopted and emphasized. When men at variance in the economic field come together in this spirit to do justice and love mercy in the spirit of the Gospel of Christ, mutual satisfactory adjustment of differences and difficulties is not far away.—Presbyterian Banner.

Developing Better Methods of Bible Study.

The public should be made acquainted with better methods of studying the Bible. One would hardly expect to become acquainted with the works of Shakespeare by reading a few lines from Hamlet one day, a passage from "Much Ado About Nothing" another day, and a page or so from "The Tempest" some other time. Yet the Bible is frequently read in just such a haphazard manner. Frequently the reader is not even sufficiently acquainted with the contents of the Bible to know where to turn for its most beautiful passages. People should be taught not only to become familiar with the beauty spots of the Bible, but also to know its great characters, to get the message of the individual books, and to trace the development of great Bible doctrines from Genesis to Revelation.

The public at large knows next to nothing of how the Bible came to be, or of the circumstance under which the various books were composed, or of the historical background against which the different parts of Scripture must be viewed, in order to be understood, or of the aims and purposes of the authors of Scripture. Too often attempts are made to interpret the Bible, without taking into consideration at all the fact that the Book is composed of many kinds of literature, each of which should be interpreted by its own canons. And, what is worse, people do not even know where such information is to be found. Adequate instruction along these lines would go far toward arousing a new interest in and a better understanding of the Bible.

If the Church will celebrate this year the four hundredth anniversary of the first printing of the English Bible by devising ways and means to acquaint the people with the outstanding facts concerning the past history and influence of the Bible, encourage every agency that is attempting to give the Scriptures wider circulation, to create a more intelligent attitude towards the Bible, and to train the public in the use of better methods of Bible study, it may be possible to restore the old Book to its rightful place in the life of mankind and to turn the thought of the world once more into Biblical channels. —Presbyterian of the South.

IS THERE A LAND?

Charles Ballard.

'Is there a land
(O not too far!)
Where souls of dogs
Who adored us are?

And are there friends
To give them care
And plenty of love
Till we come there

Is there a God
Who treasures them all—
The same who knows
When sparrows fall?

O can the love
My dog gave me
Be lost in a blank

The Kingdom Comes.

In teaching the disciples to pray and in wording for them a model prayer, Christ used these words: "Thy Kingdom come," meaning of course the Kingdom of God, the Kingdom of righteousness. Since the coming of Christ, His Kingdom has been coming—coming in power and in effectiveness. The Kingdom comes in the hearts of men and ultimately through men into society and the world. It makes its approach not with a tingling of cymbals or the sounding of trumpets but as an increasing and ever-widening light, scattering the darkness of human experience and lifting the clouds obstructing human vision. In a parable, Jesus taught that the Kingdom of Heaven is as a little heaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal until the whole lump was leavened.

In a quiet, unassuming, and yet in an irresistible way, the Kingdom has been coming in all ages of the world's history. In this way, the spirit of God has done His work. Lives have been transformed and men with great souls have appeared on the battlefield of the Kingdom to extend its borders on out to the very edge of the world.—Christian Sun.

SEARCHING SOULS.

Grace French Smith.

The child is dull? His mind is weak?
They say he's just another freak;
But find the soul within his breast,
Uncover the mind with patient test.

Touch tenderly this child of God,
All bruised by cruel human rod;
From the dying embers draw a spark,
And a living fire lights up the dark.

Does not a child deserve a chance?
He's not to blame for circumstance.
And you and I may work with God,
Creating life within a clod!

Owney.

This is the story of a pooch. It's a story of a plain, homeless little dog, that became the most famous dog in the world. Wherever he went, he was front-page news. He became the guest of the Emperor of China. He was welcomed to Japan by the Mikado. He traveled around the world on fine ships, the guest of sea captains.

The dog is Owney, dead these long years, but, traveling still, he came to the 1934 World's Fair in Chicago. He sits in a glass case at the western entrance of the U. S. Government Building, staring upon the passing throng through his glass eyes. In the glass case with him are some of the 1,017 "medals" he won in his lifetime.

In so far as is known, nobody ever owned Owney. He was always on his own from that wintery night in 1888, when he crept into the post-office in Albany, N. Y., to get warm. Owney curled up on a mail sack and snoozed. And he fell in love with mail sacks.

A day or two later, he followed some of his mail sacks into a car bound for New York, and went along. From that day his travels began. Postal employees working in the mail cars grew to know him. He was their mascot. They put a collar on him and hung brass checks on it. The collar grew too heavy, and some one made him a harness. Everywhere he went people added checks.

When the checks grew too heavy, his friends, the postal clerks, would take some off and forward them to Washington. Owney traveled all over the United States with the mail sacks. He took trips up to Winnipeg and to Alaska. Everywhere he went, the newspapers carried stories about him. The headlines would say:

"Owney is here."

Every reader in the country knew about Owney. The newspapers all had his picture, to be used when he came to town.

One day Owney was down on the docks in Tacoma. He was watching a pile of his loved mail sacks going aboard ship. The captain said, "Come on, Owney. Take a trip with me." Owney went aboard.

When he got to Japan, the Mikado gave Owney a passport. It carried, in Japanese characters, the order that Owney could travel anywhere in Japan. And Owney got fine treatment there. Finally, he caught a boat for China. Men took him before the Emperor in Peking, who voiced his delight at meeting this traveled dog.

Catching a ship south, Owney went to India, on through Suez, and, finally, landed in New York. A few weeks later, he was back in Tacoma, the first dog ever to travel around the world "on his own".

But, finally, after about eight years of traveling, Owney began to get old. The hair around his muzzle was graying. His stubby tail began to lose its nimble enthusiasm. He was an old dog. One day Owney laid down and died.

Some one figured out that Owney was known to have traveled 143,000 miles. No train or ship was ever in an accident while he was on it. Postal employees began to get superstitious about him in his later years. They said he meant good luck. When he was gone, they counted up his brass tags, which they called "his medals", medals of honor. They totaled 1,017.

Postoffice employees didn't like the idea of losing Owney entirely. So they didn't bury him. They took him to a taxidermist, who fixed him up the best he could.

Owney "lives" most of the time now in Washington. But when the World's Fair started, some one said:

"I think Owney would like to go out there. He always liked to travel."

So they sent Owney out. Only the old-timers will recall Owney. His name doesn't mean much to the youngsters. Perhaps that's why you mostly see old fellows, getting gray, looking wistfully through the class case at Owney. Owney stirs recollections. He's a bit of their boyhood come back. He was the dog that delighted them, above all dogs, in the days of their own youth.—The Presbyterian of the South.

SEPTEMBER.

Maude Forrest Mumma.

September comes to greet us with the dawn,
As mists hang heavy over distant field and lawn,
When lazy sun with hidden face at lasts sends forth her ray,
And wakes the earth to consciousness and day.

The apple orchard hangs its drowsy head with heavy fruit,
The whipporwill and nightingale still play upon the lute,
The hooting owl and crickets everywhere disturb the peace,
Reminding us that note of bird and insect soon will cease.

The goldenrod and asters deck the roadside field and lane,
And say to me, "My Child, you see, the world is very vain;"
"But soon, I say, such vanity will all too quickly end,
And Father Time to Mother Earth his reaping sickle send."

One of the yearnings of our Lord for His disciples was that they might cultivate fellowship. He knew how much the world would be impressed by their love and unity. Paul similarly reminds disciples that a common act of grace raised them up together and made them sit together in heavenly places; that by the same mercy all enmities and hatreds and suspicion were abolished. When he warns converts to put away all lying, and to speak the truth, it is because "we are members one of another".—John MacBeath.

FOR THE CHILDREN

For the Southern Churchman.

A PRAYER.

Monica Williams.

For our joys and friendships true
For the work we have to do
For the sorrows of life, too,
Father, we thank Thee.

For the hurt we cause our friend
For the heartless toil we spend
For the faith our words pretend
Father, forgive us.

For more light to see the Way
For more strength the right to stay,
For more courage, well, to pray
Father, please hear us.

For as we Thy Kingdom seek Humbly praying at Thy feet
Thou wilt all our trials meet
And into life will lead us.

The Marriage of Ruth.

Arianna Randolph Wight.

In the year 1100 B. C., there lived a sweet and charming young girl, named Ruth. Her home was in the land of Moab. Because of a famine in the land of Bethlehem-Judah, Elimelech, his wife, Naomi, and their two sons left this, their own land and came to live in the strange land of Moab. One of the sons fell in love with Ruth and married her. Orpah was the name of the other son's wife. For almost ten years this family of six lived happily, but after a while the three men died, leaving three widows behind.

Heartbroken, Naomi decided to return to her former home, Bethlehem. She had heard that the Lord was looking after His people there in giving them bread.

Orpah and Ruth started out with her on the journey.

"Go back to your own home," she said. "I have no more sons. You are young and life holds more promise of happiness and husbands in your own land with your own people."

"No, indeed," Ruth and Orpah agreed. "We will come with you."

Finally Orpah was persuaded to return to Moab. She kissed Naomi goodbye.

For the third time Naomi tried in vain to persuade Ruth to return to Moab.

"Why not follow your sister Orpah?"

"Because I have learned to trust and love your God, and I want your people to be my people. Where you live I want to live, and I want to die and to be buried with you."

Together Naomi and Ruth arrived at Bethlehem. The women greeted them cordially, recognized Naomi.

"No do not call me Naomi, as that name means a pleasant person and I do not deserve that title any longer, as I am very lonely and sad. Things in life look dark for me now. Call me Mara, which means bitter."

It was at the beginning of barley harvest when Naomi and Ruth moved to Bethlehem, and Ruth went at once to work in the fields. It happened that she was in a part that belonged to Boaz, who was a prominent man of wealth as well as a model of goodness, generosity, and purity.

He greeted his reapers today with God's blessing as usual. After their returned greeting, he asked the servant in charge, "Who is that young lady?"

"She is Ruth, the daughter-in-law of Naomi, and came home with her from Moab. From morning until night she has worked here except a little while that she spent in the house."

Then Boaz said to Ruth, "Keep on working in my fields with my maidens, and when you are thirsty the young men will draw you some water."

"Why are you so kind to me?" she asked. "I am a foreigner to you."

"I have heard of what happiness you have brought to Naomi. You have left your father, mother, family, friends and country to come with her to a strange land. May the God whom you have learned to trust reward you."

"I hope I shall please you, my lord," she said.

Boaz asked her to come to lunch and told the young men to be especially kind to her and slip her some barley.

That evening she took it to her mother-in-law and told her the good news of the day, especially Boaz's kindness to her.

"Praise the Lord," said Naomi. "He hath not forgotten us. The man is a near kinsman of my husband."

Ruth spent the days in these same fields and lived with her mother-in-law until the end of a barley and wheat harvest.

One day Naomi told her plan to Ruth. "You must wear your prettiest dress tonight and, after he has eaten and rested, be very nice to him."

She was anxious for the marriage between Ruth and Boaz for two reasons. She wanted Ruth to be happy and also to marry a relative and Israelite. Hebrew marriage customs were the most important of all in the family life. Parents arranging marriages was very sacred to young people in the Orient. It was as though God had done it directly. Therefore, Ruth followed Naomi's advice and carried out her directions that night.

Boaz, who had admired her for some time now, tells her of his love. But because of old Hebrew laws, he had also to say, "There is a nearer kinsman than I who has the first claim to Elimelech's land and his son's widow. This is the custom of Israel and we are very strict about these marriage laws in time of peace. Wait until I can settle this business."

Ruth took home some barely to Naomi and told her what Boaz had said. She listened joyfully and said, "Before night he will carry out his plans."

The next day Boaz took a seat in the gate down in the village and hailed the near kinsman as he passed.

"Come and sit down," he said, and then he also called ten elders of the city and seated them.

"Now I will present my cause. In the presence of these elders I want to ask you to give me the right to buy Elimelech's parcel of ground from Naomi and Ruth, and to marry Ruth the widow of his son. By the Levitical law you have the first claim."

The near kinsman consented and observed the old Israelitish custom at such a time by taking off his shoe and throwing it to the nearest neighbor.

"In the presence of these witnesses," said Boaz, "I have received the right to marry Ruth and to buy the land of Elimelech."

The people at the gate and the witnesses wished them happiness and success. After this the wedding of Boaz and Ruth took place.

A son was born to them and Naomi nursed him. The neighbors named him Obed and congratulated Naomi for her daughter-in-law, who was better to her than seven sons.

Obed was the grandfather of David, who was an ancestor of our Lord, Jesus Christ.

Priscilla's Red-Letter Day.

September 5 in the long, long ago was a red-letter day for blue-eyed, curly-haired Priscilla Crosby, for it was to be her first day in school. How big she felt as she helped mother to get all her belongings ready to take!

"Hurry, Martha and John," she called to her sister and brother as she started down the path to the gate. She was carrying a bright, new tin pail that held her lunch, and, as a special treat, mother had put in a gingerbread man with currant eyes.

Priscilla also had a slate and primer. She had already learned her A B C's, and she could spell such simple words as "cat" and "pat" and "mat". Her new primer was neatly covered with pink muslin to match her pink bonnet. Her slate and pencil were new, and she was very proud of them. Some children did not have a new book and slate, when they started to school, but had to use those that had belonged to other members of the family; so Priscilla had an extra reason to be happy.

"I'm going to try hard never, never to break my slate or my pencil," Priscilla said to mother, when she kissed her good-bye. "I'm going to take very good care of them.

When they got near the schoolhouse they saw boys and girls coming from other directions. Priscilla felt timid. Then Prudence Alden, whose sister Faith was the teacher, came and put her arm very gently around Priscilla, and made her feel better.

When Faith came to the door of the school house and rang the bell which she held in her hand, the children came running and marched inside. Prudence took Priscilla by the hand and led her to her seat in the front row. The little tin pail and the pink bonnet had been hung in the back of the room with those belonging to the other children.

Prudence had a new slate, too, but when she looked for her pencil it was gone. There were tears in her eyes. How could she write her lessons without a pencil?

Priscilla looked at her new, long pencil for a minute. Then she broke it and gave Prudence one piece. When they ate their lunch outside beneath a tree, Priscilla was sitting beside Rebecca Smith. Rebecca did not have anything but cornbread for her lunch, so Priscilla gave her half of the gingerbread man.

"Mother, mother," called Priscilla, as she ran to her after school was out and threw her arms around her neck. "I've got only half a pencil now because I divided it with Prudence. But half a pencil writes as well as a whole pencil. And I gave Rebecca Smith half of the gingerbread man because she only had cornbread for her lunch."

"You have learned a good lesson this day at school," mother said as she kissed Priscilla.—Inez Wilson, in The Sunbeam.

A New Way of Spelling.

By Emma Florence Bush.

Miss Marian, the Primary teacher in the Sunday school, stood by the blackboard. She smiled at the boys and girls who were watching eagerly to see what she was going to do.

"We are going to play a game," she said. "A spelling game, a Sunday-school Spelling Game. I am going to write a word on the board today, and you are all to try to live it all the week; and next Sunday tell me about it. Then we will decide who has won the game. You shall all tell me which one you think it is."

Then in large blue letters she wrote where all of them, even the smallest, could see it plainly.

LOVE

"I think you all know what it means," she said, smiling, but I am going to see this week if you know how to spell it the Sunday-school way."

Then the bell rang for the closing session, and the doors were thrown open into the big Sunday-school room, and the closing exercises began.

Grace and Dorothy walked home together. "I am going to spell it," said Grace. 'I know a lovely way. I had just as lief tell you, Dorothy. I am going to ask Mamma to let me carry something every day to old Mrs. Patch, who lives alone and is so poor. Mamma says the way to show love is to do things for other people. What are you going to do, Dorothy?"

"I don't know yet," answered Dorothy slowly. "I shall have to think," and she left Grace and walked slowly up the steps of her home. "I don't know what I can do to spell it," she whispered. "We haven't lovely things like Grace. Sometimes it is all Mamma can do to keep us looking nice," she says. But she breathed a little prayer:

"Oh, dear God, please show me how to spell Love this week," and putting her sad thoughts resolutely from her, ran into the house as fast as she could.

All that week the Primary Class were busy. Such a record as they had. Some of the mothers became interested and on Sunday they came into the Primary room to hear the children tell what they had done. Grace's Mamma was there, as well as Dorothy's, and with the others waited to hear what the children had to tell.

At last Miss Marian stepped to the Board that still held the word in blue letters.

"Now we will see," she said brightly, "before we try a new word, who has learned best to spell the old one."

Then such a lot of things as the children had to tell. Philip had picked all the sharp things out of the street to save the horse's feet. Mary had adopted a stray kitten she found in her yard. Alice had read an hour every day to her sick aunt. Harold had carried papers for a chum who was sick. Grace had carried something nice to eat every day to Mrs. Patch. Only Dorothy sat very still, and when Miss Marian asked what she had done, answered sadly, "Nothing."

But what was happening? Dorothy's own dear Mama was speaking. "May I say a few words?" she asked, "and tell what a little girl has done this week. Dorothy hasn't had a chance to do some of the nice things the others have, nor anything different from what she does all the time, but she has dusted the sitting room every morning and she has run errands all day. She has taken care of baby brother, she has had daddy's slippers all warm for him when he came home tired at night, and when I had a headache to make it better she made me tea and toast and rubbed my head with cologne. Every day from morning until night her feet and hands have been busy helping, and all the time because this is no more than she always does, she has been grieving because she could not do something special to spell Love, too."

There was a minute's silence when Dorothy's mother stopped speaking, then Miss Marian said gently:

"We are ready to tell who we think has best learned how to spell our word, before I write another on the board. Who do you think has spelled it best?"

"Dorothy, Dorothy," cried the children, and with blushing cheeks Dorothy heard Miss Marian say:

"Yes, I think Dorothy has unconsciously learned the best meaning of the word, and without knowing it has been spelling not only our word Love, but the word that goes with it that we have for this week—

The Treasure-Chest.

In every single home on the island there yawned a great treasure-chest. These chests had been the gifts of the good king who ruled the island.

Greta and Gerald pushed theirs in front of the fireplace in their tiny cottage. It filled the greater part of the room.

"We can use it as a table!" declared Gerald.

"And as a seat, too," cried Greta, smiling at her brother.

They climbed up on the great chest and sat side by side. It was a very comfortable chest on which to sit. At noon they set their bowls of stew and their dish of red apples on the chest. It was a very comfortable chest at which to eat. Besides, it was good to look at, carved as it was, with marvelous fruits and vegetables and trees.

One day a herald looked in at the simple cottage. How he laughed when he saw that Greta and Gerald were using the great chest as a seat and as a table.

"Foolish ones!" he cried. "The chest is to put things in!"

Then he opened up the big lid to show the two children that the chest was empty, but they had been too busy to think much about that. Greta and Gerald spent most of their time helping the folk of the island. Greta taught the tiny children how to read, and Gerald helped the very old men and women to get their fire-wood from the forest. His axe was always ringing merrily.

"Winter is coming on," the herald explained. "It will be a long, hard winter. The king cannot send as much as usual to the island. He therefore sent the chests that you might all save for the time of cold and scarceness."

"Very well," Greta assured the herald. "We will save."

"Never worry," Gerald added. "The chest will be filled."

It was autumn. The woods were all gold and red and brown. The nuts were ripe and the branches of the apple-trees hung to the ground with their burden of fruit. The corn was ripe, and the pumpkins shone in the sun. Never had Greta been so busy. Never before had Gerald been so busy. From morning until night they were away from the cottage. Greta helped sew and cook and gather fruit and vegetables. At Hallowe'en time she helped the children make jack-o-lanterns. Then it was time to learn the Thanksgiving pieces.

"Our poor empty chest!" she said as she walked home with Gerald one evening.

"It will just have to take care of itself, I guess," Gerald declared. "The mothers with wee babies need a great deal of wood."

They ate their frugal supper on the great chest. And the next morning they were up bright and early again. The chest reminded them that they must prepare for winter.

"I shall try to get home early," Gerald promised, "in order to cut some wood for us."

"And I shall try to get home early, too," Greta said. "I must gather some nuts for our winter larder. And I can look for wild honey and dig some late potatoes."

But Gerald was later than ever. And, late as he was, Greta came later still. She ran into the cottage breathlessly.

"The children on the hill needed me," she explained. "I told stories to the big ones and held the baby on my lap until he slept. Then I seeded raisins and helped stir the great holiday cake."

"I was no better," Gerald admitted. "I helped pile wood and store apples and bring in the last of the vegetables out of the frost."

That night the snow came; and when Greta and Gerald looked out of their window they saw a soft carpet of white on the ground. They ate their breakfast almost silently.

"The autumn work is done," said Greta at last. "We have filled all the other chests. Now it is too late to fill ours."

"We must try, anyway," Gerald said quietly. "I will cut some wood, and perhaps you can find some nuts."

The winter woods were beautiful with the dazzling white snow over the ground and on the branches of the trees. The smell of the green pines made Greta breathe deeply.

"I can't feel unhappy, somehow," she said.

"I can't, either," Gerald answered. "I feel very happy."

At dusk they made their way home. A cheery light shone from their window.

"The sunset lights a window as pleasantly as a grate fire," Greta offered.

"But a sunset doesn't send puffs of smoke up the chimney!" Gerald shouted. "Look! Someone has been in our cottage. Someone has made a fire to welcome us home."

The children flung open their door. The fire burned brightly on the hearth, but the little house was empty.

Greta and Gerald sat down on the chest in front of the cheerful blaze. They began to slide.

"The chest tilts," laughed Greta. "The cover isn't securely closed."

"It won't close," declared Gerald, very red in the face from trying to force the cover down. "Why, its full!"

He and Greta lifted the cover. Then a long "Oh!" escaped them.

"Cakes, and fruits, and vegetables!" Greta cried. "Knitted gloves and sweaters! Oh! Oh! And honey and canned berries!"

"Wood piled in the lean-to!" cried Gerald, looking about. "Who did it?"

"Here's a message on a piece of birch-bark," Greta said, her voice trembling with excitement. "It says, 'A part of what you have given—give, and it shall be given unto you'."

"Our dear neighbors!" Gerald said. "They love us."

"And we love them," added Greta.—Junior World.

established several years ago.

Dr. Lilliefors, who is now in residence in St. John's, is a graduate of Harvard and Ludwig University, of Giessen, Germany. The college will open October 15.

Fiftieth Anniversary.

The fiftieth anniversary of the institution of the Rev. Gardiner C. Tucker, D. D., as rector of St. John's Church, Mobile, Alabama, will be celebrated the first Sunday in September, and September 2 and 3. The Wardens and Vestry have issued invitations to the celebration.

Calls Accepted.

The Rev. Charles William Sydnor, rector of St. Luke's Church, Wheeling, W. Va., since 1934, announced his acceptance of a call to the rectorship of Christ Church at Pulaski and Grace Church at Radford, in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, and took up this new work August 15. Mr. Sydnor is affectionately remembered in his old diocese, since he was rector of Tazewell Parish from 1908 to 1911, and rector of St. Andrew's Church at Clifton Forge from 1919 to 1924. A native of Petersburg, he attended William and Mary College and the Theological Seminary in Virginia. He was ordained deacon in 1908 and priest in 1909. Besides the parishes above mentioned, he has served at Boydton, Va., and Christ Church, Richmond, and was connected with the Army Y. M. C. A., at Camp Lee during the World War. The Sydnors will reside in Pulaski.

The Rev. William Francis Burke, who was ordained to the diaconate by Bishop Jett at the Theological Seminary in Virginia on the morning of June 7, has been appointed deacon-in-charge of Moore Parish, Campbell County, Va. This parish includes the following churches: St. Peter's, Altavista; St. Andrew's Mission, R. F. D., Altavista; Good Shepherd, Evington; and Christ Church, Gladys. Mr. Burke is a native of Amherst, and his father still resides there. After completing his course at the University of Virginia in 1932, Mr. Burke entered the Theological Seminary in Virginia, and graduated last June. The Rev. C. S. Ball, D. D., presented Mr. Burke for ordination. Important events followed each other with great rapidity in Mr. Burke's career. Graduating with his class on the morning of June 6, being ordained to the diaconate on the morning of June 7, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Vaught of Jacksonville, Fla., on the afternoon of June 7, at three o'clock in the Seminary Chapel. The ceremony was performed by Bishop Jett; the best man being Morris Elliott of the senior class at the Seminary. Mrs. Burke is a daughter of the late Dr. C. H. Vaught of Louisville, Ky. She was born in Richmond, Ky., but up until the time of her father's death she lived in Louisville.

Clerical Appointments.

Appointment of the Rev. A. M. McLaughlin as priest-in-charge of St. Timothy's Church, Chicago, succeeding the Rev. Frank R. Myers, has been made by Bishop Stewart. The change is effective September 1. The past two summers Fr. McLaughlin has been in charge of Church of the Redeemer, Hyde Park. He comes from the Diocese of Iowa. He has been since 1929 priest-in-charge of the Central Iowa Mission, consisting of St. Stephen's, Newton; Grace Church, Boone, and St. Paul's Collegiate Chapel, Grinnell College, where he was pastor of Church students. He also was for a time at Grace Church, Cedar Rapids. Fr. Myers holds rank of chaplain-major in the Illinois National Guard and will continue in that capacity.

Announcement is made of the election of the Rev. Thomas K. Rogers of Holy Innocents' Mission, Chicago, to be assistant to the Rev. Dr. Herbert W. Prince at the Church of the Holy Spirit, Lake Forest.

The Rev. B. Norman Burke, rector of St. Luke's Church, Dixon, Ill., has taken charge of St. Peter's Church, Grand Detour, along with his duties at Dixon. He replaces the Rev. DeVon Ellsworth, rector of St. Peter's Church, Sycamore.

Deaths.

Harold Goodwin, Esq.

Burial services were held in the Church of The Saviour, Philadelphia, August 20, for Harold Goodwin, Esq., prominent layman of the Church in the Diocese of Pennsylvania and widely known throughout the general Church in connection with his activity and leadership in the Evangelical Education Society, which furnishes aid to students for the ministry and also prepares and distributes evangelical literature. Mr. Goodwin died August 17, following an attack of pneumonia. He was in his eighty-fifth year, having been born in 1850 in Brunswick, Maine.

A prominent member of the Philadelphia bar for many years, Mr. Goodwin throughout his life maintained an active interest in Church matters and served on a number of important commissions and committees and was frequently called into consultation in legal matters. He was life member of the Evangelical Education Society, having become connected with it in 1887, serving for many years as General Counsel and at the time of his death was its Honorary General Counsel. For a period of forty years, until 1932, Mr. Goodwin was a Trustee of the Philadelphia Divinity School, in which his father, the late Rev. Dr. Daniel R. Goodwin, was at one time Professor of Systematic Divinity and of which he was Dean from 1868 to 1883.

In addition to his connection with the Evangelical Education Society and the Philadelphia Divinity School, Mr. Goodwin was for many years a communicant of the Church of The Saviour and for some years served as a vestryman. He was also a member of the vestry of St. Martin's Church, Marcus Hook, one of the old Colonial Parishes in the diocese, and was a Deputy from this parish to all Diocesan Conventions from 1909 to and including 1921. Throughout his years of devotion to the Church, Mr. Goodwin was for many years actively interested in the development and extension of the Church's work among the colored people in the diocese.

Mr. Goodwin is survived by two daughters and two sons. Interment was in the Woodlands Cemetery, Philadelphia.

The Rev. Edward Horace Cleveland, M. D., retired priest, died at his home in Middleboro, Mass., August 5, at the age of seventy-nine.

He was born in Cleveland, Ohio, in 1855, the son of Horace Gillette and Anna Maria Knapp Cleveland. Dr. Cleveland graduated from Racine College in 1878 and from the General Theological Seminary in 1881. He served as rector of parishes in Ridgewood, N. J., New Bedford, and Middleboro, Mass. During his years of curacy in New York City he studied medicine, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1915.

The funeral servce was held in the Church of Our Saviour, Middleboro, August 8, the Rev. William C. Kilpatrick, rector, officiating.

The Rev. Theodore Bogert Foster, retired priest, died July 28 in Rutland, Vt., at the age of seventy-six.

The funeral service was conducted in Trinity Church, Rutland, on the morning of July 31, by a seminary classmate, the Rev. Benjamin S. Sanderson, rector of St. Mark's Church, North Tonawanda, N. Y., and the Rev. Morgan Ashley, rector.

Interment was in Greenwood Cemetery, Brooklyn, N. Y., the Rev. Harry Bogert, of Huntington, L. I., an uncle of the deceased, officiating.

The Rev. Mr. Foster was born in New York City, the son of Dr. S. Conant and Mary Bogert Foster. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree at Columbia University in 1879, and later graduated from General Theological Seminary. After his ordination in 1882 he served brief curacies at St. James' Church, New York City, and St. Luke's, Brooklyn. After rectorships in Great Barrington, Mass., and Pawtucket, he was called to Trinity Church, Rutland. From there he went to Grace Church, Kansas City, Mo., and then to Immanuel Church ,La Grange, Ill.

From La Grange he was called to succeed the Rev. Dr. Francis J. Hall as Professor of Dogmatic and Moral Theology at the Western Theological Seminary, a position he filled until his retirement in 1929.

The Rev. Dr. Maximilian Lindsay Kellner, Professor-Emeritus of the Literature and Interpretation of the Old Testament in the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, died suddenly August at his home, Cambridge, Mass., after a critical illness of about three weeks and after two or three years of failing health.

The funeral service was held in St. John's Memorial Chapel of the Episcopal Theological School, August 8. Bishop Sherrill, of Massachusetts; the Very Rev. Dr. Henry B. Washburn, dean of the Episcopal Theological School, and the Rev. Dr. Edward Staples Drown, Professor-Emeritus of Systematic Divinity in the school, officiated.

Dr. Kellner was born in Detroit, Mich., May 21, 1862, the son of Karl Frederick and Rose Mary Kellner. He was graduated from Hobart College in 1881, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He received his Master of Arts degree in 1884 and that of Doctor of Sacred Theology from the same college in 1895. From Harvard he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1885 and Master of Arts in 1886. He was graduated from the Episcopal Theological School in 1885, with the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. In 1922 he received the degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology from the school. He was made deacon in 1883 by Bishop Perry, and advanced to the priesthood in 1885, also by Bishop Perry.

From 1887 to 1891 he was instructor of Hebrew in the school. From 1891 to 1898 he was Assistant Professor of Old Testament Language. From 1898 to 1907 he was Professor of Old Testament Language. From 1908 to 1922 he was Professor of the Literature and Interpretation of the Old Testament. In 1922, at his own request, he was retired on account of ill health. From that year until his death he was professor-emeritus. Thus, for over forty years, in one capacity or another, he was closely connected with the Episcopal Theological School.

Dr. Kellner, June 28, 1905, married Mrs. Arthur Brooks, the former Elizabeth Willard, widow of the late Rev. Arthur Brooks, former rector of Calvary Church, New York City. Mrs. Kellner died April 10, 1916. There were no children.

Dr. Kellner was the author of several important books. Among these are: The Prophecies of Isaiah, The Assyrian Monuments Illustrating the Sermons of Isaiah, The Standard Inscription of Ashurnazirpal, An Outline Study on the History of the Hebrews, An Outline Study of the Old Testament Literature and Religion, and a work on Magic and Religion. Dr. Kellner had just completed the manuscript of this last book at the time of his death.

The Rev. Samuel J. Lee, rector of St. James' Church, San Francisco, died suddenly August 4 as he stood before the altar celebrating the Holy Communion.

He was seventy-four years old and had been rector of St. James' Parish for thirty-six years. St. James' was his only parish.

The Rev. Mr. Lee, born in England, is survived by a daughter, three brothers, and one sister. His wife died in March.

The funeral service was conducted at St. James' Church August 6 by Bishop Parsons, of California, assisted by the Very Rev. Dr. J. W. Gresham, of Grace Cathedral, and the Rev. W. M. Bours. Many of the clery were in the procession, and many more were in the large congregation.

The Rev. Ralph Brouwer Pomeroy, priest in charge since 1918 of Holy Innocents' Church, West Orange, N. J., died in Bar Harbor, Me., August 14. He was fifty-eight years old.

He was born at Nyack, N. Y., November 18, 1876, a son of John B. and Augusta Leonard Pomeroy. He was graduated from Columbia University in 1898 and received his Bachelor of Divinity degree from the General Theological Seminary in 1901.

The Rev. Mr. Pomeroy was ordained deacon in 1901 and priest the next year. He was curate of Emmanuel Church, Newport, R. I., from 1902 to 1906 and then was curate at Trinity Church, Princeton, N. J., until 1913, when he was appointed rector.

The Rev. Mr. Pomeroy was lecturer and later Professor of Ecclesiastical Polity and Canon Law at the General Theological Seminary from 1919 to 1925. He was lecturer on Religion at Princeton University from 1914 to 1917 and Associate Professor of Religion at Columbia University 1920 to 1923.

He was warden of the New York Training School for Deaconesses from 1922 to 1924.

His widow, the former Florence Louise Walton, survives.

KAPLAN
REPRODUCTIONS

Kaplan reproductions are made in Boston where authentic reproductions, like originals, have been a part of the New England soil for many generations. These craftsmen producing Kaplan reproductions, in most instances, are descendants of original (antique) craftsmen. Working in fine wood, making fine joints, staining and polishing furniture is a part of their very life. It is an inheritance handed down from father to son—a thing that cannot be purchased and not possible except that it is a part of the man's character which is put into his work. Kaplan's reproductions will be the antiques of future generations.

These are shown in connection with our Interior Decorating Studios on the 3rd floor.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

Everything transitory is parable.—Goethe.

All life is loss; for it delays
The vision of Thy face.
Yet nothing, Lord! is lost to him
Who hath not lost Thy grace.
—Wm. Faber.

"Sunshine let it be, or frost,
Storm or calm, as Thou shalt choose,
Though Thine every gift were lost,
Then Thyself we could not lose."

One should not be concerned not to be understood of men. One should be concerned not to understand man.—Confucius.

"That Thou canst love a wretch like me,
Yet be the God Thou art,
Is darkness to my intellect,
But sunshine to my heart."

"To have a deliberate purpose of love and to cling to it through storm, through the beckoning of summer fields, is to follow Christ."

The truth of Christ is slowly subduing the mind of man unto itself. Never was His authority so great as it is now. —Principal Fairbairn.

God's laws are not an unpitying machine to grind us to dust and ashes; they lead at last to such compassion as men once saw in the miracles of the Man Christ Jesus.—Selected.

What is this which flashes in upon me and thrills my heart without wounding it? I tremble, feeling that I am unlike Him; I exult, feeling that I am like Him.—St. Augustine.

All Christian experience comes to be but more and more of pressure of Christ's life on ours.—Phillips Brooks.

Christ said to His disciples, "Forgive your enemies." It must have sounded unintelligible, impossible. An enemy is often a man who would push you into hell itself with less compunction than he would kill a fly. How can one be expected to forgive an offender so venomous as that? The only answer is that Christ did it.—Bishop Slattery.

What is our proof of immortality? Not the analogies of nature—the resurrection of nature from a winter grave, or the emancipation of the butterfly. No; the life of the spirit is the evidence. —John Ruskin.

One sort of prayer is only in the heart, without speech, with great rest and quietness, both of soul and body. A pure heart it behoveth him to have that shall pray after this manner.—Hilton.

ODE TO THE MOUNTAINS

By Dr. Grover, Charleston, S. C.

"I need their height to lure my thoughts afar;
I need their strength to meet the strain of life;
I need their calm to give me time to think;
Their faith to face the littleness and strife."

Truly the mountains touch my soul in this exquisite way.

A HOLIDAY MESSAGE

The following lines hang in the Guest Chamber in a seaside home:

Come here and rest a while—
Enjoy the beauty of the sea, and sky, and land;
Listen to Nature's voice;
And in it hear the voice
Of Him who mid the raging storm said,
"Peace be still."
So let His peace fill thy poor trembling heart—
And strengthened by His presence
Go to thy work again;
And thank Him for the call that bade thee
"Come and Rest Awhile."

We should like to take this opportunity to urge those subscribers who have not paid their subscriptions to do so by return mail. The Southern Churchman is making a valiant fight and it is a terrific drain on our treasury to have to send out some thousands of bills each month for past due accounts. The bills are small, but in the aggregate they amount to a large sum, which we need to carry on the work. We shall appreciate tremendously your co-operation.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Essential Thing in Christianity?

Mr. Editor:

Apropos of the question asked by the Guardian of London and printed in your issue of August 10, as to "What is the Essential thing in Christianity?"

Is not the essential thing in Christianity this: In the Incarnation of the Son of God we have the clear revelation of God's purpose in man's creation and also the Way by which that purpose is made possible of fulfilment for every man—an ever living, continuing historical fact.

Arthur R. Price.

The above is a correction of the letter printed in the issue of August 24, in which the word eventual was unfortunately used instead of essential.—Ed.

Have You Thought About It?

August 26, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

How many members of the Episcopal Church have read the paragraph on the cover of The Spirit of Missons for August? What do you think it signifies? Have you thought about it? I have. In what degree does it concern me—you? Have I, have you, been giving to Missions through the parish envelope, through the little Blue box? Is that fulfilling the obligation for me—or for you? I wonder. There are men in the world of big business who have stated publicly that their financial affairs did not prosper until after they began to tithe. Tithe! It is an old-fashioned word, isn't it! Ridiculous! So out of date. But—when I read that ominous paragraph on the cover of The Spirit of Missions for August, there came into my mind old familiar words—

"Will a man rob God?" Wherein have we robbed Thee? In tithes and offerings. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my storehouse, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts; if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. . . ."

I mean this literally, because I know it works. Begin with tithing for the week. Then the month, without thinking of the sum total for the year. You and I have nothing to do with that. He calls us to serve Him day by day, and "prove me now herewith, saith the Lord."

Let everyone who reads this come down in mind and heart before God whom we profess to worship, and say, "Lord, what wouldst Thou have me to do?" and then resolved with Habakkuk, "I will stand upon my watch and set me upon the tower and will watch to see what he will say unto me and what I shall answer when I am reproved."

The Protestant Episcopal Church—"for others, last!"

Rediscovered The Southern Churchman.

August 27, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

A layman prominent in my parish recently expressed his appreciation of the Southern Churchman. Among other things, he commented on the fact that the articles in the paper are so readable. This was a very pertinent remark to me, inasmuch as I have often wondered why our people are so lax about taking Church papers. It may be that our people are apathetic toward the Church and her life, and it may be that the Church papers do not attempt to make their material "readable." When the laymen are more interested in the Church and the Church papers are more interested in the laymen, there will be a larger circulation of our papers.

For myself, I am delighted to rediscover the Southern Churchman. I am so glad that the paper has adopted a better attitude; one of friendliness in the desire to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. The article by Dr. Kinsolving, "The Witness and Genius of the Anglican Communion Today", is helpful both in the matter it presents and the attitude it displays. Let us have more enthusiasm for, and appreciation of, our great Anglican heritage. It is this zeal that makes a paper "readable".

With best wishes,

Wm. T. Holt.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., SEPTEMBER 7, 1935. No. 36.

In The Beginning.

The middle of September to the first of October is generally the time when the average parish begins the intense program of the year. Plans are laid and activities organized. It is really, for church work, the beginning.

If during the Summer the work suggested by the Forward Movement has been a bit neglected, now is the time for every parish and mission to think over ways and means to put this ideal program into effect. Just because everything suggested has not been worked out in detail will be no excuse, and if we really want our Church to go forward, it will only do so when each parish attempts to bring to the individual the realization that religion is a serious thing and that we no longer intend to allow inefficiency to rob the Christian Church of its real task.

What should be the ideal program for this coming year? We believe first of all we should start with the diocesan approach. The Church will depend upon leaders and the professional leader is the clergyman.

Only too many of our clergy are blinded with the methods of the past. The Church has probably managed itself with the equipment and organization of a past age more than any other institution. If a business house depended upon hand-copy clerks and refused to use modern machines for its office work, it would be comparable to the average parish, where the methods which proved successful in the eighties still remain as the best we have discovered. No wonder many of the clergy are discouraged. They never have been taught anything better, and their best efforts are thwarted, because they are not fitted to the needs of the modern day.

So it does not seem too much to ask every diocese to have a clergy school where the fine courses proposed by the Forward Movement may be reasonably taught and more modern methods introduced to clergy who are having a struggle with the problems of the present.

Of course, the vestries in the parishes must be reached also. The very reason for the existence of a parish is a mystery to many vestrymen. This is not because they are not good men, but again, they have been neglected, and in this busy changing world in which we all live, a real challenge to the vestrymen has not been made. How many, for instance, would know what a survey might reveal about the neighborhood in which the church is located? How many realize that in an every member canvass we are not asking people for money, but rather such a canvass properly is an educational campaign? How many vestrymen are capable of educating the people whom they have been elected to serve? So, in each parish it would seem to be an ideal to have an institute or group conference for laymen as a means of showing the needs of the people and educating them to the program of the Church.

We hear a good bit today about the lack of faith amongst the members of the Church. It is probably true that there is a lack of faith, but the sad part is that much of it can be attributed to the fact that the people have been left in ignorance of what real faith can be. Childhood stories and children's prayers constitute the only religious education that has ever been given to the average communicant.

A teaching mission which can be called by another and more attractive name, such as "parish conference," is suggested by the Forward Movement. In one diocese we know of, certain experiments have been made along this line. In many parishes it has been proved successful, and a simple but efficient teaching series with opportunity for discussion dealing with the ABC's of religion has resulted in more earnest worshippers and a more zealous group of parishioners.

Of course, such a teaching mission cannot be a success without hard work in preparation. A visitation campaign efficiently planned and earnestly carried out has proved to be the best method of getting those of the "outer fringe" of the parish to attend—and such needed the mission particularly. But part of the planning for success of anything involves the consecration to hard work that will be a necessary part of all that is successful.

The Forward Movement is also helping with this matter of strengthening of faith in another way that will prove most important if proper cooperation is given by the parishes. Cheap and easily available editions of great books dealing with vital religious subjects are to be provided. Such names as the late Bishop Woods of Winchester and Archbishop Temple will be placed within the reach of the most humble pocketbook, and a nation that spends thousands of dollars a year for books about golf and bridge can be encouraged to read about those things that come first.

But the greatest thing any of us can do in planning the beginning of a great year is to overcome the discouragement of the past. A young clergyman recently

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Transform the League Into a Spiritual Agency.

Editorial in The Church of England Newspaper, August 9, 1935.

Through the machinery of the League of Nations the Italio-Abyssinian dispute has been checked for the time being. It is still far too early to say that war has been prevented. As Mr. Eden pointed out in his broadcast address from Geneva on Saturday: "For the first time in the dispute provision has been made for all aspects of it, not only the Wal-wal incident, to come before the Council of the League." Mr. Eden went on to say—and we wish to emphasize his words: "If there had been no League what would have been the position now? Almost certainly hopeless. . . . Whatever the outcome of the dispute . . . let us resolve to stand by the League and give it our loyalty and unswerving support."

That is sound advice which we hope will be followed by all concerned. We feel, however, that the League needs transforming into a great spiritual agency permeated with the principles of Christ and guided by the Holy Spirit. Not until this happens will the League be able to fulfil the purpose for which it was created. Again, this cannot happen until the League representatives are changed men and are prepared to test every question by the standards of Christ. Some people will say: "This is a fine ideal, but it is impossible of attainment." Why should it be? The Holy Spirit is as powerful today as ever He was when He has "free course and is glorified." This is where the Church of Christ comes in. Unfortunately our devil-inspired divisions and our lack of faith cripple the Body of Christ so that it is incapable of functioning up to capacity, and thus statesmen and diplomats are "beating the air." Meanwhile let us all pray and work that peace may be preserved.

"The Menace to Peace."

The Archbishop of Canterbury writes in the Canterbury Diocesan Gazette:

"The dispute between Italy and Abyssinia is a menace to peace which must needs cause the deepest anxiety. Indeed, it affects so gravely not only the relations of these two States but the influence and credit of the League of Nations, and there, the prospects of settled peace throughout the world, that any words about it must be spoken or written with reserve, while every endeavor is being made to prevent the outbreak of war. But it is idle to conceal the concern with which all who care for peace and the respect due to treaties must view the action of a State pledged to refrain from resort to war as an instrument of national policy in massing armed forces around another State, precisely and expressly on grounds of national policy.

"The people of this country are bound to Italy by ties of long friendship. This friendship would be grievously strained if the powerful leader of that nation should prove to be unwilling to submit the dispute to an impartial tribunal and to refrain from any acts which would commit it to the horrible arbitrament of war, and would imperil the structure of the world's peace.

"Meanwhile it is the manifest duty of all who believe in the over-ruling providence of God and in the place and power of prayer, to unite in prayer that the spirit of God may at this present time guide the statesmen of the world and particularly the Council of the League of Nations into the ways of justice and peace"

Cooperation in the Home Church.

The Church of England Newspaper, August 9, 1935.

The Conference of Missionary Societies of Great Britain has issued the report of its annual gathering at Swanwick, and we want to draw attention to one item in it. A resolution was adopted dealing with Christian witness and fellowship in Evangelism. This arose out of reports presented to the Conference by Methodists, Baptists, Anglicans, and others on the new adventures in home evangelism through the missionary forces of the Churches. The resolution closes by saying: "The Conference would welcome consultation with the leaders of the home Churches to consider these matters together."

It is a well-known fact that progress in cooperative work in the mission field is a long way in advance of cooperation among the home Churches. This has been noticeable in the case of South India. The home Churches have not grown in fellowship as the overseas Churches have, and the proposals for reunion in South India found a large proportion of the home constituencies unprepared for so far-reaching a step as a united Church in South India. There is sometimes an air of unreality in the way home constituencies demand unity, fellowship, the absence of overlapping and complete co-ordination of work from the younger Churches in the mission field, when as yet we in England can scarcely claim to have begun to set our own house in order. This resolution from the Conference is therefore very timely. If the representatives of the Churches and missionary societies can gather together frankly to face these and similar issues it ought to be fruitful of much good.

The Lambeth Conference of 1930 recommended cooperative evangelistic work in the home Church. After five years there seems to be little desire either in the Anglican or the Free Churches for such cooperation. Members of the younger Churches overseas now frequently visit England, and naturally they ask why we demand from them a standard of service we are not prepared to face ourselves. The Churches are summoned today not to the discovery of a formula, but rather to common action in winning the world for Jesus Christ.

The Cinema Christian Council.

The Church of England Newspaper, August 9, 1935.

The formation of a Cinema Christian Council, under the presidency of the Archbishop of Canterbury, should meet a long-felt need. It has for its objective the promotion of the practical use and development of the cinematograph in the cause of religion, education, recreation, and social and moral welfare at home and throughout the Empire. It hopes to act as a clearing house for receiving and distributing information about the use of films in church, mission hall, school and club. Such an organization, broadly based as this is, will have the support of all the Churches.

Too seldom is the Christian Church able to speak with one voice on big issues. It has now the opportunity of co-ordinating and in a considerable measure of directing the influence of the Christian Church in relation to the cinematograph. Parochial clergy will watch with close interest the work of the Council. Films have a very practical use for religious purposes and we are glad to learn that the Council is planning to guide the production of religious films. If the representatives of the Church can cooperate in this scheme it ought to be able to raise the whole moral standard of the cinema.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

"Who Will Go For Us?"

There is an article in Harper's Magazine for September, entitled, "The Conquest of Outer Space," in which is given an account of what is being done to prepare the way for voyaging out into space and returning at will. This is not a mere fantastic dream, for men of science are studying carefully the question involved in giving to these strange ideas a practical application. To quote from the article, we read as follows: "Vaguely in answer to these questions looms the astroplane of the future, the ship of space, its form limned in by the men who are laying the foundations of the coming of astronautics. Yet to visualize it is difficult, for one must adust oneself to a mode of operation entirely new. Aeronautics, ballistics and celestial mechanics will be combined in its design. A little of the airplane, more of the proectile, and a great deal of the asteroid, the star-ship will be quite literally, like nothing on earth." This gives a good idea of what is going on among those who are planning for the conquest of outer space. It is difficult to see what these adventurers of the future expect to gain for us, even if they are successful in creating so-called astroplanes and by their means cruising throughout the solar system and coming back again in safety.

Spiritual Adventurers.

It does, however, make one wish that the same quenchless spirit of adventure might manifest itself in our spiritually-minded young people, not, however, to explore the material universe, but that other realm wherein lie illimitable treasures which might enrich and transform our earthly conditions beyond the utmost reach of our imaginations. Lyman Abbott, for many years the editor of the New York Outlook, and a frequent lecturer at many of our colleges and universities, made an illuminating statement in one of his editorials shortly before his death. It is as follows:—"Nothing does this age need more than a rediscovery of the spiritual universe.'" That was some years ago, but the need is even greater now than it was then, since civilization sems to have gotten beyond the control of our statesmen and urgently needs help from a higher source to save it from self-destruction.

The Vital Question of the Hour.

The question arises here, and it is one of vital importance, how can Christianity be reinforced with spiritual power to such an extent as to enable it to control the forces which seem to be working toward man's undoing? We know that there is an inexhaustible supply of this power in the spiritual world and that God has placed it at our disposal for the express purpose of making this world what He wants it to be. Did not Christ say, before His Ascension:—"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. . . . And lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world?" Who can measure the amount of power which God is willing to give to His children if they will but yield themselves unreservedly to His control and guidance? He has shown, in the case of many chosen vessels of His power, what He can do in influencing whole nations, and in some cases, mankind generally. There is no doubt whatever that the number of those chosen vessels could be indefinitely increased if there was a more general desire on the part of Christian people to be similarly used by God for the blessing of the world.

An Infinitesimal Chance as Compared With an Absolute Certainty.

Those who may hereafter venture forth into outer space will know very well that the chance of their safe return will be an extremely insignificant one, at any rate in the case of the first adventurers. But there is no such doubt involved in the case of those who seek to explore the possibilities of bringing back power and blessings from the spiritual world. If they make their venture of faith with the sincere desire to benefit their fellowmen and have faith to believe that God is willing to use them "exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think," then there is no telling what benefactors they may be to humanity.

The Perfect Gifts From Above.

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of Lights with whom is no variableness, neither shadof turning." "The perfect gifts" are those which only God has the power to bestow, and since there is no variableness with Him, He is just as ready to give now as He was in the days of St. John and St. Paul. Our Lord said on one occasion:—"The Kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." This is a direct invitation to His followers to break through the barriers of conventional Christianity and win the great prizes which await those who dare to seek the highest and best rewards which the Kingdom of God has to give. "Who will go for us?" and seek to open the way to that which God holds in store for those who have the faith to be sure and certain that "all things are possible to him that believeth."

The Time Is Short.

It is strange that it should be left to a man who has entered his ninth decade to call for volunteers to bring heaven and earth nearer together, but the time is short, and the "night time cometh when no man can work." It is not for the old but for the young to enter in and take possession. The old, like Moses, may see the Promised Land afar off, but it is not for them to enter in. A glorious enterprise awaits the new generation, a generation which should look out upon the world as it is now, with a divine discontent, and nerve itself to use its utmost endeavor to make a new world out of the old, and a New Day out of the night of gloom and disaster, which it should determine must pass away forever.

From the vast height what can we bring
To bless this weary earth?
What glories past imagining
To give it second birth?
To be the home of sons of God,
For Christ's own sacred feet have trod
Its fields to give them heavenly worth.

Let us with joy then enter in,
Invited by His gracious hand;
All things are yours, no need to win
The heights of heaven, on which we stand.
Take what thou wilt, His choicest boon
Shall give to earth a brighter noon
And make the whole world Beulah Land.

City of God

By CLIFFORD L. STANLEY,

Professor in the Virginia Theological Seminary.

OUR TEXT is one of the most colorful and magnificent in that Book which is spangled with great truths. It is this: "They shall bring the glory and the honor of the nations into it." (Rev. 21:26.) The place where they will bring the wealth of the nations in this splendid prophecy is the Kingdom of God. And by the glory and the honor of the nations I understand this promise to mean every human thing—all people, all activities, all relationships.

Certainly the glory and the honor of the nations need the Kingdom. Sometimes men deny this need of the things of earth for the Kingdom, without intending to do it. They may do so by denying the possibility of relationship. They define the Kingdom as unrelated to this world. According to this view the Kingdom is for some other world, some transcendental, far-off realm for which men strain their eyes and which strangely agitates and disquiets their souls, a realm the very thought of which brings tears to their eyes. And according to this view the Kingdom is for some other time; it begins with death, when this life is done, or it begins at some long deferred general resurrection, when the trumpets shall sound and the earth and the sea shall give up their dead. If the Kingdom of God is for some future time, for some other place, then of course it has no relation with the glory of the nations nor with their honor, nor can it have, so it is irrelevant to talk of their need of it.

Then there is the group who think that the Kingdom and this world do have much to do with each other. The Kingdom is a dream for the life of this world. This view raises a number of problems which the man escapes who believes that the Kingdom lies beyond Jordan. Here is one problem. If the Kingdom is a dream for this world, has the dream come true? If one says the dream has come true then he has lowered his ideal so that it fits this seething and angry mess that lies all around us as empires topple, red carnage stalks abroad, people's bodies collapse from under-nourishment and their souls disintegrate from unemployment. God forbid that this abomination of desolation should be the Kingdom of God. Yet, if a man believes that the Kingdom is for this world and also believes that it is almost entirely unrealized, then is his torment just begun. He is like the man in the oriental torture who is tied to two horses who are then driven apart, tearing him limb from limb. He who sees the vision of a world in which the Kingdom of God has prevailed and then sees this drunken, reeling horror of our actual world—he who sees them both and loves both Kingdom and world, this man will find that his soul will be torn asunder, lifted up to the heights of God by the Kingdom, dragged down to the abyss of hell and ruin by the world. This is the Cup and this is the Cross. The Kingdom has not prevailed, but it ought to, for the world and the Kingdom are made for each other, even as a man for a maid. So he who holds this view must throw himself into labors for this great end as long as he shall have breath. His view of truth, of the Will of God, drives him nor gives him rest whether happy or discouraged, whether strong or weak, through darkness and through light, beyond seas and over mountains until the end—and then there is no end. For He must reign and God must be all and in all. Thus the man whose belief is such will go on until he is exhausted, and then, like the Arab horse who runs until he is exhausted and when he is utterly tired breaks into an easy trot, so the man whose Lord and Friend is God labors until he is spent and prays that in the mercy of God and in the marvellous constitution of his soul there may be some blessed second wind awaiting him when he has done all. There is still another kind of problem which he must face who believes the Kingdom is a dream for this world. Will the Kingdom ever prevail and will the dream ever come true? It may and that will be bliss beyond dream. It may not, and that will be ultimate tr for it is the failure of creation. Such an outcome means that men do not qualify and are thrown on the scrap heap of the universe. "Outer darkness," "Death"—these are the New Testament words for such an outcome.

SOME PEOPLE recoil from this conclusion. Their heart cannot bear it. But I see no escape from such a burden in a moral world, and if we would have relationships we must be willing to accept whatever they entail. If the loved one is good and great this means joy for us as long as the goodness and greatness last. If the loved one crumbles and sinks, this means grief as long as we love grief as long as the sin lasts. We may as well face it. No matter what other feelings we have, it we love a sinner, we hurt. As long as we live we shall hurt, until the sin is swallowed up in victory. If our love encompasses a nation, an age, a race, a world, and these go down into permanent destruction, we have laid ourselves open to a permanent hurt. There is no statue of limitations in connection with personal relations. Who can drink of this cup? It is the price of love. God showed Himself willing to pay this cost of creation by the very fact that He has created man. Man's very existence is a proof that God is love. Are we willing to be like Him and follow in His train?

Some other people will hear no talk of any failure of creation, for another reason. They will tell you that the Kingdom of God must come because God cannot lose. At this point we must proceed carefully. No, God cannot lose, but we must remember that human wills are free. And this fact determines what God's victory is to be like. If men refuse the Kingdom, then God must destroy them. This is a victory if you want to call it such. But it does not give God any joy to show His power in judgment and in destruction. Suppose you tell your child that the fire burns, and shortly afterwards he comes to you with his hand burned and hurt. He proves that you are right, but the proof hurts rather than pleases. Thus God always prevails, but, when men refuse, His power is shown in judgment and His truth is vindicated in their ruin. This very depression is a revelation of God's judgment on a selfish and heartless social system. But such an outcome gives Him no joy. Sometimes I think that the last word and final deed of God in this world's history so far has always been destruction and judgment. His last word to Rome, to the Pharaohs, to Babylon, is "Thou hast been weighed in the balances and found wanting." God always wins but sometimes men lose. Anyone who means that God always wins in the sense of the happy ending to novel or movie is ignoring the plain statement of history. Yet, the future need not be as the past. Men may accept the Kingdom and then God's victory will result in the kingdoms of this world becoming the Kingdom of our Lord and His Christ and He shall reign for ever and ever.

Someone will say, "This view really takes the issues of history out of God's hands and places them in man's." But does it do so any more than God has done already by giving free will to man? We are not saying that man brings the Kingdom any more than we would say that a man can marry himself. Another person must be found who will give the gift of a life and so make possible the miracle of marriage. In this case you cannot have the reign or Kingdom of God without God. On the other hand no one can marry a man except he be willing. It takes two to make a real marriage. So God brings the Kingdom—to whoever will receive it. Remember the feast in the parable—that is one side of the matter. Remember the guests who would not come—that is the other side of the matter. When men boast themselves it is well to remember that God brings the Kingdom; when men resort to the kind of faith which lets God do it all and lightly assume the inevitable coming of a better day, it is well to remember that the Kingdom will never come without our consent, nor rear its towering pinnacles without our cooperation.

For these reasons we must object to a certain view which is very popular these days. This view holds that progress is inevitable, that the world is getting better and better, that evolution will gradually grind out its most irresistible blessings, until we find ourselves in the Promised Land. Just look what this view does for us. It relieves us of uncertainty as to the final outcome. It is a very comfortable view, good for making souls fat and sleepy. It asks no Cross, no rigors, nor heroism, no supreme offering of love. Furthermore, it is content with the present. We are about as far along as we can be. The soul can take its ease; God asks of it no sharing of a tragic grief for a lost world, but only a smug vote of easy confidence. Anything which happens to be wrong we can dismiss as a sort of inevitable evolutionary profit-and-loss, the necessary failure of the unfit in a world where the fit necessarily survive. This view asks one to do his part but it encourages no titanic and soul-stretching labors. In fact, it frowns on them as apt to be more disrupting than constructive. It is a view for a world of little men, a world grown old and cautious and easy-going, a world where all the heroes are dead. In the last analysis, it presents mankind an easy chair and says, "Sit there until gradual and irresistible evolution has brought in the millennium." This kind of evolution denies the will and makes a travesty of the moral nature of history. For this reason I hold it to be the deadliest heresy of our time.

THE KINGDOM, then, is intended for the world, which is well, because the world sorely needs the Kingdom. In the Kingdom alone will the world find a number of things which are indispensable for its survival. One of them is order. An individual human being is full of instincts and passions which are both necessary and valuable. However, they have no inherent order. They will check and frustrate each other and so destroy the organism unless some principle of control is brought in. Likewise, the world needs order to create a balance between this man's productivity and that man's need, between industry and culture, between this world's life and the life to come. The Kingdom of God is that order.

The world needs purpose, too. Order alone is not enough. The keys on a typewriter are ordered in a certain way, but the order is meaningless. Only that order which is the result of purpose is a real order. Now, the purpose which alone can issue in any real order must somehow be inherent in existence. Men did not make the universe, and if the universe has any purpose it must have that purpose independently of man. Likewise the human race did not make itself. and if there is any purpose in human life that purpose must exist independently of man and account for his creation. Nevertheless, man must discover the existence of that purpose if he is to find life, because human life is directed from within and our life is, indeed, what we make it. So, then, man must discover purpose if he is to live, and purpose must already be in the picture if it is to be discovered. One more step and this lengthening chain of reasoning is complete. And it is this: There is no purpose apart from some personal life which has that purpose, and this is so because purpose is the achievement of intelligence and will, and those things are what we mean by personality. Therefore, if life is to have purpose and avoid the dangerous reefs of meaninglessness and disorder, it must make the discovery of God. God has a purpose. It is the creation and preservation and the increasing unto abundance of personal life. That is a purpose, indeed. Anything less than this is neither the purpose of God nor is it the creature of intelligence. The world does not know either God or His purpose, and except it discover God and His purpose, except it bring its glory and its honor into the Kingdom of God, our age will go the way of previous ages.

We are now in possession of a principle by which we may deal justly with the problem of life. The good life consists of "the glory and the honor of the nations" brought into or under the sway of a purpose, which is the service of life, or, as it is usually called, love.

"LEAVE GOD TO ORDER ALL THY WAYS."

Leave God to order all thy ways,
And hope in Him, whate'er betide;
Thou'll find Him in the evil days
An all-sufficient strength and guide,
Who trusts in God's unchanging love,
Builds on the rock that naught can move.

What can these anxious cares avail—
These never ceasing moans and sighs?
What can it help us to bewail
Each painful moment as it flies?
Our cross and trials do but press
Only your restless heart keep still,
And wait in cheerful hope, content
To take whate'er His gracious will,
His all-discerning love hath sent;
Nor doubt our inmost wants are known
To Him who chose us for His own!

He knows when joyful hours are best;
He sends them as He sees it best meet;
When thou hast borne its fiery test,
And now art freed from all deceit,
He comes to thee all unaware,
And makes thee own His loving care.

Now, in the heat of pain or strife,
Think God hath cast thee off unheard;
Nor that the man whose prosperous life
Thou enviest, is of him preferred.
Time passes, and much change doth bring,
And sets a trend to everything.

All are alike before His face:
'Tis easy to our God most high
To make the rich man poor and base,
To give the poor man wealth and joy.
True wonders still of him are wrought
Who setteth up and brings to naught.

Belief and Conduct

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,
Bishop of Washington.

WHY call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" This was the searching question that Jesus asked of His disciples, after setting before them certain principles that should govern them in their habit and practice. He had laid before them certain definite rules that were indispensable to right conduct among them: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise," "Judge not, and ye shall not be judged," "Give, and it shall be given unto you; . . . For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again." He also reminded them that, "A good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. For every tree is known by his own fruit." These fundamental rules of conduct for the Christian disciple, along with many others, He urged, bringing His weighty admonitions to a close with the words: "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" He follows this by saying to His disciples: "Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will shew you to whom he is like: He is like a man which built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it: for it was founded upon a rock. But he that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that without a foundation built an house upon the earth; against which the stream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell; and the ruin of that house was great."

Jesus definitely states that the test of discipleship is not in profession but in practice. He insists that to hold Christian character the regulation of life by His standards is indispensable. To make practice square with profession is not an easy thing; it is hard and costly, but the Master demands nothing less. On another occasion He said: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me."

Much, too much, of our religious habit is profession, the acknowledgment in some form of words, a creed, expresssive of our allegiance to the person and teachings of Christ. Frequently we are admonished that religion is a thing apart from the practical concerns of life itself; it is a form of indulgence which we call worship and its field of occupation is largely restricted to the area of the Church itself. "You cannot mix business with religion," is an expression with which we are made familiar. The implication of this is that our professon of loyalty to Christ and His teachings does not and cannot affect our habits and practice in our daily contacts with our fellows. It is this superficial and wholly inaccurate view that has brought our religious profession into disrepute and has made it unappealing to great numbers of people, especially the youth. The severest condemnation that Christ ever administered to the people of His day was because of this superficial or artificial expression of religious belief. It was a form of Phariseeism, of an external display of righteousness that had nothing of worth or value, against which He inveighed and that called forth His oft-repeated condemnation. To make clean the outside was a sham and a deceit when within was all manner of uncleanness.

The test of the value of our religious profession both to ourselves and the world about us is determined by the effect it has upon our daily habits and practices. Well does Emerson say: "What you are speaks so loud I cannot hear what you say." The whole, indeed the sole purpose of worship is not only to pay tribute to Him whom we profess to serve, but to gain strength the better to fit us for the practice of His precepts in our domestic, social and occupational life. In fine, there are no areas of life in which our religious beliefs do not find their proper field of occupation. A profession of faith that does not demonstrate its value in home, shop and office, becomes the "opiate of the people", and it is this superficial expression of religious conviction that our modern world sternly criticizes and roundly condemns. Jesus contends that the superstructure of character is stabilized and secured by the kind of foundation on which it rests. If that foundation is His life and teachings, then the inevitable evidence must be disclosed in a stable, Christian character that is governed in all its action by loyal adherence to Him whom it purposes to serve and obediently follow.

met his new congregation for the first time. The Sunday School had run down and the services were badly attended. He offered suggestions that certain methods be tried to make these important parts of the church more attractive. Each suggestion was met with sad shaking of the heads. All methods had been tried and none had succeeded in the past. The young cleric remarked that he believed the people would really be disappointed if things did succeed.

Such attitudes must disappear if we are to be successful. Unfortunately there are clergy who exhibit the same attitudes. We hear skepticism about The Forward Movement itself—just another "movement" some say. Until we can put ourselves in this Forward Movement it will be a failure. We have the resources to succeed. A little more energy will overcome past failure.

WHY NOT GRADUATE.

Some people have spasmodic religion with a faith in spiritual things that operates by fits and starrts. It is good for little except to make one uncomfortable when the thought of sin, death and judgment comes. Others are "C-E Christians" meaning that they belong to the Church and bestir themselves to show their faces to God's House on Christmas and Easter. This kind of religion also is of little practical value. There is little benefit from the occasional practice of communion with God. The great need for individuals and for society is to graduate these lower classes into the higher grades of regular practical Christian worshippers and workers. The real benefit of being a Christian comes in following Christ day by day. By daily habits of Christlike living we gather the fruits of the spirit. If you want Christian love, oy, peace and hope you must graduate into the higher classes.—Weekly Messenger, Mamaroneck, New York.

Christian Marriage

By DANIEL A. McGREGOR,

Secretary of Religious Education, National Council.

WHY DO PEOPLE go to Church to get married? Why do they feel that they have to have a clergyman in this very intimate occasion? What does the clergyman really do in a marriage?

The true answer to this question will lead us into an understanding of the meaning of Christian marriage. In the first place we must rid our minds of the error that the clergyman is of primary importance in the marriage. What he does is important, but technically it is quite secondary. The clergyman does not "marry" the couple. The only person whom any minister ever "married" is his own wife, if he is fortunate enough to have one. The man and the woman "marry" one another, and the Church through the minister blesses the union. The true title for the service in the Church is "The Solemnization of Matrimony." The Church pronounces that the couple are man and wife but does not make them so. The Church blesses and solemnizes the union but does not create it. There can be real marriage without the Church.

Why, then, does the Church insist on her own part in marriage, and why does she teach her children that she should be consulted and her blessing given in every marital union that is entered into? For the simple reason that marriage is a very dangerous thing both to the individual soul and to society. Marriage can be the greatest blessing to a life or the greatest bane. It can uplift and inspire life or it can degrade and ruin it. Marriage is a crisis of great opportunity and great danger. Romanticism ignores the danger and assumes that every marriage is happy and helpful. It concludes its love stories with the sentence expressed or implied: "And so they were married and lived happily ever after." In actual experience it does not happen so regularly. Marriage is not the end of the road of love, it is the beginning of the testing of the reality of love.

Sex is one of the most powerful forces in life. It can lift human souls to the heights of joy. It can inspire them to unselfishness and self-sacrifice. It can inspire rich and noble love. It can bring into being new persons, souls made in the image of God. It can create families where all that is good in man and woman, all love and helpfulness can grow and find a home. Sex is of God.

Or sex can be the most destructive force in life. It can, by its passionate power, sweep away all consideration of God and of others. It can demand its own satisfaction at the cost of all that is pure and lovely. It can become the violent surge of the flesh overcoming all that is of the spirit. It can ruin love, it can destroy homes, it can poison character. It can degrade man lower than the beasts. Sex can be of the devil.

Sex is dynamite. It is never neutral, it blesses or it curses. In any life it either uplifts or degrades. Count Keyserling has said: "Sex is either sacrament or sin." The Christian Church has never taught that sex is evil. But she recognizes that it can be a terrible evil. And in her teaching about marriage she gives guidance to her children in order that they may avoid its dangers and find its blessings. The help that she gives may be illustrated graphically.

BILL AND SUSIE are two young people who are deeply in love with one another. Bill says: "Let us find the fulfilment of our love. Let us join together as man and wife and give ourselves completely to each other." Susie says: "I love you, Bill, and I want to be yours. But experience shows that sex is mysterious in its effects. It opens up great riches of life to some people and it brings others to ruin. It saves some souls and it damns others. Which will it do to us? I'm afraid." Bill replies: "I don't know. I never dealt with this problem before. I hope that it will mean blessing to us. But I don't know. It is a great mystery. Let's go to the Church. Her interest is in the souls of people. Perhaps she can tell us how to enter into this life of marital love without danger."

Soon the two young people come to the Church and ask guidance and this is given in the questions, answers and vows of the Service for the Solemnization of Matrimony. In this service the Church asks: "On what terms and conditions do you two people propose to enter into marital relationships? Is it merely a matter of natural desire and liking? Or is it a mutual and irrevocable giving as long as ye both shall live? Does your love include respect and honor? Does it include loyalty and unselfishness in the hard days as well as the easy ones? Does it include your forsaking all others? Is this step taken solemnly and publicly, in the sight of God and of God's people? Do you take God into this new relationship?

When the young couple publicly and solemnly answer, "Yes" to these questions, the Church through her minister replies, "Then go ahead, and God bless you. Marriage entered into in this way is not a danger, but a source of health in body and soul. The blessing of God and His Church is on your new life together." The Church does not create the marriage, it gives its blessing to those marriages that respect certain conditions and gives assurance that such marriages are not only good but are actually channels of the grace of God.

Christian marriage is a sacrament and one of the most beautiful aspects of Christian teaching is found in this sacramental character. For wherever there is a sacrament there must be a "minister of the sacrament". In the Holy Communion this minister is the priest; in Confirmation and in Holy Orders this minister is the bishop. Who is the minister of the sacrament in Holy Matrimony? Not the clergyman, he is merely the person who pronounces the blessing on the union. In every Christian marriage the man is the priest, the minister of the sacrament of love to the woman, and the woman is the priestess, the minister of the sacrament of love to the man. Marriages are not made in Church, they are made in the home in the life of love and helpfulness in the home when two people become one flesh and one spirit.

The Marriage Service is not merely an ecclesiastical or legal form. It is the statement by the Church of the necessary pre-requisites to healthy marital life. It is the recognition and announcement of the law written in the social and emotional constitution of humanity. That sex life which does not include love, honor, life-long devotion, willingness to be loyal in the hard days, recognition of God and public acknowledgment before the community is fraught with danger. And in the Marriage Service the Church gives assurance and blessing to those who enter the married state recognizing these conditions and solemnly and publicly acknowledging them.

Education

By UPTON H. GIBBS,

Retired Clergyman of Missionary District of Eastern Oregon.

THE OPENING of the school year in the fall, is always of perennial importance and effect. It is always interesting to watch the children eagerly trooping to the school buildings to be enrolled and start anew. Later, older groups who have graduated from the high school, wend their ways by stage and train to the university, college or technical school.

The question inevitably arises, "What is Education?" It may be somewhat trite to point out, that the root meaning of the word, "educate", is to lead or draw out, implying an unfolding or development of that which is contained within. But a good many erroneously suppose that education is a cramming process, by which the unfortunate victim is stuffed with facts until his brain reels, and his head feels abnormally enlarged by reason of what has been forced into it.

Now, these two ideas of education are diametrically opposed to each other. The one implies that the mind is a vacuum or nearly so, to be filled with whatever the teacher may choose to put in. The other is that the mind is already endowed with latent powers and faculties, which the teacher should train and strengthen wisely, bringing them out as a physical trainer does the muscles of the body by suitable exercises.

This latter conception of education, that of development, is by far the higher and nobler. It implies, moreover, that the child's career is marked out beforehand, and that he is equipped naturally with the necessary faculties to attain it. Thus it regards the child from the very beginning as a responsible being with his own particular personality.

Edueation then adapts itself to the needs of the pupil, who is its objective. And this constitutes its greatest importance, for the child is the father of the man to be, and the education of the child determines, to a large extent, that the man whom the child fathers is of the right sort. Hence, any community is vitally interested in the education of its children, for its future rests with them.

Its Function and Purpose.

True education is a developing and not a cramming process. In the life of the child it seeks to bring out and make available his inherent powers and capacities, which constitute his natural endowment.

Education in its full sense deals with the child in the whole range of his nature, physically, mentally and spiritually. The child is not body only, or body and mind, but body, mind and spirit. As he represents an entity, these three constituents of his nature are interrelated and overlap each other. The body affects the mind and vice versa. The same is true as regards body and spirit, or mind and spirit. The body will clog both the mind and spirit if allowed to, and a mind engrossed on material or mundane matters, finds spiritual ideas foolishness.

A human being is not an independent unit, but a member of a race. He is born into a family, and grows up as a member of it, but also in a wider environment as a member of a tribe or nation. He is never alone, and it is not good for him to be alone. So with his development there are three institutions for this purpose, the family, the state and the church. His education will be derived from these institutions that exist for this purpose. All three are concerned in the child's education to develop him into a full grown man, rounded out according to the completeness of his human nature.

The representatives of these three institutions in the experience of the child are the parent, the teacher and the priest or minister. These three form a trinity, and are meant to act unitedly and harmoniously together as they have a mutual aim and purpose.

One of the best statements in regard to education appeared in an educational journal some years ago, cited from an address to a graduating class. It read:

"You are an eternal thought of God. For your life He has an ideal. To prepare you for fulfilling this ideal, is the function that education has to perform."

A former pupil of a noted English school paid it the highest compliment in declaring that:

"The stupidest boy who went out of it, knew and felt he had a mission in life."

This was largely due to the initiative and efforts of its headmaster, the Rev. Edward Thring, whose name occupies a honored place in the annals of education.

He had a grasp of the true meaning and purpose of education above most of his fellow educators.

"Education," he said, "is not bookworm work, but the giving the subtle power of observation, the faculty of seeing, the eye, and mind to catch hidden truths, and new creative germs." And again, "transmission of life from the living, through the living, to the living, is the highest definition of education."

Education, then, means life, a more abundant life, to the one educated. Hence its importance and hence the honorable and honored profession of those engaged in this notable work as parent, teacher, priest or minister.

The Teacher.

In education, the personal equation that lies in the relationship between the teacher and the taught, is fundamental in importance and effect. Education has to do with personal subjects. A statue is carved or cast, but a child is educated, education being as above noted:

"The passing on to other lives—the entering of mind into mind—the handing on of the torch of thought and feeling from brother to brother—from teacher to taught."

Thus the personality of the teacher becomes a powerful factor. The late President Garfield remarked once, that his ieda of a university was "a plank with Mark Hopkins at one end, and a pupil at the other."

The same may be said of other great teachers and educators. These not only imparted their knowledge to their pupils, but what is more important, impressed their personalities on them. Edward Thring, the English schoolmaster, to whom reference has been made, had knowledge and ability, but these met with success mainly because of what he himself was. His personality was dynamic. He educated his boys in the fullest sense of the word, drawing out and developing their powers of thought, feeling and insight. His work did not always bear fruit at once, the harvest being often long delayed. But it may safely be said, that no boy who had been there for a year, left without a permanent impress on his character for good.

Now, one of the principal factors in his success, as a teacher, was that he recognized the personal equation in teaching. As a young man, and a curate in a country town, he had to teach a class of boys in the national schools. There was a vast gulf between him, a university honor man, and the litle laborers' sons with their empty heads. But in an inaugural address to the Education Society of which he had been chosen president, he said referring to this period:

"They had to be got at, or—I had failed. They tried all my patience, called every power into play, and visited me with such searching of heart if they did not do well. Never shall I cease to be grateful to those impracticable other-world boys, and that world of theirs which had to be got into. There I learnt the great secret of St. Augustine's golden key, which, though it be of gold, is useless unless it fits the wards of the lock."

Then he graphically described the trouble he had fitting himself to be the key which should unlock their minds, and open the shut chambers of their heart. He said:

"Oh! how hard it was to get into shape, their shape, and fit the twists and corners of blocked and ignorant minds. But it was glorious work."

Now, here is the point, the teacher's first duty is to adapt himself to his pupils. He cannot teach them from an eminence, but must get next to them, and reach their point of contact. If education, if teaching is "the transmission of life from the living, through the living to the living," this cannot be done except through personal contact of mind with mind.

This is what Edward Thring as a teacher pre-eminently accomplished. He injected his mind into those of his pupils, and thus imparted to them some of his own qualities. Those who were most influenced, became his intellectual, moral and spiritual sons. Many of them more truly so than of their fathers according to the flesh.

And now a point comes that is often ignored, but which is fundamental in being a successful teacher, namely, the training of the pupils to work out their own intellectual salvation without assistance. This has been admirably expressed by a living eminent scholar, Dean Inge. He said:

"The whole object of a good teacher was to make himself unnecessary. He unlocked the outer gate of the treasure house of knowledge; he imbued his pupils with a lively faith in the riches within, and with a keen desire to make them their own. And then he put the bunch of keys into his pupils' hands and bade them go in and explore for themselves."

The Taught.

The relation between the teacher and the taught in education, is a reciprocal and subordinate one. The pupil is not a stone to be chiseled, or clay to be kneeded and molded, but a human being with intelligence, feeling and will. These faculties have to be reached and influenced by the teacher. An inspirational teacher seeks to stimulate the intelligence, arouse the feeling and enlist the will of his pupil. By so doing he secures the cooperation of the latter. Instead of resistance, the pupil will render assistance by yielding to the teacher and intelligent, cheerful and willing cooperation by obedience, application and perseverance.

No teacher, however able, can hope to acomplish much without such response to his efforts from the pupil.

There is a twofold duty in this respect, that of the teacher to elicit by every means possible, such response from his pupil, and the duty of the latter to render it. If there is failure, it is due either to the one or the other failing in his duty, or it may be both are at fault.

There is no royal road to learning, and the one that must be taken is rough and arduous at the start, though it becomes smoother the further it is faithfully traversed. But the smooth part cannot be reached without passing over the rough.

The young pupil naturally balks when he strikes the rough spots. To a certain extent the teacher may help, but he must not carry the pupil over them. There is a tendency to do too much in the way of assistance. The pupil should be trained to work out his own salvation, and not expect everything to be done for him.

The only way to master a subject is by study that involves reading, marking, learning and inwardly digesting. This is the process and the only one by which knowledge can be acquired and assimilated. Phonographic knowledge is a deception, though it may pass for a time.

The pupil, then, cannot hope to escape the drudgery necessary to learning. He must cultivate the will to learn and a receptive mind. As a beginner, he will walk by faith in his instructors. Humility is as great a scholastic virtue as it is a theological one. The true learner is ever humble and ready to learn and be taught. A great scholar once remarked that he was "always a learner, and a learner still," although he had obtained distinction as a scholar.

Teacher and taught, the relation between the two is most intimate and reciprocal, for the teacher will learn of the taught as well as the taught of the teacher. When these two work in harmony, advance and success are assured, for in union there is strength.

As a fitting conclusion, the following words of Ruskin will suffice:

"Education is not to know something tomorrow, which we did not know yesterday, but to be something tomorrow we weren't yesterday."

BOOK REVIEWS

CREATIVE CHRISTIANITY: By Shailer Mathews. Pp. 165. Price, $1.50. Published by The Cokesbury Press, Nashville.

We welcome this book which contains the Cole Lectures for 1934 by Dr. Shailer Mathews, Dean Emeritus of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago. There are six in number.

The author and lecturer points out very ably the fields in which the Christian religion must create and perpetuate its principles and ideals in practical ways. Christianity must triumph in preserving certain social values that are inherent in it. He makes the individual the focus of Creative Christianity. His task is to Christianize social forces in an intelligent way to prevent reactions.

The author makes a strong appeal for a "Creative Christian Message," and states that "To fear hell is not necessarily to destroy existing evils. A message to be effective must arouse enmity. . . . A common hatred is one of the strongest motives to social action. If one can get people to hate together, they will work together" (pp. 32, 33).

The author admits without reservation that "The Church is the agent of Christian movement." He calls the Church "The Creative Organization," and says that new obligations are set upon the creative organization by new conditions. In the last lecture the possibilities and morals of a social equality and its place in a democratic system are discussed.

The book is a discussion of how can the Gospel be applied to conditions of today and a new social order be created thereby.

This is a good book on practical theology, which we recommend to the clergy.

THE SUPREME TEST. Compiled by Alfred L. Murray. Pp. 169. Price, $1. Published by William B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

This book contains twelve sermons by twelve able preachers and was compiled into a book form by one of the group. In the list we have such preachers as James I. Vance, Robert G. Lee, A. Z. Conrad, Clarence E. Macartney, and others. The sermons are of different points of view, but the theme is common to all, that is that the world's problems are not Head problems, but Heart problems and the Love of God in Jesus Christ only can solve them. Dr. Vance's sermon on "The New Day in a Changing World," is one of the best discussions on modern conditions and their solution we have seen lately. It is a true picture. "Woe unto the reformer who is not himself a creature of the reformation." "We are afraid change may hurt us, may injure our interest . . ." This is a stirring sermon.

Mother Hubbard of the Holy Hill

By FREDERICK WARD KATES,

Theological Seminary Student, Rochester, New York.

EIGHT miles from the nation's capital, on a ridge overlooking that city, the Potomac River, the historic old city of Alexandria, and the Maryland shore to the eastward, stands a magnificent grove of trees sheltering an institution 113 years old and 113 years young. The place is known far and wide to its friends and persons who have lived and studied there, or who have in some way felt its influence as "The Holy Hill". This quiet, shaded spot is the location of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia, the great evangelical and missionary seminary of the Episcopal Church.

Storm-winds and the effects of time are thinning out the once thick grove of trees, spared from the axe of Federal soldiers during the War Between the States by a special request made to the Federal commandant of the fortifications of the city of Washington still visible on the ridge. But there are still many venerable trees bearing witness to the spirits and souls who have moved and are today moving through this grove, the spirits and souls of men and women who have come there to gain nourishment for the world's need.

Eminent Christian pioneers, men who have literally obeyed Christ's great commission, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," started forth from this same quiet hill-top grove. Leaders in the Church's life at home and great preachers like Bishop Phillips Brooks of Massachusetts found this place an early and never-to-be-forgotten home.

Of that list of great and large souls which through the sweep of the years has caused this spot to be known as "The Holy Hill" one name stands vividly forth, especially to those men who have found this spot their home in recent years. That name is "Mother Hubbard", the name that very naturally and most affectionately has been ascribed to Mrs. Russell Sturgis Hubbard, mother of three sons in the ministry of the Episcopal Church and dweller on "The Hill" during term-time these past few years.

Mother Hubbard has become as much a part of "The Holy Hill" as the Chapel and the trees, the Dean and the professors, the quiet walks and the starry nights. Her home, by the side of the road, has been open day and night to all who call her friend and to all whom she knows and calls friend. A radiating center of Christian spirit and love and friendship has been the hearth of Mother Hubbard of "The Holy Hill".

Mother Hubbard, sister of the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, Bishop of Rhode Island and Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, knows the meaning of friendship: her life has been a constant witness of all the word means. Recently a little essay on the subject has come from her pen, and we should like to pass on some of what she has written on this theme, that you, too, may capture a bit both of her spirit and what it is that makes all of us who have known her love her, and of what friendship is and can be.

"The starting point for a consideration of friendship is, perhaps, the realization that every relationship in life should have friendship as its foundation, and this brings us to the importance of some sort of definition. To my mind, friendship is the union created by mutual affection accompanied by respect for the individual; and friendship-in-the-making, which we are about to consider, is the interchange of that affection."

"Love can be expended with no implied return. We understand that God's love is poured on those who are as yet unable to recognize, accept, or return it. The saint can give his love to a most unlovely object without even any knowledge on the part of the recipient of the gift received. Love is a divine outpouring, and most certainly includes the affection of friendship, even as friendship most surely includes love. When Christ turned to His disciples with the words, "Henceforth I call you friends," there was suggested an advance in their intimacy, though His love had been there from the first. Friendship is then a sort of partnership that includes an output and an intake, a commerce of love. This enlarges the field of friendship, making it the foundation for all our relationships; employer and employee; mistress and maid, parent and child, husband and wife, man and woman, and man and God.

"When a reverent friendship is felt among all its members, a family becomes a joy-giving center, creative of all that is best. When husband and wife stand ready to meet each other and all the circumstances of daily life in the spirit of friendship, with its balance of freedom and dependence; when parent and child have established a reciprocal respect free from all sense of possession or domination; when each member feels for the others reference for personality with tolerance for differing opinions, only then will development of the individual be possible, without which family life misses its fulfilment. When these fundamentals of friendship prevail in the family, society will become safer and happier"

"Friendship between one human being and another offers the best that human life is capable of—what of friendship between man and God? Is such a possibility assuming too much? If so, what of Christ's words, 'Henceforth I call you friends'? What of His teaching to call God 'Our Father'? What of His reiterated assurance that God seeks us, hears us, loves us? Is not prayer the very essence of the language of friendship? Prayer is communion with God, a matter of appeal and response, of offering and receiving, and of yearning for fellowship at its highest. By treating all relationships with our fellowmen as friendships, we become more worthy of a relationship with God; and by understanding that intimacy as a friendship, we can in turn perfect our human relationships. It is an awful thing to be trusted by a friend with his heart. The only way we can be safely so trusted is to offer him continually to the safe-keeping of God. Intercession thus provides for the fulfilment of love between friends a common meeting place in the Presence of Christ, Who has Himself called us to His Friendship."

DEDICATION.

Better in bitterest agony to lie
  Before Thy throne,
Than thro' much increase to be lifted up on high,
  And stand alone.

Better by one sweet soul, constant and true,
  To be beloved,
Than all the kingdom of delight to trample thro',
  Unloved, unloved.

Yet best—the need that broke me at Thy feet,
  In voiceless prayer,
And cast my chastened heart, a sacrifice complete,
  Upon Thy care.

—John Oxenham.

News from the Front

(The Southern Churchman believing that missions constitute the life of the Church hereby invites the missionaries of our Church to write letters to this paper describing the work they are doing in an interesting way, so that our people may know more of what is going on in the mission field.)

Christians of Several Nationalities Meet in a Combined Service of Praise and Worship.

Harbin, Manchuria, June 26, 1935.

The Christian service of various nationalities held at the Simenliar Chinese Church of Harbin, Manchuria, Sunday afternoon was atttended by more than a thousand people, the large building and its galleries being filled. Among the attendants were: Chinese, Japanese, Koreans, Russians, Germans, Poles, English, Americans, Canadians, French, Lithuanians and Latoians.

Preceding opening of the meeting, the brass band of the Russian Baptist Church played a number. Then the leader of the meeting Pastor Chang of the Chinese Methodist Church, asked that the audience stand in silent prayer, following which the Lord's Prayer was used by each one in his own tongue.

Pastor Liang of the Chinese Lutheran Church and the Rev. Chikmaroff of the Harbin Molikan Church, read in Chinese and Russian, respectively, John 17: 1-26 and Eph. 4:1-16, one referring to the unity of believers in Christ and the other calling attention to the complete building up of the Church in Christ, following which the Moliken choir sang a hymn.

There was then a short sermon by the new Japanese pastor, Mr. Kurata, whose subject was, "The Unity of Christ In All Nations." A double quartet of the Japanese Methodist congregation then sang, the Rev. Harmon Rosin, pastor of one of the two German Lutheran Churches of Harbin spoke on 1 Cor. 12:4-6, referring to diversity of gifts in the unity of the Spirit.

While the collection was being taken, the Russian band played another number. There was then a special prayer, following which Mr. J. T. F. Robertson, representative of the British and Foreign Bible Society in Manchuria, addressed the large audience, urging the importance of placing the Scriptures in the hands of the thousands of people of many nationalities in Manchuria. Then followed a short sermon by Rev. Li You Lin, pastor of the Chinese Simenliar Church. He emphasized the unity of Christ's followers as prayed for by the Lord. The choir of Pastor Li's Church then sang the Nineteenth Psalm, set to old Chinese music by Mr. Wu Pai-Siang, a well-known Chinese Christian business man of Harbin, who has put a hundred Psalms to ancient Chinese music and is teaching them to the Simenliar Church choir.

The Russian Baptist Church choir sang as an anthem the hundred and seventeenth Psalm, and the Molikan Church choir a hymn, after which Rev. Petroff of the Russian Baptist Church spoke on the importance of carrying out among all peoples the Great Commission of the Lord Jesus. Pastor Paik Hi Yu of the Korean Methodist Church then addressed the large audience, following which the Korean choir sang.

Rock of Ages was sung with feeling by all in the languages of the several nationalities represented. Each group then recited its declaration of faith in its own tongue. The doxology was sung and the meeting closed after the benediction in English by Dr. Charles Deming, Methodist missionary to the Koreans in North Manchuria. Singing by the Russian Baptist choir, by the Japanese double quartet, and by the Korean and Chinese Simenliar choirs was especially good.

The meeting was characterized by praise and worship. There was, too, a spirit of real fellowship. Ease and freedom was manifest among speakers and throughout the audience. All realized that, though of different tongues and nationalities, they were truly children and servants of one God and Father and saved through the blood of one Lord and Saviour, and that each group is being led by the Spirit in seeking to present Christ to the lost and establish the Kingdom of God in this part of the world.

This was the second of such meetings held the past three years. There were those who believed such a meeting at this time would not only be to the glory of God, but assist in fostering a spirit of fellowship and love between the peoples of this region whose political relations have been so strained these past years. The meeting was a help from this standpoint. Furthermore, it deepened the faith and fortitude of many, who were strengthened in the realization that there are many who have come to know Christ in this cosmopolitan city, though tens of thousands still grope in spiritual darkness.

Alaska Notes.

Bishop Rowe arrived in the interior of Alaska in May, spending his first week there at Anchorage with the Rev. Warren Fenn. He held several services in All Saints' Church, including a confirmation. Then he visited the settlers who had been brought from Wisconsin and Minnesota to the Matanuska Valley. His investigation there seemed to indicate that it would not be necessary to endeavor to station a clergyman among them.

A week in Nenana was filled with a round of services and social intercourse with the people, especially those of the Indian village and the mission.

In Fairbanks, he was the guest of the Rev. Michael I. Kippenbrock, preached to his congregation and attended to various matters of mission business. Times have changed Alaska so greatly that Mr. Kippenbrock was able to drive the Bishop by motor from Fairbanks to Circle City, whence the Bishop took steamer for Fort Yukon, 150 miles further down the river. Here he was warmly welcomed by many Indian people who are members of our Church and for whom the Bishop held a Communion Service.

Then the Bishop started East, stopping at Eagle to visit our missionary in charge and proceeding to Dawson in Canadian territory. Retracing his way down the river, he stopped again at Circle City for services, was met by Mr. Kippenbrock and driven back to Fairbanks.

On July 10, the Bishop and Mr. Kippenbrock left Fairbanks with Pilot Noel Wien for Nome, Point Hope and other places on the Northwest coast. We have no missionary at either Kotzebue or Nome. The Bishop confirmed four at the former and baptized two at the latter place.

Reaching Point Hope, the Bishop brought great cheer to the Ven. F. W. Goodman, D. D., Archdeacon of the Arctic, and his large Eskimo congregation. Thirty-five were confirmed at Point Hope, thirty-seven at Kivalina, and twenty-three at Point Lay.

In flying back to Fairbanks, the Bishop literally dropped in on Miss Hill and Miss Kay at their lonely Northern station at Allakaket. In true Alaskan style these two women are "manning" this lonely outpost.

The journey from Fairbanks to Point Hope and return placed 2,500 additional miles to Bishop Rowe's flying record. By the use of the plane he is able to accomplish within a fortnight what might otherwise have required the whole summer.

LIFE OF ST. GENEVIEVE.

France in the Fifth Century.

France to us means one of the most delightful and civilized countries in the world. It is now a republic under one President, who lives in Paris, the capital, which probably each of us hopes some day to visit. It has been said that if Americans are very good, when they die, they will go to live always in Paris. Paris is now one of the largest cities in the world, with several million inhabitants.

But in the fifth century it was a tiny city, of not even 5,000 population, on two little islands in the Seine River, that are roughly shaped like a boat that has been cut in two. The river on each side was narrow, so that toll could be taken of all boats going down or up the river. It was a walled town, and a very prosperous one.

France had been a part of the Roman Empire, and as such, Christian. But Rome was having her own troubles and had withdrawn her troops, so that the Barbarians had come over from Germany and were rapidly conquering France. So France may be said to have been divided into two parts, one of which was Christian and civilized, and one of which was Barbarian and heathen. The capital of Christian France even then was Paris, though there was no strong central government.

The Barbarians.

The Barbarians that threatened France and were conquering it were two general types. The first of these were from the forests of Germany and were white savages. They were to be the ones who later mixed with the native Gauls to make the modern French people. Typical of them were the Franks, the tribes that finally conquered all the others. Whenever they would capture a town, they would be apt either to kill all the inhabitants or else sell them as slaves, though sometimes they simply made them pay a heavy tribute. But whatever they did to the people, they always robbed the churches and destroyed them as a tribute to their heathen gods. Thus the Christian people saw that the only hope for Christianity was to convert the Barbarians. Our story today tells of one whose life did much to get the Franks to become Christian, St. Genevieve.

The second group of Barbarians were not white people at all, but yellow. They came from near China and were called the Huns. Their leader was Attila, who was known as the Scourge of God, on account of his cruelties. During the World War, when the French wanted to find the worst possible name to call the Germans, they called them Huns. It is said that Attila would often tear out the tongues of captives to see them suffer, and that he would often cut off both hands of all children in a town so as to make people afraid to oppose him. Eventually they were conquered in the Battle of the Marne, in the same place that the Allies beat the Germans in two battles in the World War. After that battle, we are glad to say, they left France, never to return, though they settled in and gave their name to Hungary, which was better known to us as a part of Austria-Hungary, and which since the war is a part of Czechoslovakia.

Life of St. Genevieve.

In the year 430 there was a great Bishop who is known in history as St. Germanus of Auxerre (pronounced Oakzair). One day he received a message from England asking him to come over there to help them in their churches, so he set out. On his way he stopped at the village of Nanterre (Nan-tare) over night and there heard of a little eight-year-old girl named Genevieve whom everyone greatly loved. He asked to see her. They told him she was minding sheep, so he went out to see her. In the midst of her sheep he baptized her, and looking into her face, he told her friend that he saw there that God would some day have great things for her to do.

When Genevieve's parents died, she moved into Paris and became much interested in church work there. One day the news came that Attila, the Hun, was on his way to capture Paris. In a few days a messenger from Attila came, who told them of how very cruel he was and who demanded that they surrender their city. Many people were so afraid that they wanted to do it. Others said, "Let us flee to another city." But Genevieve said, "No, trust in God, prepare to defend the city." So she sent the men to work to strengthen the walls and to collect arrows, and she called the women into the church to pray to God not to let Attila take the city. In a few days the news came that Attila had changed his mind and was going south instead of coming to Paris. Their prayers had been answered. In a few years the Battle of the Marne was fought and France was safe from the Huns.

But there was another peril. It was from the heathen Franks. Genevieve saw that, if Christians were to be safe, they must be converted to Christ, so she now began to travel over France. Wherever she went people had heard of her goodness and kindness and they listened carefully to all she had to say. One might have expected this among the Christians, but when it came to the heathen it was expected that they would kill her. But they did not, but listened carefully to her words. At last she came to the court of Clovis, the most powerful and most cruel of them all. But even he listened to her.

Then she came back to Paris. One day a messenger came from Clovis demanding that Paris should surrender to him. Again the people of Paris were terrified, and many wanted to surrender. But Genevieve said, "No, God has protected us from Attila. He can also protect us from Clovis. We must work and pray and trust in God." Though the people were very much afraid, they obeyed her and again the men worked while the women prayed, not only for protection, but that Clovis might become a Christian.

Clovis soon came and besieged the city, and soon there was little or no food, so the people came to Genevieve to ask her what to do. She told them to go on working, and told some of the women to go on praying. But she took another group of them who were the strongest and put them in rowboats in the middle of the night, and they rowed up-stream for some distance, until they had gotten well beyond the army of Clovis. Then they went to farmers thereabouts and collected food throughout the day, and the next night floated down the river and into the water between the two islands, and there unloaded the supplies. Although the besieging army had kept careful watch, they never caught the women, but thought that they must have had help from heaven, so they gave up the siege. Again their prayers had been answered.

But a little later the news came to them that Clovis was ready to become a Christian. So they sent word to him that, since he was a Christian, they would be glad to have him come and take their city freely. So he came into Paris and was baptized on the spot where now stands the Church of St. Germanus of Auxerre, the church built in honor of the Bishop that baptized Genevieve. We may be sure that Genevieve, now an old woman seventy-five years old, was there, so that her prayers were answered now for the third time. The font in which Clovis was baptized is still kept and is still used in the Church of St. Germanus.

Genevieve lived to be ninety years old, much beloved by the Parisians. She is the patron saint of Paris and shares with Joan of Arc the honor of being the patron saint of France. In her last days she was given a room in a church tower, from which she could look out over Paris, which she loved so greatly. There she prayed constantly for the city and for France.

When she died she was buried in a church, and though her body has been moved a short distance from where it was originally buried, her coffin in St. Stephen's Church is one of the most honored objects in all France today.

World News of Young Churchmen.

The Rev. B. C. D. Palmer, formerly a member of the Y. P. S. L. in the Diocese of Georgia in 1925, writes that he has started a League in his Parish which he believes is the first in England.

But there is a similar movement in the English Church known as the "Under Thirty Movement." It began two or three years ago, and is composed of young lay members under thirty of the Church of England. Their main objective is to stimulate the interest of their own generation in the activities of the Church. Groups of young people are being formed in many parishes, their aim is in all parishes, some or all of the following objectives:

1. To study Christianity and to pass on its message.
2. To learn how to live and enjoy a true Christian life.
3. To apply Christianity to all the activities of life.
4. To bring real neighborliness into the forefront of their lives.
5. To encourage interest in Church government and to serve on various councils when called upon to do so.
6. To do some definite work for the parish.
7. To look up young people who have lapsed from Church going since their confirmation, and bring them back into Church life.
8. To sponsor confirmation candidates.
9. To find means of keeping young people in the Church after the Sunday-school age.
10. To supply helpers to other parishes who are most in need of this assistance.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

A WEEK OF CONTINUOUS PRAYER.

The British Bible Union arranged a week of continuous prayer, September 2 to 7, at the Conference Hall, Central-Buildings, Westminster. The sessions commenced at 11 A. M. and continued till 9 P. M. Clergy, ministers and Christian workers were responsible for the conduct of each hour. Leaders of various missionary and evangelical societies will cooperate as in previous years, and it is desired that all will concentrate upon the great need for prayer among God's people at this perilous time in our national and world affairs. It is generally agreed that we have reached, or are just reaching, a crisis in national and international matters. It is hoped that all Christian people, irrespective of their Church or particular view of things, will lay this matter to heart and respond, and make great use of this opportunity for the work and ministry of prayer. A short Bible message will be given at each session. Any who are in sympathy and willing to cooperate are invited to communicate with the organizing secretary of this week of prayer, Mrs. Morton, Mount Maskall, Boreham, Essex.—The Record.

NEW FINDS TO BE EXHIBITED.

The seventeen Hebrew earthenware inscriptions which were recently found near Jerusalem by J. L. Starkey, of the Henry Wellcome Archaeological Expedition, will be exhibited in London, then returned to the Rockefeller Museum in Jerusalem. The inscriptions have created international interest because of the light they shed upon the history of the kingdom of Judah.

BETTER OR WORSE.

A vicar was taking leave of his parishioners. To one lady, who seemed particularly affected at his approaching departure, he said:

"Don't worry—you will get a far better man than I have been to take my place."

"Oh, no!" she replied, "that is what the last vicar said."—Church of England Newspaper.

THE LEPER VILLAGES NEAR FOOCHOW, CHINA.

Where one of the largest colonies of lepers in China lives under conditions worse than those of American slums—are to be razed, according to press dispatches. Public-spirited organizations, cooperating with the Chinese government in a widespread campaign against the disease, will provide a haven and proper medical facilities for Foochow's 1,000 lepers. The national government, which estimates that there are about 1,000,000 lepers in China, has offered its Red Cross hospital in Foochow for use as a new leper home. The Chinese Mission of Lepers, the London Mission to Lepers and the Foochow Rotary Club have agreed to cooperate in maintaining the institution. As in other parts of China, the lepers of Foochow are beggars.—Fort Worth Tribune.

SCIENTIST AND BIBLE CLASS PROMOTER.

Alexander Graham Bell was greatly indebted to William B. Brown for expert mechanical assistance. It was he who made the diaphragm that made the Bell telephone possible. His ingenuity and collaboration have perfected many other inventions which today are commonplaces, but which our fathers never knew.

Mr. Brown is familiarly and lovingly called "Pop" in New England, for he is now eighty-two years of age. It was fifty years ago that he founded a Bible class in the West Somerville Baptist Church, Somerville, Massachusetts. That class is still running and "Pop" Brown, at his advanced age, still has charge of it. It has an active membership of 500, and during its long and fine history thousands of men have been blessed by its remarkable fellowship.

In an article in the Boston Herald about this great Bible class, Mr. Brown is quoted as saying, "I feel that my work with the class has meant much more to me and the world than new mechanical contrivances."—The Watchman-Examiner.

The New York metropolitan district had 265 daily vacation Bible schools the past summer, with between 40,000 and 50,000 children. This is the largest enrollment in the history of this movement.

THE BIBLE IN BELGIUM.
The Late King's Example.

The Rev. W. H. Rainey, the British and Foreign Bible Society's Secretary for Western Europe, in an article published in the current issue of The Bible in the World, entitled "The Bible in Belgium", writes: "The steady growth of the work of the Bible Society in Belgium is illustrated by the circulation figures of the last three decades. The number of books circulated in 1914 was 17,769; in 1924 it had risen to 34,398; and in 1934 to 43,343. The increase is all the more remarkable because there has been a radical reduction in the number of colporteurs employed. This goes to prove that the Belgians are losing the horror of the Book inculcated by the Inquisition, and are becoming a Bible-reading people. May this not be due, at least in part, to the example of their Bible-reading King who was killed under such tragic circumstances in 1934? Albert I was not only a great soldier and gentleman, but also a great Christian. Lieutenant-General Galet, whose work as Chief of Staff brought him much into contact with the King, told a worker of the Belgian Evangelical Mission that the King was a lover of the Bible and read it constantly. 'Sometimes,' continued the general, 'we read it together.'"—The Record.

GENERAL EVANGELINE BOOTH'S MOTORCADE.

The late Harold Begbie has told in William Booth the vivid story of the motor-car campaign from Land's End to John O'Groats, which the old general undertook thirty-one years ago. The daughter, General Evangeline Booth ,is about to minister to a new generation by the same means. Starting from the Salvation Army Hall at Tottenham at nine in the morning of Monday, September 2, she returns to Congress Hall, Clapton, on the evening of the following Monday. In this time she will have motored nearly 1,000 miles, and will have given thirty-nine open-air addresses in as many towns, including Northampton, Bridlington, West Hartlepool, Preston, Liverpool, Wrexham, Gloucester, Swindon, Peterborough, Lincoln, Gainsborough, Doncaster, Hull, Scarborough, Whitby, Middleboro, Darlington, Burnley, Blackburn, Bolton, St. Helens, Chester, Crewe, Woverhampton and Cirencester. During the Motorcade (for so it will be called) the general will have an opportunity, all too short, of seeing something of the Depressed Areas problem.—The Record.

"TALKING BOOKS" FOR THE BLIND.

Machines which will read aloud to the blind are now being manufactured in England and will be available for the use of the blind in the early autumn. Books are already being recorded, and a number of blind persons have ordered machines in advance.

The records, discs of the gramophone pattern, will be "played" at a specially low speed and so run much longer than those in general use. They will form part of a circulating library of talking books in which room will be found for the Bible, classics, educational and scientific works, biographies and fiction.

Both the Publishers' Association and the Society of Authors are assisting, and have asked their members to waive copyright for all books recorded for the blind.

Machines and records are being produced by a sound recording committee set up by the National Institute for the Blind and St. Dunstan's, which have co-operated in the experimental work. Lord Nuffield, who recently gave £10,000 to the Institute, has contributed £5,000 to the cost of the undertaking.

BISHOP OF LONDON'S HOLIDAY.

The Bishop of London, who started his holiday last Saturday, will, I hear, motor through Worcestershire and Cheshire, playing golf and lawn tennis every suitable day on the way to Scotland, where he will fish for a month—a fairly active performance for a man at seventy-seven. The Bishop's letters average, I am told, a hundred a day, and all are answered by return of post. Many of them follow him even on holiday. I also hear that he takes with him a stock of books and regularly reads theology in the morning, history in the afternoon, and a novel at night. —Church of England Newspaper.

ANOTHER CENTENNIAL.

To the many events marked by a centennial in 1935 may be added the confirmation of Queen—then Princess—Victoria. English papers have been reprinting the contemporary account. The sixteen-year-old princess was led to the altar by the King and confirmed by the Archbishop of Canterbury. For some reason—could it have been because they were Victorians?—the solemnity of the occasion made everybody weep copiously.

PSYCHOLOGIST'S TESTIMONY OF HUMAN NEED.

"During the past thirty years people from all the countries of the earth have consulted me. I have treated many hundreds of patients, the larger number being Protestants, a smaller number being Jews, and not more than five or six believing Catholics. Among all my patients, aged over thirty-five, there has not been one whose problem in the last resort was not that of finding a religious outlook on life."—C. G. Jung, in "Modern Man in Search of a Soul".

ANOTHER KENNETH MacKENZIE.

The Scottish Guardian of July 19, 1935, has the following to say of the Clan MacKenzie, the two distinguished Bishops it has given to the Scottish Church, and our own Kenneth MacKenzie:

"The Clan MacKenzie, which is not more numerous or more Episcopalian than fifty other clans, has the distinction of giving two Bishops to the Scottish Church.

"Their MacKenzie quality is emphasized by the fact that they are both Kenneths, that is, their Christian names and surnames are really identical.

"There are two other Kenneth MacKenzies in Crockford's. Kenneth Nigel, Diocesan Missioner of Argyll, and Dr. Kenneth William, head of the Chanda Mission.

"There are twenty-two MacKenzies in Crockford's Clerical Directory, including the two Bishops and one Provost.

"We have no records to show how many of the name are serving in the American Church, but we have known for some years the name of the Rev. Kenneth MacKenzie, book reviewer of the Southern Churchman, weekly of Richmond, Va., U. S. A.

"His conscientious and illuminating work in this department has illustrated the breadth of his outlook and the balance of his judgment. He has been fifty-five years in the ministry of the Church.

"His merit has been recognized by the trustees of Wheaton College, Illinois, and on June 10 he was made Doctor of Divinity."

THE CHURCH IN "NEW SCOTLAND".

St. George's Church 150 Years Old.

"New Scotland" is the colony of Nova Scotia, founded in the reign of James VI. It is linked with Edinburgh through the legal convention that a certain space on the Castle Esplanade of Edinburgh belongs to the territory of Nova Scotia.

On that spot, the new baronets of Nova Scotia were given grants of land in the colony and invested with their baronetcies.

Few of them ever saw more of Nova Scotia than can be seen on the Esplanade, but they paid cash for their land grants and the coveted baronetcies.

The development of the colony was to come later, and when it began it owed more to the United Empire Loyalists exiled from the new United States than to any colonizing talent of the Scots.

The city of Sydney is now celebrating its 150th anniversary, and many of the celebrations have their center in St. George's Church, set up as a barrack chapel in 1785.

The Churchman, New York, says: Early registers of St. George's are by no means dull. There are numerous entries of baptisms, marriages and deaths of slaves.

The third annual meeting of the parish brought forth a motion not generally included in parliamentary law. A certain Mr. Matthews, having been nominated for the office of church warden, "was unanimously rejected".

A colored couple, blessed with triplets, had them christened Shadrach, Meshack and Abednego.

There is also a marriage entry with a meaningless addendum. It seems that a swain, already engaged to a young lady, concluded it would be preferable to marry her younger sister. The second girl was of a like mind (or heart), but decided to take no chances.

Before she would marry him she made her sister write a "Quit Claim Deed" to him, promising that when he married her younger sister she would never try to recapture his fancy or re-exercise her seductive charm. This Magna Charta is filed with the marriage entry.

In the early days of Sydney's history friction between the rectors and the governors were not infrequent.

Cape Breton was something of an isolated outpost of the Empire, and there is reason to believe that the governors and their glittering staffs carried on "high, wide and handsome".

As was natural, the rectors had something to say on the matter. Probably for his reason Major DesBarres took a violent dislike to Mr. Cossitt, the missionary rector of the S. P. G.

With more arrogance than genius he wrote to the Lord Bishop of London, the rector's superior, complaining—first, that the church's furniture was of the most meager sort (which it was), and that there was no decent seat for him, the governor, when he, the governor, went to church; secondly, that, although the rector had been in Sydney now going on to two years, he had not, as far as the governor knew, celebrated Holy Communion publicly. Did not His Lordship think this a gross neglect of duty?

Evidently His Lordship did, for he wrote Mr. Cossitt a sharp rebuke and asked for an explanation.

Humbly the missioner answered—first, that he was much gratified to find the governor worried over the inadequate accommodations in the church, for he himself had often had occasion to point out this sad state of affairs, and that no doubt now that the governor was aware of the fact, indeed, some correction would quickly be made through the governor's interest and efforts; secondly, that if His Lordship would be pleased to bring to mind the rubric before the celebration of Holy Communion, which states that there should be at least two persons present besides the celebrant before celebration takes place, he, an humble missioner, would be much pleased to have a public celebration . . . should he find two people in Sydney, including the governor, fit to receive it.

The endowment of St. George's included one thousand acres of land, with rights of "hunting, hawking and fowling in and upon the same"—a place for a sporting parson.—The Scottish Guardian.

THE ANTIOCH CUP.

Soon after the Antioch Cup arrived in London last week, I went to see it at the Bible Lands Exhibition in Westminster. Beneath an imposing blue-and-gold canopy, this precious relic lies, displayed in a large glass case. Whether it has definite associations with the Holy Grail remains to be proved, but experts are certain that this cup dates back to Roman times. It is of transparent blown glass of a delicate yellowish-green tint. The stem is very short and the whole cup stands barely two-and-a-half inches high. The wide, shallow bowl, however, measures over three inches across.

The conical wooden case which is also on view is of later date than the cup, and it is hoped that the deciphering of its seal and ornamentations will throw more light on the origin of both cup and container.—Church of England Newspaper.

CHURCH PENSION FUND UNAFFECTED BY SOCIAL SECURITIES ACT.

Mr. Locke Issues Reassurance to Those Who Misunderstood New Law.

The new Social Security Act, becoming law August 14 with the signature of President Roosevelt, will not affect the operation and future progress of the Church Pension Fund, according to a reassuring message from the Fund's offices. The taxes imposed by the Act will not apply to the Church organization, and its benefits will not duplicate those of non-industrial pension systems.

A number of inquiries received by the Fund indicates that some confusion exists concerning the Act, as it affects the Church Pension Fund. Misunderstanding was particularly caused by the Clark Amendment, proposed during the progress of the bill through Congress, but deleted from the final Act, which attempted to exclude employees of industrial organizations with pension systems in the same manner as employees of non-profit organizations are excluded in the final bill adopted as law. Failure of the Clark Amendment, which referred continually to existing pension systems, led many in the Church to think that the Church Pension Fund beneficiaries would be forced to accept the lower provisions of the new law.

Such is not the case. A letter explaining the position of the Church Pension Fund in relation to the new law was promptly sent throughout the Church by Bradford B. Locke, Executive Vice-President of the Fund. The letter was published in the last issue of the Southern Churchman.

The previous letter of February 15 referred to in the first paragraph, pointed out that the Social Security Bill, as then drafted, would provide substantially lower pensions in the Episcopal Church than those provided by the Fund, would exclude many beneficiaries now cared for by the Fund, and would cause considerable confusion and inconvenience for the border line class, whose incomes were now above, and now below, the salary limit set by law. The additional tax imposed by the government would render the collections required by the Fund so difficult that it could no longer operate safely.

The law as passed, however, does not affect the Church Pension Fund, and it can look forward to continued growth and wider opportunities in the Church.

THE CONGREGATION PART IN A SERVICE.

At the London Conference of Organists last week, Dr. Stanley Marchant, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral and president of the Incorporated Association of Organists, suggested that congregations should practice singing in the same way as choirs.

"The effective cultivation of congregational singing has been neglected, if not ignored," he said. "I feel that in the future the holding and conducting of regular congregational practices will become increasingly an expected and definite part of the church musicians' work.

"We, as musicians, need not feel, in undertaking such work, that we are doing something that is detrimental to ourselves or to our art, since it is a legitimate, healthy, profitable and effective way of propagating the musical Gospel."—Church of England Newspaper.

TEN THOUSAND CHRISTIAN REVOLUTIONARIES.

Ten thousand Christian Revolutionaries from fifty nations mobilized at Oxford during July for the International and British House Parties of the Oxford Group.

Of the countries represented, the United States sent 130 and over two hundred and fifty men and women came from Scandinavia. Among them was Frederik Ramm, internationally known journalist, who flew over the North Pole with Amundsen, and author of bitter articles against Denmark in the dispute with Norway over the Greenland fisheries. Two months after he met the Oxford Group he says, "The whole mental outlook of my country has been changed". He later made a special journey to Copenhagen to apologize publicly to the Danes for his statements.

Over two thousand people assembled one July Sunday morning in Oxford's largest cinema theater, when business leaders, employees and unemployed men of England showed the answer to the vicious circle of industry. The meeting was led by James Watt, former Communist leader of Fifeshire, who was changed through the Oxford Groups. The spirit of the unemployed in England is being changed. Cynicism, disillusionment and discouragement is giving way to new hope and new confidence in Christ. According to the London Daily Sketch: "Truly there is something more than conventional religion in a movement which enables a member of the House of Lords and a Marxist agitator to work together in complete fellowship."

Another challenging demonstration was held in the Town Hall of Oxford, where a German professor and a French Baron spoke from the same platform and witnessed to the fellowship for each other which the Group had engendered, asserting that when such a change shall take place in the lives of thousands of Germans and Frenchmen, Europe need have no fear of war from this sector. Representatives of thirty-two nations marched up the aisle of Christ Church Cathedral, carrying the flags of their respective nations and singing, "Like a Mighty Army Moves the Church of God". Side by side the flags of Germany and France move up the aisle.

Sleeping in forty bell-tents, over 500 young men from business, professional, unemployment and university life lived together as an experiment for ten days to think out together God's plan for their own sections of England. One man, who had seen some twenty-eight camps in the course of his life, said he had never seen such business efficiency and discipline, and rarely seen anyone up before reveille—voluntarily!

On the final day of the House Party over 6,000 people, many traveling especially from London, met in the Oxford University Gardens, to witness the commissioning of a team soon moving to Denmark for further work. The note of the whole service, "A Call to England", rang uncompromisingly true as lives were dedicated to the task of bringing about a new world order. Sound movies were made of this great service, and are being distributed throughout the country, coupled with an historic flashback of mobilization in 1914, paralleling and contrasting two calls to action.

Ten thousand people dispersed at the close of this historic gathering to carry the seeds of the Christian Revolution to all parts of the earth.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop

1885—Fiftieth Anniversary—1935.

The twenty-second of September will mark the fiftieth anniversary of the ordination to the sacred ministry of the Rev. Alexander Robert Mitchell, D. D. Services will be held in St. James' and St. Andrew's Churches that day, when Bishop K. G. Finlay and Bishop A. S. Thomas will preach.

A new pipe organ will be installed in St. James' Parish to commemorate the occasion. Mr. Mitchell was ordained in Rock Hill with the Rev. A. E. Cornish by the Rt. Rev. W. B. W. Howe. He was rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd for fifteen years, and while there built two churches and a parish house, and conducted a parochial school thirteen years.

He served as rector of Christ Church, Greenville, S. C., for sixteen years, built St. Andrew's and St. James' Churches, and St. Philip's Church for the colored people.

He was Archdeacon of the Charleston Convocation under Bishop Guerry and while there organized St. Luke's Mission at Andrews, S. C., and built a church in memory of Bishop Ellison Capers.

In 1921 he returned to Greenville to take charge of St. Andrew's and St. James' Missions and organized them into parishes. He built a parish house for each parish. He organized the Mission of the Good Shepherd, Greer, S. C., and built a church there in 1932; the furnishings are a memorial to Bishop W. A. Guerry. A service will be held at the Good Shepherd Church at four o'clock in the afternoon, in which both Bishop Thomas and Bishop Findley will take part.

Mr. Mitchell is a member of the Standing Committee of the diocese, has been secretary of the Board of Missions of both dioceses and has been sent nine times as a deputy to the General Convention.

Mr. Mitchell has been honored by his old college, the University of the South, with the degree of Doctor of Divinity. The degree was conferred by Bishop Gailor, formerly his professor.

On Monday night, September 23, a reception will be given in St. James' Parish House.

Planning for Celebration in 1936.

St. John's, Little Hill, Sussex County, Delaware, has been opened for its usual services this summer and at the one held on the last Sunday in August plans were made for the celebration of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary on June 28, 1936. It is necessary to plan ahead, because there is no active congregation and old members have been asked to serve on committees for the occasion. If any of the former rectors have pictures or other items of interest about the history of the old church, the present priest in charge, R. Y. Barber, will appreciate the loan of such material and will see that it is returned promptly. The church families who once lived on the farms have all moved away and the only hope for the use of the plant is to develop a community center out of it by de-consecrating the church and keeping the altar for the church life and the occasional services that are held there in the summer. St. John's affords the finest field to try our hand in seeing if the church can be rebuilt in the rural life of a people. If it can be done there it can be done anywhere.

R. Y. Barber.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. Henry J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Anniversary Service.

Sunday, September 8, will mark the second anniversary of the move to the new site at the junction of Peachtree Road and Andrews' Drive of the historically old Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta. The Church School will celebrate with a big Rally Day service. A special musical program has been planned for the eleven o'clock service at which Dean Raimundo de Ovies will preach. Members of the congregation who have been absent from the city during the summer will be back for this anniversary celebration.

Loud speakers will broadcast the service to those who are unable to get into the Pro-Cathedral and who remain in their cars under the trees on the spacious grounds.

Founded in 1847, St. Philip is the Mother Parish of Atlanta. Bishop C. K. Nelson designated it as his Cathedral of the Diocese of Georgia in 1893, and at the division of the state into two dioceses, he retained St. Philip as his Cathedral in 1907. Bishop H. J. Mikell was consecrated here in 1917. With the move in 1933, the work of the parish was enlarged, the new interests being blended with all the old traditions of faith, vision, loyalty and sacrifice. The old memorials and the new help to make the Pro-Cathedral a place of beauty where daily the miracle of loveliness is wrought upon the Holy Hill.

St. Luke's Will Celebrate.

St Luke's Church, Atlanta, will celebrate the fourth anniversary of the Rev. John Moore Walker's rectorship on Sunday, September 15. Hugh Hodgson, organist, will arrange a special musical program for the morning service and the Young People's Service League has prepared a special program for their meeting at six o'clock Sunday evening.

Wickliffe Holds Annual Service.

The annual service at Wickliffe was held on Sunday, August 25.

Wickliffe, the mother of four churches has been closed for several years except for these services.

The congregation was a large one, drawn there from far and near by love of this church; the memory of old days; and the desire to hear again Dr. Wm. D. Smith. Dr. Smith's grandfather, Edward Jaquelin Smith, was the moving spirit in the building of the present church; he had it built of brick "solid and lasting." The only tablet in the church is in memory of Dr. Smith's great-grandfather, James Williams, who was born in England and came to this country as a young man.

Dr. Smith's text was, "Bring me a new cruise and put salt in it." The sermon was an inspiration and a challenge to all, especially to the young people, to do their part in these critical times.

COLLECT FOR THE TWELFTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Almighty and everlasting God, who art always more ready to hear than we to pray, and art wont to give more than either we desire or deserve; Pour down upon us the abundance of Thy mercy; forgiving us those things whereof our conscience is afraid, and giving us those good things which we are not worthy to ask, but through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

A PRAYER FOR ALL NATIONS.

God of all nations:
We pray for all the peoples of Thy earth;
For those who are consumed in mutual hatred and bitterness;
For those who make bloody war upon their neighbors;
For those who tyrannously oppress;
For those who groan under cruelty and subjection.

We pray Thee for all those who bear rule and responsibility;
For child races and dying races;
For outcast tribes, the backward and downtrodden;
For the ignorant, wretched, and the enslaved.

We beseech Thee, teach mankind to live together in peace;
No man exploiting the weak, no man hating the strong;
Each race working out its own destiny,
Unfettered, self-respecting, fearless.

Teach us to be worthy of freedom,
Free from social wrong, free from individual oppression and contempt;
Pure of heart on hand, despising none, defrauding none,
Giving to all men in all the dealings of life
The honor we owe to those who are Thy children,
Whatever their color, their race, or their caste.

Our Church Schools.

Soon the doors of the public and parochial schools will be opened for secular education in the former and religio-secular education in the latter. All honor to the Roman and Lutheran Churches for the recognition on their part of the need of religious training along with the impartation of that knowledge, which is supposed to train the hand and the mind to be able to earn the bread and meat which is necessary for the support of the body; but no one can deny, who, with half an eye, looks around him, that mere secular education, without moral principle, may lead, and too often does lead, to disregard of the rights and liberties of others, and sets up before youth, whether purposely or unconsciously, an ideal that is of the jungle, where the law of claws and talons is the rule, instead of the teachings of morals, more particularly, those Christian morals for the preservation of which our forefathers emigrated to this country to set up a new home for themselves and their descendants.

Today when home influence is admittedly so on the wane, there is assigned to the Church in her services and in her schools of instruction the planting of those high ideals; the nurture of the youth, and, it is expected that both have the encouragement and co-operation of the Home, which is and has to a large extent delegated its authority to others—the Church and the Church School. However, it is a lamentable fact that of late the attendance of pupils has been anything but what it should be. Parents who insist upon their children going every day to the public schools, must, therefore, not be so particular about their attending the Church School. Too often the excuse is given that the child was "out late last night, and I let him sleep late last Sunday", and it is taken as a valid excuse. I wonder what our Lord, who retired at night to the mountain to pray, and the evangelists tell us often prayed all night, thinks of such an excuse?

While it is a question as to compulsory attendance, in the sense the pupil is driven to the school or the church service, when the parent contents himself or herself with remaining away from both, and thinks he or she is doing his or her duty by vicarious means, is a matter of debate. But, why should there be compulsion? Should not the parent or parents set the example, of a loving devotion to Him who gave Himself for them, and to manifest before the world a willingness and joy in going to the house of the Lord.

The opening session of the schools will be on September 8. We call upon each and every parent who is in a position to be of service, to come forward and offer to aid us. In the home, by sending or, better yet, by bringing the pupils, and yourself remaining for the school session, and organizing a class for adults. We are never too old to learn, and what is more important than to learn of God's love for each of His individual children?

Then again, there are, so it is thought, a number of children who, on account of lack of transportation, are unable to get to the schools, is it unreasonable to ask of you to spend a portion of the Lord's Day in gathering the young ones and taking them to the schools? Is it?

The attention and application to ourselves of Hymn 502 it apt.

St. James Parish Notes, Alexandria, La.

Pleasure, Happiness and Blessedness.

These are three ideals or goals which rule us in greater or less degrees and are often mingled in a general motive. Pleasure is that which pleases us and relates especially to our physical comfort and satisfaction. It is opposed to pain, and is a feeling of delight. It is a necessary part of our equipment, for a life of pure pain could hardly be endured and would probably drive us to insanity or suicide. All our faculties and appetites of body and mind are reaching out after such things as will please us, and this search and motive enters into all our life. Business is mainly a means of supplying us with the things that minister to our pleasure; and the higher pursuits and possessions of life, such as education and culture, office and influence, serve the same ends. If this motive were destroyed or the means of satisfying it were totally denied to us, our life would be severed from one of its vital roots and would droop and wither. Yet pleasure is a superficial form of life and relates to our circumstances more than to our souls, to our external environment rather than to our inner self. It must, therefore, be restrained within the limits of higher needs and demands and not allowed to become a passion that subordinates everything else to itself. A life devoted to and absorbed in mere pleasure is universally regarded as a low and ignoble form of life that is selfish at the core. Such a life also usually defeats its own pursuit, and few people are more subject to disillusionment and satiety and misery than those that make pleasure their chief end and master motive. In fact, the way to get pleasure is to forget it, and pursue other ends and then pleasure will result as a by-product of other ends as music floats off the harp when it is properly played.

A higher form of satisfaction is happiness. This is what happens to us, or the disposition and habit of taking things as they come and transmuting them into our will and delight. It is pleasure freed in some measure from the pursuit of pleasure and derives its satisfaction from things as they are or as they come to us and we make our peace with them and convert them into our will and wisdom. It does not try to manage things so that they will suit us so much as to manage ourselves so that we shall derive satisfaction from our circumstances and possessions. It is a solvent in our souls by which we dissolve all things so that they are assimilated and absorbed into our own life and minister to us. Happiness is a more permanent state than pleasure, and is not so subject to passing changes and chances. It is not a shower falling on us from without so much as a well of water that springs up within us and perhaps endures through drouth and never runs dry. Happiness does to our environment what the tree does to the soil, drinking up the elements and juices in it and transmuting them into sap and bud and blossom. The person of happy disposition is more independent of his circumstances than is the pleasure-seeker and may even transmute the bitterest experiences of life into submission and serenity and peace. Yet happiness, much as it is to be desired and earnestly as the disposition that produces it should be cultivated, is not the highest end and satisfaction of the soul. One may be happy because he takes things too lightly and does not penetrate into their deeper meaning and into the sorrows of the world. If one is happy largely because he slips through the world and shuts his eyes to its sickening sights and escapes its burdens, he falls far short of that nobility which is deeply veined with sympathy and shares the sorrows and bears the cross of the world.

Blessedness strikes a deeper and nobler note in the soul and marks and measures the highest type of felicity. The very word appears to be related to the word blood and designates that which has been consecrated to God through an offering of blood. Anyway, it is not simply rooted in the circumstances of life or in the soul itself, but soars aloft and finds its highest affinity and satisfaction in God. It feels that eternity has been set in its heart, and that we cannot be satisfied with the bread of pleasure or a sunny state of the soul, but must find and feed on the bread of heaven. It cries with Augustine, "O God, Thou hast made us for Thyself and we cannot rest until we rest in Thee". It refuses to seek its own end and be pleased simply with what pleases it or to quiet its own heart into a state of peace, but it must look at all that is in the world and at its worst sights and most terrible evils and then find some Rock of Ages on which to rest, and some Refuge of explanation and comfort and hope for all the mysteries and miseries and sorrows of the world. It cannot seek pleasure in what is other people's pain or be happy by wrapping its own comfort around itself and forgetting about the unhappiness of others. Blessedness is not adverse to pleasure and happiness, but it pervades and transmutes these with its higher nature. It can transfigure the deepest sorrows and darkest tragedies of the world with such trust in God as will feed its purest serenity even as the sunlight can transmute a storm-cloud into rainbows or the slime of a swamp into lilies of stainless beauty. All these states of soul were exhibited in Jesus in their proper degree and combination and highest perfection, for He swept all the chords of His being with pleasure and happiness and blessedness, and this is the ideal and urgent goal for us.—Presbyterian Banner.

What her reward
Led to a witch death,
Sold like her Lord.

Did none pity her,
Challenge that taint?
I heard a bowman,—
"We've burned a saint!"

Seeing and Not Perceiving.

I once knew a man who for forty years had lived and worked in the out-of-doors. One day he said to my wife, "Do you know that I have never seen the sunset and beautiful sky, the flowers and birds until you and the doctor came up here to the country! My eyes have been on the ground all my life." Well, he is not the only person with eyes that see, but do not perceive.

The eye must be a highly important organ, for it is mentioned in the Bible 534 times.

Physical blindness is a sad infirmity; mental blindness is worse, but spiritual loss of sight is a calamity.

Suppose that Jesus could visit us and, realizing our blindness, should ask, "What is it that you wish to see?" I wonder what we should ask for? Someone who has always had his vision on the ground might ask, "Open my eyes that I may appreciate Thy handiwork in nature—the beauty of the skies, the glory of the sunset, the pageantry of the landscape, the forest and fields awakening to the touch of spring, and realize that, as did Elizabeth Browning, 'Earth is just crammed with heaven and every common bush aflame with God'."

Do you remember the story of Turner, the famous English painter, best known for his wonderful landscapes and sunsets? At one of his exhibitions, a man said to him. "Mr. Turner, I never saw any sunsets such as you paint." Turner looked at him and I imagine there was a touch of compassion in his voice as he replied, "Don't you wish you could?" To see a gorgeous sunset and not to be deeply stirred by its beauty is to miss seeing the sunset, and because David had such a rich vision he could say, "The heavens declare the glory of God".

But someone else might ask, "Lord, open my eyes in order that I may see my many privileges; that I may appreciate my parents, home, friends, health, happiness and work". Is it not true that many of us are in great danger of falling into the sad habit of taking all these things for granted? Many of us fail to realize their value until they are gone; sometimes forever. Begin today to see them all in a new light.—J. Wilford Allen, M. D., in the Bible Today.

Use a Pattern.

"It seems to me that half of the parents of the present day are failures," said a woman in a group discussing social conditions. "Most of them don't seem to realize the importance of home influences, and the children grow up with little idea of good manners, and scarcely any of good morals."

"Don't you think it has always been that way?" asked another member of the group. "It seems to me, the very fact that so many parents of today are failures, shows that their parents were not really successful."

"No," said the first speaker, "I don't think it has always been as bad as it is now. It seems to me that the parents of the past generation tried to guide their children and to bring them up right."

"Then how do you explain the fact that so many of their children are failures as parents?" asked the friend.

"I have never thought of that," was the reply.

The other woman smiled. Then she said, "I have given this problem a good deal of consideration, and have come to the conclusion that many of the failures in bringing up children are due to not using a pattern."

"What do you mean?" asked her friend. "A pattern in child training is a new idea to me."

"You remember we used to have two kinds of rag carpets or rugs, hit and miss, and the pattern or striped kind. Now, the way I see it, many parents bring up their children on the hit and miss plan, following no pattern, but just letting whatever comes along go into the child's experience. Their discipline is haphazard. Sometimes the child is severely punished for not responding promptly to a command, while at another time, when the parent is in a happier mood, the same fault is apparently unnoticed. A whipping is given for some small misdemeanor and later, for a more serious offense which does not happen to annoy, not even a rebuke is given. What results can one expect from such a lack of method?"

"Now that I think of it," said the other woman, "that is a correct picture of the discipline in many homes of the past as well as the present, and I suppose that is one reason for failure. But give me an example of what you mean by the pattern method."

"The mother who has a pattern," answered her friend, "is consistent. The Golden Rule is a pattern by which she seeks to have her children model their lives, and the children are helped to do this by the constant application of the Rule in all relations between parents and children. According to this Rule, the mother will not treat her child in any way which she would not like to be treated if she were in the child's place, taking into account all the effects of any action.

"The result is, that reason and confidence instead of inconsistency and uncertainty rule the household. The child who spills milk on the floor is not scolded, but is given a cloth to wipe it up. If he breaks a window or a dish, whether in his own home or in the home of someone else, the penalty is not a whipping, but some kind of payment on his part for the damage. He may pay actual money from his allowance, or he may make the loss good in some other way. He and the person whose property he has injured or destroyed must consult together. Each such experience helps the child to understand the logical results of mistakes in conduct, and is a lesson in 'fair play', one of the designs in the pattern she is encouraging him to follow."—Mary Kerr, in National Kindergarten Asso. Release.

Spiritual Art.

Sometimes in our travels we miss the things we would most enjoy. In Burghclere, a little Berkshire village, a rich man out of his great heart built some almhouses in memory of his dead son, and the chapel attached to them is filled with some of the most remarkable paintings in England today. They are by Stanley Spencer, who took five years to complete them. The subjects were suggested by the war, and the murals bear the inscription, "To the Glory of God". The east wall holds the eye. The subject is the resurrection of those killed in battle. A figure of the Saviour is shown receiving from the hands of the risen the wooden crosses which have marked their graves. The terror is past. This is victory, and all through the composition a gracious calm prevails. A soldier cleans his buttons for the Judgment Day; a rider greets his horses, his arms around their necks. The picture lives and carries the imagination beyond the sorrow. The style is modern, but his sincerity is unmistakable. If art is becoming spiritual again, we shall take hope.—Robert MacGowan.

"Only in Spreading."

"When a force meant for a large expansion is denied the expansion for which its nature craves, it not only fails for the larger work which it is not allowed to do, but it loses its best power and capacity in the field to which it is confined. Any compression of vital energy into a sphere smaller than its true range or scope not merely limits it, but poisons it so that it works feebly or falsely in the region where it operates. You cannot grow an oak in a hothouse; you cannot bottle Niagara; you cannot put the ocean in a pigeonhole. Even so the Gospel is a force that requires room for healthy growth; only in spreading abroad does it realize its true nature and fulfill its being."—Dr. S. E. Crawford.

FOR THE CHILDREN

ATTAINMENT.

With every rising of the sun,
Think of your life as just begun,
The past has cancelled and buried deep
All yesterdays: there let them sleep.
Concern yourself with but today;
Grasp it and teach it to obey
  Your will and plan.
Since time began, today has been
  The friend of man.
You and today: a soul sublime
And the great heritage of time.
With God Himself to bind the twain,
Go forth, brave heart; attain! attain!

The Fable of the Poor Man.

Once upon a time, a child was born in a tumble-down hut on a neglected piece of land near a tidy and prosperous town. As the lad grew up he listened to many harsh criticisms of their neighbors and of the townsfolks, so that by the time he was a youth, he was firmly convinced that every one who had a comfortable home and neat clothing and something of an education was an enemy to be feared, if not hated.

The youth liked to throw stones and to break windows. He felt a fierce joy in trampling down fields of grain and beds of flowers. His mental attitude toward those who were better off than he, and who would have been kind to him—was one of defiance. So little by little as he approached maturity he built a wall about himself which shut the world out and shut him in.

He did not realize, poor fellow, that the wall was of his own construction, and that the stones of which it was reared were the ugly, jagged ones of envy, malice, ignorance, and stupidity. He did not know that many of the people whom he looked upon as proud and contemptuous of him, were sorry for him and would have helped him, had he let them. He did not know that many of these people would have been as poor and wretched as he had they not opened their hearts to the joy of life and had they not worked cheerfully.

One day the Poor Man, for he had grown to manhood years, was walking by the roadside, in the spring time. The sky was overcast and a strong wind was blowing.

"Blow," he muttered bitterly. "My cupboard is bare, my woodpile is burned and I have not seed to plant if the sun should come out. Luck is against me. It always has been!"

There was a groaning noise above followed by a creaking and a sharp crash and a great branch came tumbling down from the tree top above. It felled the Poor Man to the earth, where he lay like one dead. When he woke up he was in a clean, white bed, soft as down. The room was more beautifully furnished than any he had ever seen, and in the window chirruped a beautiful bird in a golden cage. The man frowned darkly at the little feathered songster.

"Oh, little bird," he muttered, "it is all very well for you to sing, for you are fed and given a golden cage to live in. But I am only a poor man, and life isn't worth living."

The little bird hopped excitedly from perch to perch, then shook his yellow head, and as plainly as if a Magic Princess spoke from within, he warbled forth these words:

"O Poor Man, the kind of life you have lived is not worthwhile unless its very wretchedness makes you long for something better. A man who is really poor is poor all the way through, for wealth is not gold or silver, but treasures rather of the heart and head. Happiness and success lie within. Joy is the warming fire which keeps our hearts aglow. Determine to be happy and to help others to be happy, and you will be rich as a king!"

The man in the soft white bed sat up on one elbow, his eyes were aglow, his heart warmed to the sound of soft music somewhere near.

"O little bird," he muttered, "say that again!"

The little bird was trilling merrily in a burst of golden song. Besides the man in the soft white bed had need to think, for he had set his face in a new direction. He had turned his back on poverty of Life and Spirit which had been his. He was no longer filled with bitterness and envy. He was no longer shut in by a cold stone wall, for the Sun was shining, and Happiness and Treasure lay ahead.—Emma Gary Wallace, in Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

Clocks.

There is scarcely a home in our land that has not a clock or watch in it. Think of the confusion there would be at the stores, banks, schools and churches if there were no timepieces. We would have to get up with the sun and go to bed when it sets, just as the birds do, and as far as the noon hour goes, our stomachs would tell us that.

There was a time when there were no clocks such as we have. Jesus didn't have any in His home in Nazareth. The method of computing time in His day was by means of a sundial. Perhaps you have seen one, a flat, round slab with an upright rod in the center. When the sun shines, the rod casts a shadow on a number on the slab. As the earth keeps turning, the shadow moves on indicating the hour. But when the sun didn't shine how could the children of that day know when to come home from fields? How could one tell when it was five minutes of two or eighteen minutes after the hour?

The American Indians, who used to own our country, reckoned time by the moon. When they had been away from a certain place for several months, they would say, "Many moons have passed since I was there."

One old chief planned a war in which several tribes were to take part. These tribes lived many miles from each other. He visited each camp and gave each chief a bundle of sticks. "Throw one away every day," he said, "and when you have one left, meet me at my village and we will begin to fight." Sometimes the ycounted time with "wampum," or beads made from shells.

King Alfred invented a different method. He lit a large candle which was marked with rings. As the candle burned from ring to ring, he noted the passing of the hours.

Then there was the water glass arrangement so that water trickled from one vessel to another. Some were made to represent children crying with water dripping from their eyes like tears. When the water stopped flowing, the measured time was up.

Our ancestors used hour glasses. These two were two glass globes connected by a narro wtube. One was filled with sand which ran from the upper globe into the lower. When the sand was all out of the upper one, an hour had passed.

These various ways were neither practical nor accurate, and so our modern clocks were invented. Just who did it is not known. The Chinese claim the honor as early as 2000 B. C., and the Germans in the eleventh century. The oldest clock of which we have complete description was set up in the tower of Charles the Fifth of France in 1379 by a German named Charles DeVick. Upon his principles most of our modern time-pieces are constructed.—Christian Sun.

For the Southern Churchman,

MY GARDEN CLOSE AND I.

Florence Van Fleet Lyman.

Within my garden work I do
  And know I all its loveliness,
And to my inner Life this Close
  Returns a sacred best.

All full af grace and ornament
  Exquisite blend of many a thing,
And the sweet breath of open bloom
  Dawn-thanks of birds that sing.

The pleasing beauty of my Close
  Gives joy, yet wistfulness may be,
A friendly spot and comforting
  Soul-dear, heart-loved by me.

For the Southern Churchman.

Tommie Squirrel's Downfall.

William Allen Ward.

Jimmie Jack Rabbit was in a terrible fix. As night came over the timberline he neglected to see the dark cloud that hung on the northwestern horizon like some hungry monster, ready to spring. Jimmie had only just got well asleep beside the big elm tree when the wind started blowing and the heavy spring downpour began. Soon the whole earth was covered almost a foot deep in water, for the creek was overflowing.

"I've got to run for my life," Jimmie screamed. "Good by, Tommie Squirrel, good by and good luck."

Tommie Squirrel was greatly amused. Tommie sat very comfortably in the forks of the limbs of an oak tree, down beside the creek.

"Sorry you are leaving, Jimmie Jack Rabbit," Tommie Squirrel said. "Sorry you are leaving so soon. . . . Why do you not climb the tree? This oak is tall, and so is the elm by which you are standing. The water never will reach the top of either the elm or the oak. I say, Jimmie Rabbit, why don't you climb . . . climb higher and higher?"

"But I can't climb," Jimmie Rabbit said as he hastened away. "You know I can't swim, yet you tease me this way when I am almost drowned."

Jimmie Rabbit hastened away toward the hill that towered beside the creek valley. The rain poured, and the overflow continued. Jimmie breathed a deep sigh of relief when finally he got to the hill. The lightning was flashing and the thunder roaring. Jimmie wanted, most of all, a hollow log in which to hide. Finally, by the flash of the lightning, he saw a dead tree and entered the trunk, glad to find that it was hollow. Here Jimmie was warm and, being high up on the hillside, was safe from the water.

Jimmie Rabbit had just started to doze when he heard a noise at the opening of the hollow.

"Who are you?" Jimmie Rabbit asked. "Get away from my shelter . . . Get away, I say."

"But it's me, Jimmie, it's me, and I'm about tired to death and almost drown."

Jimmie Rabbit recognized a familiar voice. It was Tommie Squirrel, trying to get inside the hollow trunk.

"What happened to you, Mr. Squirrel?" Jimmie Jack Rabbit asked. "You, the mighty climber . . . you who poked fun at a fellow because he couldn't climb . . . what happened to you?"

"O, Jimmie, I'm so ashamed of myself," the squirrel answered. "You see, the water kept getting higher and higher higher, and finally I had to leap right out in the cold water and swim or drown. That's why I am on the hillside."

"Come on in," Jimmie Rabbit said. "As a matter of fact, I'm awfully glad to have you . . . even if you did poke fun at me."

There was a flash of lightning. Then a clap of thunder.

"But I had my lesson," Tommie Squirrel said. "Almost anything can happen to those who brag or boast . . . and what usually happens, if I know anything about it, is something mighty bad."

Put Your Heart In It.

Nan was fond of studying the dictionary; she always wanted to understand what she was reading and would often ask her mother the meaning of an unfamiliar word. Her mother wished her to learn to depend on her own efforts, when possible, so she would say, when asked the meaning of a word, "I think I've a good idea of what it means, but suppose you get the dictionary and see if memory serves me right," and Nan, instead of saying, "Oh! if you don't want to tell me, never mind," would get the dictionary and read the definition of the word and her mother by illustration helped her to understand it perfectly.

One evening in her Bible reading she came upon the verse, "And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as unto the Lord," and said, "Mother, what does heartily mean?"

"Dictionary," said mother briefly, with a smile.

"I might have known," laughed Nan; "I never get any help from you about a word unless I have helped myself."

Down came the dictionary from the shelf and Nan studied it for a while. "Worse than ever."

"How?" asked mother.

"It says, 'Cordially, enthusiastically'," read Nan, trying to get her tongue round the word.

"Enthusiastically," suggested mother.

"Yes," that's it!" returned Nan.

"Doesn't help you much, Nan, does it? Suppose I define heartily as meaning putting your heart into every action?"

Nan looked bewildered and then broke into a merry laugh.

"I have only one heart and that's inside of me, where it belongs. I don't see how I can put it into things that I do."

"I thought you were putting it into your own romp with the kitten before supper; you led him quite a chase after the scrap of paper tied to the string."

"Oh! it was fun," beamed Nan, as she thought of it. "But how was my heart in it, mother?"

"It means, Nan, that you are to do things with all your thought upon what you are doing; to be earnest in work or in play, to be glad and happy and faithful in everything, because it pleases the Lord to have you be so. Aren't you happier because you love God and are trying to do the things that please Jesus, than you would otherwise be?"

"Yes," said Nan, "lots happier; but does it mean even playing with the kitten?"

"Why not?" smiled mother. "If you did not play with the kitten just as hard as you could, would you be apt to study as hard as you could, or weed the garden as though you liked to do it?"

"Perhaps not," admitted Nan.

"And," continued mother, "don't you think you enjoyed having the kitten have a good time, as well as having one yourself?"

"Oh, yes! I just love to play with him, he enjoys it so."

"So, just as you played heartily with the kitten, that he might have a good time, so, when you do things for others, you want to put your heart into it, that it may be a blessing for them. Do it heartily as unto the Lord, for you know the Saviour said what we do for others in His Name He accepts as done to Him."

"I didn't put my heart in it, when I carried Mrs. Jacobs the Thanksgiving dinner. She said, 'Your mother is a good woman and whatever she does she never does by halves.' I might have said I was glad to bring the food to her, for I really was, but I just didn't," said honest Nan.

"But you enter into your studies heartily," was mother's encouraging word, "and you know God is interested to have us know all we can, so we can do more good in the world."

"I try to do my best," said Nan humbly, "but I never thought much about the Lord's being interested in it."

"He is interested in everything that concerns us. You are doing it 'heartily as unto the Lord,' when you seek to find out just what His words mean, as you did this verse, instead of just reading it and not stopping to understand it."

"It must make a big difference in people's lives when they think about this, mustn't it, mother?" said Nan, seriously. "I hope I'll always think of it. I think I will enjoy doing things more, if I do."

"I'm sure you will, Nan, and now the dishes are ready for you to do."

Nan closed her Bible with a comical expression on her face. "I most wish I hadn't found that verse."

Mother laughed, and so did Nan. "Well, here goes," and she went to her task so heartily that mother said, "Save the pieces, Nan," and while she worked she kept repeating to herself, "Heartily as unto the Lord." "It's pretty hard on you poor heart, to be inside of me and in everything I do, but I guess you can do it."—M. P.-Recorder.

Tom's Money.

"Boys," said Mrs. Stevens, looking into the room, "it's time you were starting to Sunday School."

"We know it, mamma," answered Jesse, the oldest, turning from the window near which he was standing with his cap on. "We're waiting for Tom."

"What is he doing? He went upstairs in plenty of time to get ready."

"Oh, he's ready, all right," impatiently, "but he had to stop and count his money. He hadn't counted it since yesterday. I suppose he is putting it away now."

Mrs. Stevens' brow contracted. Tom seemed much addicted to counting his money, and somehow she did not like it. Being thrifty and saving was all very proper and praiseworthy; that was what she had been trying to teach the boys. But thrift could be carried to excess. She stepped quickly to the foot of the stairs.

"Tom," she called, "the boys are waiting for you. Come down."

"Yes, mother." There was a quick tinkling as of coins being poured into a box or drawer, and a few moments later Tom came bounding down the stairs, two or three at a leap, his face in a glow.

"Oh, Mother!" he exclaimed. "I've got four dollars and ninety-five cents besides the Sunday-school nickel." He hesitated a moment, adding: "Would you mind if I don't give anything to the Sunday school today? You see," hurriedly, "I'd have five whole dollars then. I earned four dollars the week before, and this week I'll have a lot more vegetables to sell out of my garden, and the new grocery store will let me help deliver goods every morning. Maybe I can save as much as six dollars. Why, mother, just think of what a lot of money that will be!"

"Yes, it will be a lot," gravely, "but what are you going to do with the money?"

"Why, keep it, of course," wonderingly. "I mean to be rich some time. Jesse says I'm a regular grubber and save-all; but that's because he's jealous," laughing happily. "He's got forty cents saved up. He says I'd better spend part of mine in fixing up my room, to save papa the expense; and that I ought to put the rest in a bank. But I don't want it in a bank," stoutly. "I'd rather have it where I can look at it once in a while, and count it. I know it's safe then. And I don't want papa to fix up my room, of course; I'll do it myself some time. But I want to get more money saved up first. Won't you be glad to have me rich, Mother?"

She walked with him to the door, her hand upon his shoulder, without speaking. Then she said thoughtfully: "You know the old man who used to live on the corner, Tom?"

"Mr. Stearns?" The bright eyes looked up at her with quick, startled protest.

"Yes. He lived all alone, without sufficient food, and went about ragged and uncared for. Folks thought him very poor. Yet, when he died he was found to have saved up a large fortune. He never gave away a cent willingly."

"But, mother I never could be like that."

"I hope not," gently; "but Mr. Stearns was said to have been a very bright, industrious boy. The miserliness came upon him gradually."

Tom drew a quick breath.

"I couldn't be like that," he repeated; "but I gues I'd rather take the nickel. And I'll fix up my room. It would be awful to live like Mr. Stearns."

As he kissed her and sprang down the steps to join the others, she was glad to see that his face looked very sober and thoughtful.—"The Religious Telescope."

"An Honest Dollar."

The following story is told of Captain Robert Dollar, who entered the Oriental trade field as a young man. From the very beginning he violated the accepted standard of how to do business in the Orient, for he would not enter a bar, take a drink, or do any business in a saloon. It may have been hard for him at times, but he stayed by his principles in this matter. Today you may find him in his office in the tenth floor of his own building in San Francisco, overlooking the bay, where his great ocean liners and cargoes come in, representing every nation of the world. "The Honest Dollar," as he is spoken of frequently, is one of the greatest Christian stewards of today. With the help of God, he has built his way to success. Honest from the very start, he has refused to stoop to questionable practices, that marked his competitor's methods, and has won the confidence of the Chinese in commerce, as a missionary of the spirit of stewardship. He has been called the "Occidental's great gift to the East, the most charming and romantic of living capitalists and commercial magnates." His secret to success is given in a statement by him: "Unknown to a lot of people, I have been getting help from the Lord right along." —Exchange.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

St. Mark's, Dante, Quiet Day for Workers.

On July 13 the Rev. John A. Winslow and Deaconess Williams arranged for a quiet day for all the workers in the field, with especial thought for the ten volunteer workers there for the month of July. Captain and Mrs. Wiese drove down from Grace House by taxi, bringing the most important member of the family, one year old Betty, and also Miss Blow, a volunteer. From Nora came Deaconess Binns with Louis Lingo from Okeechobee, Fla. They arrived on the eight o'clock train, as did Miss Pickard from Splashdam with Frances Cary, Greenville, S. C., Mary Averill, Fond du Lac, Wisconsin; George Packard, the Seminary student from Baltimore, who was working at Splashdam this summer. To greet them were Mr. and Mrs. Winslow, Miss Mansfield, Deaconess Williams and Deaconess Booth, with their volunteer workers: Margaret MacRae, Shanghai, China; Elizabeth Andrews, Greenville, N. C.; Sallie Kite, Chestnut Hill, Penn.; Gertrude Clark, Kingston, Penn.; Frances Rippelmeyer, Chester, S. C.

The celebration of the Holy Communion prepared the workers for the day. The Rev. Mr. Winslow conducted inspiring and helpful meditations throughout the morning. After dinner the regular workers enjoyed a rare opportunity for discussing problems.

Mrs. Winslow served tea in the afternoon at the rectory and after a simple supper in the garden at the Mission, the guests left to resume their duties strengthened by their communion with God and their fellow workers.

Country Life Week, St. Stephen's Nora.

A series of Country Life services were held at Nora in August, and were said to have been well attended and helpful. On Monday afternoon all baptized persons and all who had been confirmed renewed their vows at the Communion Service. The Rev. Mr. Winslow's message was on "the ascended Christ alive and with us forevermore."

At night Captain Wiese drew a lesson about the growth of the soul from the growth of an ear of corn. The services closed with a procession around the church.

On Tuesday night Miss Mozelle Cowden talked about the advantages of Country Life, pressing home the point that wherever we live life is just what we make it.

J. H. T. Sutherland was unable to be present as was planned, but Everett Stanley as "pinch-hitter", talked about what the schools, and especially the Ervinton High School can do to correct social ills.

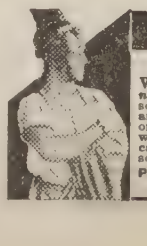
On Wednesday a series of outdoor services were held in Ora Grizzle's field, in the Damron field, also at the new school grounds and up at Stanford Moore's place. The services closed on Wednesday night with another of Captain Wiese's splendid farmer-sermons.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.



This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

Personal Notes

Clerical Changes.

The Rev. J. Rodger McColl became rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Danville, Ill., on July 1, and will also assist at the Chapel of St. John the Divine, Champaign, Ill.

The Rev. Paul A. Phipps, formerly in charge of St. George's Mission, Englewood, Colo., is to be vicar at St. Andrew's Mission, La Junta, and general missionary to the Arkansas Valley.

The Rev. George L. Whitmeyer, formerly rector of All Saints' Church, Briarcliff Manor, N. Y.; is to be rector of All Saints' Church, Atlantic City, N. J. Address, 10 S. Chelsea Ave.

The Rev. George D. Wyatt, Jr., formerly member of the Associate Mission, Hays, Kans., is priest in charge of the Church of the Holy Nativity, Kinsley, and Bethany Church, Larned, Kans. (Sa.). Address, Kinsley.

The Rev. Frank R. Myers is priest in charge of St. Timothy's Church, Chicago, Ill., effective September 1. The Rev. Mr. Myers holds rank of chaplain-major in the Illinois National Guard and will continue in that capacity.

New Address.

The Rev. Carl L. Appelberg, formerly Marcus Hook, Pa.; 34a, Taarbaek Strandvej, Klampenborg, Denmark.

Call Accepted.

The Rev. Charles W. F. Smith, assistant rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Virginia, has accepted a call to Christ Church, Exeter, N. H., to take charge the latter part of September. Christ Church has a communicant list of 250, and also serves Philip's Exeter Academy, a school of 170 boys, who attend services there. Mr. Smith is especially interested in work with young people. St. Paul's congregation greatly regrets relinquishing Mr. Smith.

Bishop Frank A. Juhan of Florida returned to his See City of Jacksonville, on August 31. Bishop Juhan has spent the month of August in the Diocese of Maine, where he has been officiating at the Summer Chapel of St. Anne's, Kennebunkport. During this month the Bishop and his family have been visiting Mrs. Henry E. Palmer of Tallahassee, Florida, in her cottage at York Harbor.

Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, Field Worker of the National Commission on Evangelism, was in residence, Church of Incarnation, Lynn, Mass., during the month of August. His fall schedule is as follows: September 24-29, Mission of St. James, Goochland, Va.; October 4-13, Christ Church, Pelham Manor, N. Y.; October 22-27, Old Falls Church, Va.; November 10-17, Good Shepherd, Raleigh, N. C.; November 24-December 1, Trinity, Asheville, N. C. Dr. Glazebrook is now arranging his schedule for Lay Missions for the Epiphany and Pre-Lenten Season.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

Who has a sharper conflict than he who strives to conquer himself?

The child of God is as safe as his Father's throne.

Life is not a man's personal property, it is a loan from the Almighty for which he is responsible.

Only things to eat and drink and wear are high in price. Happiness is at the same old figure.

The way we treat men is the surest test of the state of our hearts toward God.

Religion is not a putting of questions, it is a rejoicing in answers.

Do we really believe in immortality? If so, then our minds, first of all, ought to be set on "things that are above"; for ourselves and for everybody else.—R. E. Zachert.

Love is always ready to think the best; to put the most favorable construction on anything; is glad to make all the allowance for human weakness that can be done without betraying the truth of God.—Dr. Coke.

Everywhere the Gospel bids the Christian to take sides against himself. He is to stand ready to forego his surest rights, if he only is hurt by so doing; while on the other hand, he is to be watchful to respect even the least obvious rights of others.—Selected.

Sweeping the life in its furious flood,
Thrilling the articles, cleansing the blood,
Mastering stupor and dull despair,
Moving the dreamer to do and dare.
Oh, what is so good as the urge of it,
And what is so glad as the surge of it,
And what is so strong as the summons deep,
Rousing the torpid soul from sleep?
—Angela Morgan.

There is no room for belligerency against any man in the heart of a man to whom the real meaning of religion has been made manifest.—Russell Stafford.

IMPORTANT

We should like to take this opportunity to urge those subscribers who have not paid their subscriptions to do so by return mail. The Southern Churchman is making a valiant fight and it is a terrific drain on our treasury to have to send out some thousands of bills each month for past due accounts. The bills are small, but in the aggregate they amount to a large sum, which we need to carry on the work. We shall appreciate tremendously your co-operation.

As much as we dislike to take this step, from now on we shall be forced to cancel subscriptions on which payments have been overdue for three months.

SERVICE FOR DEAF AND DUMB PEOPLE.

Seven Hundred Worship by Signs in St. Paul's.

Seven hundred deaf and dumb people from all parts of Great Britain and other countries took part in a special service at St. Paul's Cathedral on Sunday, arranged for the athletes attending the fourth International Games for the deaf in London.

They represent fourteen different nationalities, and thus cannot understand finger-spelling and lip-reading in English. An international language of natural signs was therefore used by the officiating clergy, some of whom are themselves deaf.

The service was carried on in complete silence. One after another the chaplains and missioners went into the pulpit and conducted the prayers, hymns and Psalms. Their looks and gestures were eloquent and were read with ease by all. Sir Noel Curtis-Bennett, who is Chairman of the Games Executive, read the Lesson, which was skilfully interpreted by Mr. Alan McKenzie, Exeter.

Everyone rose for the hymn, "We love the place, O God," which was silently sung. Mr. Alec McDonald, of Manchester, silently interpreted it.

The Rev. Vernon Jones, who has been interested in work for the deaf for twenty-two years, and is connected with the St. John of Beverley Church for the Deaf, Finsbury Park, preached the sermon in the international signs alphabet, and everyone understood it perfectly. Scouts and Guides interpreted it to elderly people whose sight was dim.

Canon Sheppard pronounced the blessing. It was the first service of the kind ever held in St. Paul's. There are four "deaf and dumb" churches in London. —Church of England Newspaper.

Choice of Missionary Bishops.

The election of a new bishop for the Missionary District of Idaho brings to mind the change that has come over the church and the nation since the turn of the century. It almost seems strange that the House of Bishops, which will have the election at its meeting in Houston in November, has much the same attitude that it had in the "gay nineties".

Then transportation was difficult, missionary bishops were really the "official beggars" for the district which they supervised, and it was politic for the House of Bishops to elect one who had "Eastern connections" and was a well-known figure in the large Eastern dioceses, where he might ask for financial support.

Today this is all changed. Bishops are expected to remain on their fields and the National Church is expected to find and furnish the support. Transportation has changed the work so that it is possible by motor car to reach isolated points that a few years ago it could not have expected to work in at all. It is possible to elect men to the Episcopate that know the local field and the "Eastern rector" is better left in the East, where he knows his work. There also is a "Provincial consciousness" so that while our larger dioceses in the East may still be the strong centers of work, the church people of the isolated districts know their own problems and have a right to be consulted.

We understand that the Province of the Pacific has made a nomination for the difficult field of Idaho. This nomination should be taken seriously. It is very easy for those of us miles away to state that a new combination can be made and districts amalgamated, but we forget that the problems of the West are its own and if it wants to avoid amalgamations, it is its business actually and not ours. While we have advocated the "survey method" as the best means of determining the future policy of domestic missions, it would not be a true survey unless the people who live in the missionary districts with their local views of conditions were consulted, and we would indeed be open to the charge of running a "bureaucracy," if their opinions were not given very serious consideration, indeed.

For our own part we admit complete ignorance about the District of Idaho. But if the local Province wants a certain individual we feel sure that this request should not be ignored without a very well publicized reason and it ought to be a very strong and good reason if the cooperation of the people in the field is desired.

In the meantime it might be well for us all to remember the House of Bishops in our prayers, for they have difficult problems to face at Houston in regard to the whole Missionary Program of the Church.

Traffic Control.

It may seem remote from church work to be concerned about the number of accidents on the public highways of America, but when one realizes that here exists the most horrible slaughter and waste of human lives, one cannot help but wonder if it is not time for Christians to do something about it.

It is almost laughable that we are proud that the accidents over the Labor Day week-end were less than the estimate experts had agreed upon. The casualties were greater, however, than a good-sized battle in the War Between the States, and surely something will have to be done and proper steps taken soon if we wish to continue to use our highways with any feeling of safety whatsoever.

In many of our states there is no pretense that a driver's license must be obtained. Almost anybody who has matured to sixteen years of age can drive a car and be skilled enough to drive at terrific speed, and there seems to be a feeling that individual liberty will be assaulted if any attempt is made to remedy this condition.

In those states where drivers' licenses are required, little improvement is seen. One test, perfunctorily taken before some bored police official, would seem to be enough. And the whole subject would be humorous if it were not so tragic.

Experts tell us that the main trouble seems to be that Americans think that if one learns to run a car it is an accomplishment that need never be improved upon. Though one may practice golf for years with the hope of getting more skillful, and one may have to endure long hours of exercises to be an artist with a musical instrument, driving a car (and there is a difference between driving and running a car) is something that never needs new thought or practice.

After all, this is the fault with most things that are wrong. In the church we could point out to many people who seem to feel that once an acknowledged Christian, there is nothing more to do but sit down and wait for the Kingdom. Many a spiritual accident has occurred, and physically the complete confidence every driver feels in his ability to manage a car in

Let's Think a Moment.

Our Dumb Animals, September, 1935.

Crime and cruelty day after day are blazoned before us in our daily papers. Repeatedly we hear the words, "It seems as if morally the nation is steadily sinking back into lawlessness and disregard of all that we once held dear. Think of the robberies, the kidnappings, the homicides, the divorces!" Well, think of them. But think also of this truth—that for every deed of cruelty to man or beast there are a million acts of kindness every day flowing out of gentle, unselfish hearts. For every murder, a million human hands ministering to the sick, the needy. For every divorce, a thousand homes where love and sacrifice keep their dear lights burning. For every beast or bird ill-treated, overloaded, beaten, starved, a great multitude of the world's wild life free and, according to their nature happy, and who shall number the cattle, the horses, the dogs, the family pets the world over who have love and care bestowed upon them, and the hundreds of societies in this and other lands working for the welfare of all animal life?

God's still in His heaven. If all who seek a larger day will hope for it, work for it, it will come, it is coming because "toward this far off divine event the whole creation moves," let the faithless and the hopeless say what they will. This is a vastly better world for man and beast than it was a thousand years ago, and, in spite of cloud and shadow, it is still moving out of darkness into light.

The Living Church, August 31, 1935.

A moving picture theatre; refuge from the midsummer blaze. The young lady star ends four unbelievable years of "smilin' through" her troubles. Well done, innocent, but heavy with optimism. Then comes the "comic"—impossible horseplay. But simple folks have a laugh, which is good for them. At this point, many go out. Nothing left but the newsreel.

We who stay watch West Point cadets parade in faultless uniforms. They change to boys in khaki sweating in dust after tanks in mock battle. A flutter—and an ex-President's widow, a fine American grandmother, cuts her seventy-sixth birthday cake, surrounded by her happy, teasing children's children.

Then it happens. We had read something of it, but here it is to the life! Hankow, the Chicago of China, again aflood with "China's sorrow." The rushing water must be over four feet high in this narrow street. The Yangtse and the Han must be miles out of bounds. Toward us struggles an unending stream of human beings, some of them almost breast high in the cold swirl. With a look of patient misery they face us for a moment, and then go out—actors in a real tragedy. Young men splashing, stumbling, with grandfathers pick-a-back. A mother with a baby on her shoulder, and dragging a ten-year-old breast high. Whole groups steering the sick or children on rafts made of tables and doors.

And out beyond the picture we know that the Yangtse and the Han are crumbling away peasants' mud homes, and swirling their poor bodies by the scores of thousands down past Wuhu and our brave Transfiguration Sisters, to the China Sea.

With a vengeance, this is a moving picture indeed! These people have looked us in the face for a moment as they struggled with death. Can we do anything for them? Were they only phantoms on a scren?

The Lord Christ has seen them all—as we have seen a few. This is His picture, no matter if commercial enterprise did work the miracle for us less than a month ago. Can we do anything about it? Thank God, the Church has already done something. We who have given to "foreign missions" are strengthening a few hands already stretched out to save. We can do more. We can do it now. Our own Department of Foreign Missions at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, is calling for funds to cable shelter, food, and care through Bishop Gilman at Hankow. I am going to send something today. Will you?

The shadows on the screen are a heavenly vision we must answer. Let us share with Francis Wei's brothers, Christ's brothers, our brothers. And then let us send them the love of our hearts and our prayers. The Pacific cable for our money; the Sacred Heart of Jesus to relay our love!

Happy Marriages.

Ada Loaring-Clark, in The Living Church, August 31, 1935.

A simple service of Holy Communion was recently held at St. Margaret's, Westminster, London, when forty couples revisited the scene of their marriage to give thanks for their happy married life.

There were no curious crowds—no camera men—no dress parade. Almost unnoticed the former brides, escorted by their husbands, entered the beautiful old church and knelt at the altar to receive Holy Communion. Some had been married many years, others but a few, to all must have come vivid memories of their wedding day.

Canon Carnegie, rector of St. Margaret's, says he originated the service so that husband and wife could join in thanksgiving for the blessings of their married life and in prayer for their continuance. What a fine suggestion for similar services in our parishes! The canon further says that ninety-five per cent of the people he has united in this fashionable parish church are living hapily together today. This should be a convincing answer to the accusation that the upper classes, at least in England, are becoming indifferent to marriage vows. We hear a great deal about those divorced and too little of those leading happy lives.

A Joint Reunion.

The Christian Sun, September 5, 1935.

Will Dixie's Stars and Bars fly again at Gettysburg in 1938? At the Confederate Reunion now in session at Amarillo, Texas, it was unanimously voted by that body to join forces with the "Yanks" in celebrating the seventy-fifth anniversary of that momentous battle which decided the fate of the War Between the States. The vote was not taken until the veterans were assured that "they would be free to carry the Southern flag whenever and wherever they pleased." The vote was approved by Commander-in-Chief Rice A. Pierce, who had on a former occasion opposed such a reunion when informed that it would be possible only if the Southern flags were furled. Paul Roy, representative of Governor Earle of Pennsylvania, said that he would carry the invitation to the G. A. R. meeting which is to be held in Grand Rapids, Michigan, next week. The action taken by that body will, of course, determine whether the joint reunion is held.

Many, many years ago, it was Garfield, if we remember correctly, who, on a visit to Africa, was asked to address a large gathering of colored people. He said in his address, "We are told in the Bible that Ethiopia shall reach out her hands unto God. It seems to me," he continued, "as if God was reaching out His hand to Ethiopia." Well, Providence has not always been on the side of the heaviest battalions.

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

The Renewal of the Inner Life

The Procession of the Seasons, as it passes, year by year, before our eyes, seems, as it were, a perpetual balancing of the powers of life and death. In the spring and early summer, life seems to be the conqueror, carrying everything before it. But in the late summer and fall we see life on the wane. There is a standing still for a time and then decay and death assert themselves, and as the fall advances the leaves turn from the bright and vivid green of spring, to the gorgeous coloring of the fall which seems, as it were, to be the sunset of the year, ushering in the night of winter when death takes the place of life.

Death and Resurrection in Nature.

Winter, however, does not win a complete victory over life, for the dead plants have left their seeds behind, apparently lifeless, but carrying within them the promise of a renewal of life, when the winter is over. This is true also of the trees, which bare and lifeless as they appear to be, nevertheless are carrying over to another year the growth in trunk and branches which they have won from Nature during the preceding spring and summer. Just as there was a pause during the summer when the life was yielding up its sovereignty to decay and death, so, too, in the late winter there is a similar pause when death and life change places, and spring asserts itself as the champion of the sovereignty of life.

The Life of the Body.

If we knew Nature alone, who could tell whether life or death was the master? If, too, we only had our bodily life to go by, we should be faced by the same baffling question. For though our bodies, as a rule, survive the constant struggle in Nature between life and death for perhaps three score years and ten, or even four score years, we know that the winter of our life must inevitably come, and our bodies, like the fading and falling leaf, must return to the dust from which they came. But there is this vast difference between man and Nature, namely, that while so far as his body is concerned, he belongs to the natural order; his inner life, that of his soul or spirit, belongs to the Eternal Order, over which death has no power to exercise its dominion.

The Life of the Soul.

So far from this, even while the body is traveling downward towards the Valley of the Shadow of Death, the soul may be growing stronger and more vividly conscious of its true life all the time. For St. Paul says:—"For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." 2 Cor. 4:16. This daily renewal of the inner life runs parallel with the renewal of the bodily life, but continues unchecked when the latter wanes.

The Means of Grace.

There are certain means which we have to use in order that we may keep the body in health, such as sleep, food, fresh air, and exercise. And there are also means provided by God Himself, for the support, health and growth of our inner life. These are called the means of grace, because it is grace which nourishes and supports the soul and inspires it to make manifest to the world the life of the spirit. Thus in the last verse of the second Epistle of St. Peter, we read:—"Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ." So, too, St. Paul, in revealing to us the secret of his own wonderful life, says:—"By the grace of God I am what I am: and His grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all; yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me." 1 Cor. 15:10.

The Grace of God.

The Grace of God may, perhaps, be defined as the influence of the Holy Spirit upon our inner life. Thus in the Confirmation Service, when the Bishop dedicates each candidate to the service of God, he says:—"Defend, O Lord, this Thy child with Thy heavenly grace, that he may continue Thine forever, and daily increase in Thy Holy Spirit more and more, until he come unto Thy everlasting Kingdom." Here we have a clear indication that the Church's conception of the Christian life is one of growth in grace, through the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in the inner man. This gives to the means of grace a very great importance in the development of the Spiritual life and the neglect of them cannot but hinder and retard the growth of the soul.

The Means of Grace Belongs to the Eternal Order.

This neglect may be due to the fact that there is a complete failure to realize the full significance of the means of grace. When used rightly, we pass out of the natural order into the eternal, and we are brought into contact and communion with eternal realities. It is this which enables the inner life not only to maintain its vitality but to continue to grow stronger and more effective while the physical life is waning and becoming more and more subject to the law of natural decay. Physically old age cannot renew its strength like the eagle, but spiritually it can do so. In fact, the inner life of the true Christian is already an eternal life, for Christ said of His disciples: "I give unto them eternal life and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand."

The Gift of Light.

We praise Thee, Father, for the light
That hath redeemed us from the night,
Which with its darkness and its gloom
Would make this earth a living tomb.
We praise Thee for the glorious night,
Which hath redeemed us from the night.

We praise Thee for its colors fair
Which light doth scatter everywhere,
The green earth and the sky so blue,
The birds and flowers of every hue.
We thank Thee for the golden light
Which hath redeemed us from the night.

We praise Thee, too, for Him who came
To be on earth a heav'nly flame,
To shine into the hearts of men
And make them clean and pure again.
We praise Thee for Thy Living Light
Who hath redeemed us from the Night.

Our Church and the Rural Negro

By MOULTRIE GUERRY,

Chaplain, University of the South, Sewanee, Tennessee.

ONE NIGHT under the stars out in the open field I held service for a congregation of plantation Negroes. White people heard about it and came, too. A lumberman shyly gathered on the outer edge in cars and wagons. I said:

I would like for my Colored friends to sing and pray for us and I will preach."

After a pause a leader stepped forward and said: "Do you hear what the White preacher say? Well, it's a good thing, 'cause white people can't sing and they can't pray like we-all, 'cause we suffer; and they can't preach much. But we are going to sing so good and pray so hard, this-here white preacher got ter preach!"

And they did; and I did. And hearts were blended into their consuming longing and child-like faith as the organ tones of their song and their eloquent prayer went up to God who is nearer than hands or feet.

I could multiply the story of such an experience in the wide-open countryside of Hagood, S. C. Baptist and Methodist Churches for Colored people, with their crowded congregations, gave me the privilege of preaching; and it was a privilege. I knew it and they knew it; and their invitations were presented in formal manner suited to the importance of their religious services. They asked me to tell them how to live. And yet they humbled me with their own religious insight. One preacher "warmed up" his congregation for me, and to my amazement I detected through the shouting the essentially sound moral as well as fervent substance of his words. One introduced me as a White preacher unused to a congregation moved by the spirit; and then he graciously added, "But they tell me that still waters run deep."

Perhaps my most amazing experiences were with the convicts at the State Prison Farms. There I found them—contrary to the idea of many that the Negro has little or no moral content to his religious feeling—wrestling with the contradiction in a salvation through faith where actions proved that faith insincere. And when they asked me to preach on the Prodigal Son, and I asked them to interpret it for me if they could, they said that since Jesus told the story, then the father was God and the son themselves, and they were trying to go home to Him. And they responded effectively to treatment and direction of Christian management and to the superintendency of a gentleman of understanding; and how they sang!

But such treatment was rare. The one group of Negroes I have seen who would not sing was a chain gang along the road, under a brutal foreman who had forced one of his prisoners who could not swim into a pool and let him drown. However, when grateful mention was made of the fact that they had opened a road over which a doctor had just passed to save a person's life, they did sit up and sing, in their chains.

Out of such experience as a Churchman among rural Negroes my first observation is that religion is a potent and wonderful factor among them.

The windows in the Chapel at Tuskegee have pictured in stain-glass the longing and the courage of the Negro religious spirit as expressed in their spirituals: "Swing Low," "Joshua Fit the Battle of Jericho," etc. Splendid that intelligent Negroes have exalted their contribution to music and spiritual feeling. The printed interpretation of those windows contains this fine passage:

"Religion—what more has it meant to our people? It needs only the mentioning to remind us that it is the church, it is religion that has steadied, nurtured and developed our people. Out of the church the schools have sprung; out of the church business has sprung; out of the church the leadership of our people has come, inspired by its message of higher and better things.

"One of the strong wise women of our race put it whimsically . . . : 'Who but the church would have given such ungrudging opportunity to such a backward people? Who but the church would have let them sing in the choir when everybody knew they could not sing? Who but the church would have let them preach when everybody knew they did not know how to preach? Who but the church would have let them manage the business and the funds, when there was good reason to suspect that many of them not only did not know what to do with the funds but, carrying the bag, also, "carried away what was put therein." So the church nurtured our people and gave them opportunity for self-expression. . . . 'Let my right hand forget her cunning and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if I forget thee, O Jerusalem.' "

MY SECOND observation is that they are 'forgetting" to a great degree, or have good reason to do without a church that fails their newest needs. Business and professions have opened the doors to leadership in other ways, and the stress of the present world conflict of nation and races, ambition for improvement here and solutions of this world's problems leave no time for "sweet chariots," and the bugle calls from Ethiopia do not seem to jibe with "Steal away." Many of the religious leaders feel that the race is at a crossroads in regard to the church. I attended an important conference at Duke University in May to which Mr. Newbold of Raleigh called deans of religion and college presidents to consider education and race relations. It was significant that the religious issues were so prominent, and that the Negro leaders were so well chosen and so outspoken about trends in religious thinking. Hampton Institute, with its summer conferences for clergy of all sorts, from the rural as well as the urban centres, had the most concrete suggestion for enlightening the religious leaders and giving an immediate opportunity to enjoy fellowship and acquaintance with one another and with fresh and vigorous ideas. With due reverence for the unequaled contribution religion has made to Negro life, nevertheless the Negro leaders felt that their churches were in need of enlightenment and finer leadership.

A few days ago I received a letter from a lay friend of mine about people whom I know well:

"Negroes like Bob and Belton, and Willie and Albert need someone to preach to them, for their religion doesn't satisfy them at all. They say, 'Some go and shout and pray and come through—and steal on the way home.' Willie says he doesn't believe in seeking and coming through. They really need a higher religion. I imagine there are a good many like that. Our house maid said they would like to go to our church. She reads the Prayer Book. . . . I wish our church could start a mission around here."

WHAT is our Church doing to answer such a call and such a need?

Our Church is doing one incomparable thing:

education of the Negroes from the rural as well as the urban sections in parochial and diocesan schools and particularly in the widely-recognized schools under the American Church Institute. If one does not know of the schools of the Institute, one should write its head, the Rev. Robert W. Patton, D. D., 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, and get surveys by representative critics in education and letters. Dr. Patton writes me as follows:

"The Institue is making Churchmen in our schools who then graduate and find few or no Episcopal Churches to attend. This matter is in the hands of the various dioceses entirely. Our racial episcopate as now organized seems to miss the mark, and the only hope for the situation seems to be the adoption of a definite policy for the whole Church which will overcome these difficulties."

Dr. Patton puts his finger on two things that need to be done by our Church: (1) actual functioning, and (2) policy.

My questionnaire and studies for a report to the Regional Rural Conference (Province of Sewanee) at Auburn, Alabama, in June, brought out the amazing lack of our Church work among Negroes, especially in the rural field. Except for the coastal states, few dioceses admitted to having any rural work among Negroes save through industrial schools above mentioned. In Tennessee the congregation here at Sewanee is almost unique as practically a rural church, and is amazing both in the fact that it should stand in such rare company and in the opportunity to demonstrate in a place of central culture and church life what the church can mean to a community of Negroes far from the city centres of their own culture groups. In the face of unspeakable lacks, it is well to speak of unessayed opportunities. So what can we do? A few suggestions:

Try to understand what has happened and what is happening. An excellent brief discussion of history and policies in Race Relations is found in chapters 4 and 5 by Dr. R. J. Colbert in "Social Problems" (Gillin, Dittmer and Colbert; Century Company). For an encyclopedia of the Negro see the "Negro Year Book," by M. N. Work, Tuskegee Institute, Alabama. Such pamphlets of the Interracial Commission, Standard Building, Atlanta, as "Recent Trends" and "America's Tenth Man," are illuminating indeed.

The Negro was fitted into a slave-cultured pattern of civilization in the Southern States. In that civilization the white landless population was largely crowded out, accounting no doubt, in large part, for isolation and withdrawal of the mountaineer. The Civil War and reconstruction smashed the pattern, and industry has opened the way for the landless whites and the mountaineer to pour out into a new Southern system of life. The Colored race has been forced largely to go its way. In the South, and in the North as well, segregation and separation have been the order. Disadvantages have been great and racial conflict has been terrible and uncomprehending. But the advantage has been seen in that racial leadership which began in their racially separate churches. Business and professions flourished on racial clienteles, until now the white man is discovering that he is more and more reaching across a racial line to deal with his equal in personal qualities, character, art, intelligence, public service, culture and leadership. Perhaps some of this racial leadership has been disdainful of the white man's civilization and the so-called white man's religion, but the fact that the late Dr. Harrison rose to the pinnacle of racial leadership in the role of "De Lawd" in Green Pastures, a real religious epic, promises a tremendous pride in the development of the Negroes' religious spirit, and of the spirituals as a contribution to the human race, and invites the spiritually-minded of different races to seek a high partnership in the Body of Christ.

Therefore let the members of the Christian Church seek the honor and the fellowship of the superior ones of the Negro racial group. One of the most valuable citizens of Sumter County, South Carolina, was a woman doctor, graduate of Johns Hopkins, who refused offers from Northern cities and stayed by her Colored people as a beloved physician and County Public Schools Superintendent. She was an Episcopalian and we had high hopes of starting a Sunday School together. The existing Church people, white or colored, can get in touch with such Negro leaders who are coming out of our schools and who want to do great things for their people, but who find it hard to resist the temptation to seek those centres of population where they can find intellectual congeniality and companionship in their group, and a livelihood that is not destructive of their standards of life.

Not only must we encourage the individual, but improve the situation in the whole community.

One of the most fascinating and yet objective analyses of the rural situation among Negroes in the deep South is "Shadow of the Plantation," by Charles S. Johnson, Fisk University, Nashville; and he brings out the fact that the rural Negro who has been drawn from his home to Tuskegee and similar schools cannot go back to the old pattern of life. I asked the son of Booker T. Washington, at Tuskegee, what the answer was, and he said: "Tell me when you can find out."

What has happened to millions of the Negro race is this: whereas the separate group culture has been developed in urban centres, the plantation Negro and the plantation owners have fallen back into the habit pattern of the slave culture, under the form of share-cropping and tenant farming, which often lacks in many ways and in many places the personal equation. The owner of land, especially if he is absentee or a bank, is not so personally interested in the welfare of Negroes whose souls he owns but not their bodies. Economically the days of that system are numbered. The schools are doing a great work in saving from the rural situation many who would be caught in its grip. But cannot the churchmen and the dioceses with rural work and rural programs help to salvage the remnants by giving needed encouragement to the leaders from our Negro schools to come out to those parts where education and training for a new order is needed desperately? The glaring disparities in expenditure for public school education for Negroes as compared with that for white children should make all Christian people work for improvement in the schools. According to the report, "Thy Neighbor as Thyself," of the Atlanta Interracial Commission, not only is the disparaity at best $3.00 to $1.00 and as low as $9.00 to $1.00, but apparently funds are often diverted to white schools that have been appropriated for schools for Negroes.

SO MUCH for what might be done in the way of encouragement to schools and to existing churches of other denominations as well as to individuals, within or without the Episcopal Communion. What can the Church within itself be doing? Letters have come to me telling of faithful priests, of laymen and lay-women gathering little groups for school and church, but perhaps this paragraph from Bishop Finlay of Upper South Carolina is the most suggestive:

"I have bought a farm of about 245 acres, with a good house on it and have put a very intelligent young Negro clergyman in charge. He is able to teach agriculture, some animal husbandry, rough carpentry, brick laying, and is a good athlete, and also a reasonably competent director of Negro music, spirituals, etc. I am encouraging him to work along the lines of a broad, constructive program that will touch the life of the Colored people in almost every phase, especially among young people. . . . For the present he will have only one church. In the past we have given the Negro clergyman too many points to cover and very poor equipment."

As for policy, the situation seems to be this: The trend of racial separation since the Civil War drew out of the Episcopal Church the Negroes who had nothing of their own leadership and only a sort of back gallery membership; and so reluctant are they to give up a chance for leadership and to come into an adjunct of the white man's church, that many of our Southern churchmen have advocated, with reason, the separate missionary racial jurisdiction and episcopate, as if the Negro members were in Hayti or Japan, and responsible therefore to the National Council directly and to the General Convention, where their delegates would not be completely crowded out by election of white delegates exclusively. However, the Committees of the Synod of Sewanee and of the General Convention have turned to the policy of holding to the catholic principle of the unity of the races within the territory of a diocese; and as a matter of fact, all but three dioceses in the South give practically full and direct representation in their conventions to the parishes and missions of Colored Episcopalians. The last Convention of the Diocese of North Carolina under the leadership of Bishop Penick declared that the unity of the work must be recognized. "Any tendency, therefore, to segregate the Negro work as a peculiar problem to be dealt with through special machinery we should regard as unfortunate." But the representation needs to be made more real, and less nominal and apolgetic.

James Weldon Johnson, a great Negro leader and poet, said to me, in effect: "Your Church is small, but if you do not go back to the way of the racial churches that vastly outnumber you, you may, by practicing the principle of the oneness of the Church, which you profess, make your own greatest contribution to Race Relations and Religion."

At all events the Church, as several diocese and as a whole, must give very great consideration to the matter of policy and the carrying out of far-reaching programs for the redemption of a condition and of a people, especially in those neglected areas of the country districts, where potentialities are great indeed for preserving and expanding Christ's Religion among a child-like people of God.

heavy traffic is closely akin to the same sadly indifferent attitude.

The wreck of homes and the waste of lives is something that every Christian should take to heart. It is not too much to demand that communities spend a little more thought and effort and money to avoid that which can be avoided. England, with much greater concentrated population, carefully supervises her traffic with the result there is a much finer record of safety on the roads. Surely we have the brains and energy to go and do likewise.

Salt of the Earth

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,
Bishop of Washington.

THE MASTER in His Sermon on the Mount, used these striking words: "Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost his savour wherewith shall it be salted: It is thenceforth good for nothing."

The function of salt is to freshen, cleanse and preserve. It has an indispensable place in the whole economy of our life. It performs so important a function that in the practice of medicine and surgery it is recognized as a valuble and indispensable agent. Reckoned with other things that we use daily it seems comparatively inconsequential, and yet we could not do without it.

The Master was speaking of that quality of character in men that serves to make them in all their contacts and fellowships wholesome and cleansing factors. He implied that in our domestic, social and economic systems salt has an essential place. Addressing Himself to the men and women to whom He was speaking, He contended that what they possessed in themselves of the qualities that salt embodies was an important element in maintaining the best and most enduring things of life. Without it, life degenerates and society becomes corrupt.

The analogy is a striking and suggestive one, and there are abundant evidences of its application to our individual and corporate life. Repeatedly, we have had demonstration of the salutary influence exercised by one who, with purity of motive and definiteness of confiiction attempted to bring to a situation that was threatening to the peace and happiness of their fellows, the refreshing and renewing influence that proceeds from a life that is clean and wholesome. Sometimes a single individual in a critical situation accomplishes a regeneration that effects for good a whole community.

A striking illustration of what we have in mind is presented in the extraordinary service rendered by the late Jane Addams. Quite singlehanded she attacked a situation in one of the congested parts of Chicago that, to her vision, imperilled those whose lives were shadowed by misfortune and lack of privilege. Without adequate support she undertook to make a more wholesome community by bringing to it the strength and purity of her own life.

The story of her bold aventure and the record of Hull House is one of the most dramatic episodes in the history of our modern cities. It seems incredible that one person, and she a woman, could effect such large results in a comparatively brief space of time. She literally took her Christian principles and tested them by application to the problems of those who, of themselves, were incapable of resisting forces that were inimical to their well-being. Little by little she broadened the field of her influence until it spread to a continent and ultimately to the world at large. Her extraordinary service is a practical demonstration of the force of the Master's word that, those who possess the fine qualities of salt are the real preservers of the best things in life.

The test of what we hold of Christian faith is found in its adaptability, not only to our own needs, but to the needs of those who are less fortunate than ourselves. If the "proof of the pudding is in the eating," the proof of the validity and utility of our Christian profession is in its fitness to serve the world in which we live. It is increasingly clear that reformation of every kind are effected by those who, in themselves, possess qualities that cleanse and enrich every situation with which they have to do. Life cannot be made the better and the richer by a salt that has lost its savour.

Church Union In Canada

By A. D. MATHESON,

Pastor of Chalmers-Wesley United Church of Quebec, Canada.

A LITTLE more than ten years ago, on June 10, 1925, to be exact, "The United Church of Canada" came into being. It is in order now for other Christian communions to examine this adventure of faith, and to endeavor to estimate whether the example of the Canadian Church is worthy of still wider application.

There have been times in history when the chief emphasis in the Church's programme needed to be upon doctrine; other periods when the form of Church government demanded particular attention. In our time, for many reasons which need not here be enumerated, it is undoubtedly true that the primary duty of the Church of Jesus Christ is the building up of the Kingdom of God.

Canada, with its relatively small population spread over a vast area has always been—for all the churches—a field of Home Missionary Enterprise. The Fathers of Confederation named our land the "Dominion of Canada," praying that it might indeed become "His dominion from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth."

For twenty years previous to 1925 the possibility of union between the Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational Churches had been thought about, prayed over and planned for. In Assembly after Assembly and Conference after Conference, the principle of union was accepted: and to the many scattered communities calling most loudly for union, assurance was given that in due time organic union would be effected. Such was the necessity for union, and such the trust of the country generally in the repeated declarations of the several Church courts that as early as 1923 there were in existence 1,245 congregations, comprising 3,000 preaching stations where local unions or cooperations looking to union were already in operation. The writer, leaving the Theological College in 1916, was asked by the Presbytery of Montreal to go to Arundel—a scattered community in the Laurentions—and to assume charge of a union experiment in that place. Previously a Methodist minister and a Presbyterian minister had lived in houses opposite one another and had "competed" with one another over twenty-five miles of country. Their congregations had contributed towards the salary of their ministers, in the one case $250 per annum, in the other case $300. The balance for both men came from Mission Funds. The effect of the experiment was at once a new spirit of Christian cooperation in the community. Within a year and a half the united congregation was raising $900 towards salary and no special emphasis had been put upon money. This is mentioned just by way of example of what was going on through the whole country.

IN 1925 union became a reality. Like all human experiments, the union was not a perfect union, because approximately thirty per cent of the Presbyterians and ten per cent of their ministers elected to remain out of union and carry on by themselves. Many of them feared that they would be no longer Presbyterians and that some of their cherished privileges might be lost, chiefly the right to call the minister of their choice. In reality their fears were quite unfounded. The right of call has been observed consistently, for it is written into the Constitution of the Church. Likewise, is it with other ancient rights and privileges. And with respect to the matter of world fellowship the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance at its first meeting following June, 1925, declared the United Church of Canada to be Presbyterian in all the essentials—Doctrine, Ministry and Church Government—and on application received the United Church as a member of the Presbyterian family of the world without a single dissenting vote. Lest the impression be conveyed that the United Church is only Presbyterian, it must also be said that in a similar manner to that mentioned above, the new Church has standing of recognition and fellowship with the Methodist and the Congregational Churches of Britain and of the world generally. The reaches of our fellowship have not been curtailed. They have been expanded.

Let it be remembered that the United Church of Canada came into being as the result of faith and prayer on the part of many thousands of people. The leaders of the movement, in all three Churches, were men of spiritual vision and of statesman-like outlook. Above all, they sought to carry in their hearts an attitude of Christian charity towards others whose viewpoint was different from their own.

The first Moderator, Dr. George C. Pidgeon, for many years pastor of Bloor Street Presbyterian Church, Toronto, represents the very best in Presbyterianism. His successor, Dr. James Endicott, Foreign Mission Secretary of the Methodist Church, is a great missionary statesman. Dr. Wm. Gunn, the third in line, and now deceased, from the editorial staff of the Congregational Church, was one of the most beautifully Christian personalities of this generation. Then came Dr. Edmund Oliver, Principal of St. Andrew's College, Saskatoon, perhaps the most typically Canadian figure of all the group, a man of unusual vigor and earnestness. His death a few weeks ago has been a great loss to Canada. His successor was Dr. T. Albert Moore, the genial and most capable Secretary of the Church from its inauguration. Our present Moderator is Dr. Richard Roberts, the scholarly and gifted minister of Sherbourne Church, Toronto. In him we recognize the leader we need most at this time.

HOW rapidly these ten years have passed. We have ceased thinking of men as Methodist, as Congregational, or as Presbyterian. We have discovered our traditions to be the richer as we have become more familiar with the spiritual streams from which have sprung the several uniting Churches. A new generation of ministers have gone out from our Theological Colleges who have been bred on the larger outlook.

Everything worth-while costs something. It is a law of life that vicarious suffering is at the heart of things. If one has pointed out to him instances of bitterness here or there (now thank God growing less), of separation between families, etc., we must remember Him "who for the joy that was set before Him endured the Cross."

Already we are looking forward to further unions. At the last meeting of the Presbyterian General Assembly (continuing), Dr. Roberts spoke, the first Moderator of the United Church to be accorded that privilege, and pled with those brethren to forget past differences and to look forward with us to a united facing of a common task.

The writer in 1922 became minister of "Chalmers" Church, Quebec. In January, 1931, "Wesley" congregation united with "Chalmers", forming "Chal-

Finalities and Open Doors in the Christian Faith

11. Finality and the Person of Jesus Christ

By STAMO S. SPATHEY,

Editor of The Book Reviews.

IN the May 4 issue of The Southern Churchman, I had the pleasure of contributing an article on the first finality of the Christian Faith, that is, the existence of God. I pointed out the open doors of a progressive revelation and stated that though we know God as our Divine Parent, yet we do not know all about Him. This we must of necessity keep constantly in our minds lest we fall into the error against which the Psalmist Asaph protested in Psalm 50, when he wrote, ". . . . thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself . . ." If we keep the doors of progressive revelation closed, we are bound to make God in our image and likeness. It has been done in the past; it can happen again. God save us from the sin of spiritual stagnation. A religion whose God is the living God must develop from age to age into the, ". . . Knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature (elikias, age) of the fulness (complement) of Christ." Eph. 4:13. Our only source of knowledge for the fuller revelation of God is not the theological reasoning, nor the philosophical acumen; for these are methods of intepretation—they are servants not masters; but the person of Jesus Christ, we go to Him to find what God is like; to know His mind, His love, His wisdom. In other words, we must find God in human life which to us Christians is the Incarnation. Let us remember that Jesus Christ has no philosophical or theological arguments to offer to convince us of the existence of God. He just states, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father," not an angel, nor a saint, nor any of nature's forces, but the Father. So, Christianity is the religion of a Divine Parenthood.

Now, I wish to take a step further to point out the second finality in the Christian Faith, that is, the Person of Jesus Christ Our Lord. To be Christians, we must believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God. We take the testimony of John the Beloved Disciple, "Hereby know ye the Spirit of God; Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh (lit. in human life), is of God." The verb "Come" in the original language is a perfect participle, elelythota, which means action in the past with results that remain. Hence, Jesus has come in human life; and this is final. John speaks words that breathe positive air. He does not suggest guesses, as if lacking assurance. He made the coming of Jesus in human life a test of faith, and more than that, he made it a test of the presence of the Holy Spirit. "Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come (elelythota) in the flesh, is of God." This is the only witness that can bear the name Christian. He came but He is still coming. Came once to continue. Born once to be born into many human hearts and lives until the end. He came once to stay with us to the end of the world. This makes the Christian faith not primarily an historical event, but a present reality, yea, rather a necessity. The Incarnation of the Divine Reason (Logos) in Jesus Christ is to continue. This is what the Apostle Paul calls "Christ formed in you," and again, "Christ in you the hope of glory." The Christian is the man in whom Christ is reproduced. A Christ-like man. This is the perpetual result of the Incarnation.

Without referring to any other witness, in fact the whole New Testament, which was not a part of the Bible as it is now, when our Lord was in the flesh, is a witness that Jesus Christ has come in human life. This is final. Whether the world like it or not, this is a fact which no argument can contradict. A brilliant German physician, Albert Schweitzer, who found Jesus in human life as life's great physician, able to heal all our ailments, has compiled a large volume on "The Quest of The Historical Jesus." In it he wonders at last that Jesus has come in the flesh as though it had not been so believed by Christians now for two thousand years. He really attempted to satisfy his curiosity as to whether Jesus Christ has really come into human life by studying what others have thought and written about Him. The many biographies of Jesus that have been produced in recent years bear witness to the fact that Jesus has come in the flesh, as the Disciples of old testified. This is Christianity's second finality.

The New Testament was written not to prove that Jesus Christ had come—as a mere argumentative proof, but to give certain details about His coming. The writers never imagined that their brief literary witnesses would become a Bible—a new Testament. Their main idea was to express some of their impressions which Jesus had made on them—His wondrous personality, His never-to-be-forgotten words that truly "are spirit and are life"; His works of love done on the needy that were nothing less than miracles which a God alone could do; and His tragic death. His death had shocked them to the depths of their being; even their faith was wrecked and we see them led by Peter, their chief spokesman, going back to their former jobs: "Simon Peter saith unto them, I go fishing; they say unto him, we also go with thee." (John 21:3.) This was the first break of the apostolic company. A severe disappointment is the most wrecking force in life. It would take a miracle to rebuild faith and love again. This happened. Jesus whom they had seen dying on the cruel cross was risen. This is final. They met even death bearing witness to their conviction. It was unshaken and unshakable. They wrote about it, preached it to the world. The brilliant Paul the Apostle spoke and wrote only about the Death and Resurrection of Jesus Christ. His one theme was "Jesus died for our sins and arose for our justification." He did not care whether the world believed it or not. He just preached it and wrote of it. This was final for him an the rest of the New Testament writers; it is final for us now and will be for ever.

Now, how about some open doors. Are there any with regard to the person of Jesus Christ? There are. In fact, there must be. There have always been, and there will be until He comes again. The history of the Christian faith is an abiding witness that the Person of the Master has not been fully understood and fully appreciated by mankind; even by Christians themselves. For instance, His Wondrous Birth. It has become a Christmas, our calendar beginning with the year of our Lord, Anno Domini 4.

Just a word about Jesus' Death. It is the only death that has become an (at-one-man, uniting man to God), atonement; a marvelous changing in the history of the old system of sacrifice, and the only death that would do something for the living! Now, what was really done for mankind when Jesus died on the Cross? Many other men died on crosses, in fact, there were two more men crucified with Jesus on Calvary. Their death was a satisfaction made to the law they violated. They paid for what they had been taking their hands, that is, social standards of living. Only Jesus' Death has become an Atonement. Needless to refer to the many

The Church's Responsibility in Child Care andTraning

By B. B. BAGBY, M. D.,
Director, Bureau Child Health, Virginia.

VERY few of our schools twenty years ago taught the practical things of life. Therefore, most of the mothers of new-born babies today did not learn any systematic methods of caring for children. Realizing this handicap, many of our lay organizations, such as Women's Clubs, Parent-Teacher Associations, Home Demonstration Clubs, etc., are placing especial stress on this particular phase of the adult education, just now so much in the public eye. This article is written to induce the churches also to develop this work in their program.

Very few events have occured in the last few years that have attracted more attention than the birth and the care of the Dionne quintuplets. These babies averaged less than two pounds apiece at birth, and if they had been born twenty years ago, would have died within the first few days of life. As a result of the scientific care given them, at the end of their first year they have all grown to be normal babies. A newspaper reported a few weeks ago that when they were thirteen months old four out of the five could swim. Much of this scientific care is so simple that every mother should similarly care for her baby. Many authorities believe also that the advance that has been made in physical health can be duplicated in mental health, when the parnts are properly instructed in the care and training of their children. And should not the Christian Church be the chief organization to promote this adult educational program?

With this end in view, the State Department of Health has assembled a set of free bulletins to be used as a basis for group discussions in the churches, Sunday Schools, Missionary Societies, etc., of our State. These bulletins deal not only with the prevention of disease, but also with child care and training. Various problems of behavior, such as lying, stealing, malice, jealousy, stubbornness, and fear, are discussed, also ways of promoting love, obedience, consideration, etc. Discussions are encouraged about what traits of character may be inherited by blood or acquired by association; and if acquired, what may be done to prevent the promotion of objectionable ones. The evil effects of home criticism of the church or school, the teacher or the minister, in the presence of the child, are dwelt on. These are only a few of many phases of child guidance that may be discussed by these groups.

Church people are called upon so often to give their time and money, that many times it becomes necessary for them to choose the most important causes. Certainly nothing is more important than the conduct of our children, which is governed to a great extent by their care and training. Since the State Department of Health will furnish free literature on the subject, there will be no monetary expense attached to this work, but only some time spent in personal service—real "home mission" work. Some churches could use the publications in their weekly prayer meetings; others could conduct the groups on the Sundays when there is no preaching service. Parents of beginners or primary children might meet in a group on Sundays when their children are in the classes. Where there is a cradle roll, it would be comparatively easy to get the mothers to meet in a child discussion group. A small enrollment of about five to fifteen in these groups is most satisfactory, and the best results are obtained when the group is composed of parents of children of about the same age. Invite each mother to tell how she manages her particular difficulties. Women will often be willing to join such a group when they are not willing to attend a class or a lecture. The mothers who are not connected with the Church should also be encouraged to meet with these groups.

Many people who read this article will perhaps feel that they already know what is in the bulletins, but they will surely find new ideas if they read them for themselves. Experience has shown, however, that often mothers know these things, but do not practice them, and to accomplish the best results, it will be necessary to have these mothers come together to receive inspiration and to plan a united campaign for the betterment of the children.

All the Church people with whom I have talked have been enthusiastic about the plan. They feel: 1. That prevention of disease, care of the sick, and child training are definitely Christian responsibilities. 2. That mothers of young children if properly invited, will come to a group meeting for discussion if the subject pertains to their own children, when they would not attend a group meeting to study, for instance, about India or China. 3. That mothers of children of about the same age will get far more out of the discussion than would a group of women with children of various ages, or those who have no children at all. 4. That by having mothers from the churches, a class of people will be reached that might not be reached through a woman's club or any other lay women's organization. 5. That since the women are church women, they will be especially anxious to have suggestions about training their children along mental and spiritual lines as well as about health matters. 6. That life-lasting friendships will be formed among these group members all definitely associated with the church. 7. That by having the mother who is not connected with the church to attend these groups she may be influenced to take part in other activities.

If any of the readers feel that such a group should be organized in their church, they can receive more definite instructions about organizing it, and how free material may be secured by writing to the State Department of Health, Richmond, Virginia.

FINALITIES AND OPEN DOORS IN CHRISTIAN FAITH.

theories as to the effects the Death of our Lord has had upon humanity. Most of them are cruel and unmoral. They degrade the very justice of God Himself. We must keep this door open for further light. The biological theory is becoming an idea of the Atonement, but it is simply an idea, with some truth in it, as other ideas have. That the attempts that have been made to define the person and work of Jesus Christ divided the Church into many sects are further witness that doors must be kept open for fuller understanding of Jesus our Lord.

LOVELY THINGS.

Let me remember only lovely things,
The scattered smiles of children at their play—
The sapphire of the sea, a star adrift,
The spreading glory of the dying day;
The friendliness of those who light my soul
Like crystals woven into winter snow;
The clear, blue sky that follows summer rain,
Sweet, warbled notes, a sunset's afterglow;
And I will keep the storehouse of my mind
Barred to the gloom of memories that fret—
I shall remember only lovely things,
When time has taught me, wisely, to forget.

FOUR OF OLDEST CHURCH PAPERS ARE PUBLISHED IN RICHMOND.

Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Baptist Periodicals Printed Here.

In a recent issue of the Richmond Times-Dispatch the Rev. J. M. Rowland, D. D., Editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, contributed the following interesting information:

"Many people do not know that in Richmond four of the oldest church papers have been doing business for more than a hundred years and that they are published by the same press (The Richmond Press). The same men do the work and the same type and ink goes into the making of these papers that go out to the Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians and Baptists. This is a fine example of Christian cooperation.

'The Presbyterian of the South, edited by Dr. W. S. Campbell, was established 111 years ago. It serves the Presbyterians of the South and has an able list of contributing editors.

"The Religious Herald, the official organ of the Baptists of Virginia, is 107 years old. It is edited by Dr. R. H. Pitt, one of the veterans of his church, and a man who has grown keener with the passing years. He is full of wisdom and ability. Dr. Pitt has been connected with the Herald for forty-seven years and his bow has not lost its strength nor his heart its courage. This paper was established by the Rev. Mr. Sands and it has the distinction of having had only three editors in all those years.

"The Southern Churchman is the official paper of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the South. It is a strong, dignified church periodical, full of worthwhile matter and church information to the membership of that great denomination. It has just celebrated 100 years of history and is strong and vigorous. Bishop Tucker is the president of the board and the editors are Drs. Charles W. Sheerin and F. F. Neve. The paper is a credit to that great church.

"The Richmond Christian Advocate is the official organ of the Methodist people of the Virginia Conference and the editor is the Rev. J. M. Rowland, D. D., who has held this position for fourteen years. It has had eight editors in its history.

"It is a matter of interest that for over a century these four religious papers have done business in Richmond—a record no other city in the nation can claim. Many other institutions have closed out and passed from the scene, but these organs of these four great branches of the Church of Christ have continued their courses through wars and famines and depression and other conflicts. It speaks well for those upon whom the responsibility has rested and upon the supporters of these denominations."

CHURCH UNION IN CANADA.

mers-Wesley". During the years that have since elapsed the most remarkable spirit of unity has prevailed in the congregation. The effort of Christian cooperation required in this adventure has called out new graces in many that perhaps before had been hidden. So has it been in scores of local unions in our cities and in hundreds of instances in the country.

Dr. R. B. Cochrane, Superintendent of Home Missions, declares emphatically that it would not have been possible to meet the moral and religious needs of our people during the distressing period through which we have passed, if organic Union had not come in 1925. If these three great Churches had continued to go their separate ways, carrying on their efforts all across half a continent, by this time many churches would have been closed, many ministers on the street, many fields unshepherded, many challenges to service unheeded. Since 1925, two hundred and ninety-one new fields have been opened, six hundred and forty-two have been merged or rearranged (this in addition to very many unions of self-supporting congregations). Today there are 1,100 fields assisted from Home Mission funds, and on them 1,336 men and women who receive salary grants. In many districts, for example, in Southern Saskatchewan and Southern Manitoba, the United Church has twice as many charges, as all the other communions put together. In spite of all the difficulties of these recent years, no area occupied in 1928 has been abandoned entirely.

We who are in the United Church are sure that we were led of God in this great endeavor. So enthusiastic are we that we would earnestly desire other Christian bodies to give serious consideration to the subject of union. One has only to read such a volume as, "What Is This Christianity?" by the Bishop of Croydon, to see how the tides are running in Britain. What has happened already in Scotland gives us great occasion of thanksgiving. We dare to believe that in the United States of America similar movements are even now under way; and that in due time even more wonderful organic unions may be effected—all for the furtherance of the Kingdom of Our Lord Jesus Christ.

BOOK REVIEWS

EDUCATION FOR LIFE WITH GOD: By Wilfred Evans Powell, Ph. D. New York, 1934. The Abingdon Press. Pp. 253, with Bibliography. Price, $2.00.

We should like to give this book a hearty, if belated, welcome. It is refreshing to find a book on Religious Education, written by an expert with wide experience in his field, which breathes throughout the genuine spirit of Christianity.

There is an introduction by L. A. Weigle.

Dr. Powell gives a trenchant examination of the current and recent attitude towards Religious Education, both in the Sunday and Day Schools and sifts its religious value and efficacy. He does this with frequent reference to the popular authorities and not a few reputable theologians, and reveals its inadequacies. He then states afresh the problem of Religious Education with a definite emphasis on the religious aspect, and proposes rectifying emphases and answers.

To those who feel that Religious Education is missing the mark this book brings fresh hope. It does not provide a fool-proof system but lays down the lines towards an education which will be definitely Christian and yet in a real sense an education. The title broadly summarizes the aim. To our mind no worker in this field should continue much longer as teacher or director without digesting what Dr. Powell has to say. As we face a new school session we could not do better than to make his viewpoint our own.

THE SONG OF SONGS: By George Sumner Chamberlain. Cloth. Pp. 114. Published by Wm. B. Eerdmans Company, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Price, $1.00.

This "poetical paraphrase and interpretation of the mystical book," the Song of Solomon, displays deep insight into the meaning of this least read of all the Holy Scriptures. In common speech, it loses its magical power; to some, its language is misunderstood; its fine spiritual import is lost to the great mass of Bible readers.

Mr. Chamberlain's effort to rightly interpret it is commendable. And his work is worthy of wide reception. How to find the Lord Jesus in the profoundly oriental imagery which permeates the writing is a well-wrought purpose. It is in five cantos; and embraces the eras, Solomonic on to the ascension of the greater Solomon, ending with the promise of the coming again of the predicted King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

This book might well be a companion to every constantly used Bible. So that when the period of the Song of Songs is reached in the daily readings, it might illumine and inspire the mind and heart with the majesty of the poem and glory of the One whom it anticipates.

SEAMAN'S CHURCH INSTITUTE.

Leader: Living as we do in an inland town, we seldom if ever stop to think of "those that go down to the sea in ships." But Mother Church, we are glad to say, is not so forgetful, and we should know of her work. So our program this evening is a little play. In it we ask you to imagine a family in an inland town. There are five in the family, Father, Mother, older brother, Bill, off at sea, and big sister Mary and little brother John. It is evening and the four at home are seated. The young people are studying. Father is reading the paper, and Mother is re-reading a letter from Bill.

The parts are taken as follows:

Father, Mother, Mary and John.

As they say over the radio, "Here they are."

(Characters take places, young people at a table, but Mother and Father seated a little distance away.)

Father (looking up from paper): I do wish that Bill had stayed at home instead of sailing all over the earth. Here I read of a revolution they are having in one of those South American ports to which his ship often goes. I wish we could hear from him.

Mother: Didn't I tell you I just heard from him today? He is in Tampa. Here is the letter. Hands it to him.)

Father: That is good. But what is this flag at the top? Oh, I see. It is a blue flag with a red cross in the center, seven stars around the cross, and two anchors in the lower corner. What is it, a kind of sailors' Red Cross?

Mother: No, that is the flag of the Seaman's Church Institute of America. Most of his letter is about it.

John: Oh, yes, I remember that Bill told me to always write him in care of that, if it was in one of the ports where they have them.

Mary: What is it, a school? I thought Bill said he was tired of school and never wanted to see another one. Os is it something else—you say there are a number of them?

John: I am not quite sure what it is. It seems to be a kind of Y. M. C. A. for the sailors, only run by our Church, and they are located in, let me see, here is the list: fifteen places, five on the Atlantic coast at Boston, Newport, New York, Philadelphia and Charleston. Then there are five on the Gulf coast, Tampa, where Bill is now; Mobile, New Orleans, Port Arthur (Texas), and Houston; and four on the Pacific, at San Pedro (California), San Francisco, Tacoma, and Honolulu, and one in Fort Staunton (New Mexico).

Father: A Seaman's Church Institute in New Mexico? That sounds like a joke. How can a ship get there?

John: It is far from a joke, Father, for that is where the Government has its Marine Hospital for tubercular sailors. Two hundred and fifty of them are there, and the Institute does a great work for them. I do know about that, for Phyllis Fortescue has a brother there, and he had written her all about it. The Government provides the hospital, but the Institute provides books, magazines and supervision of the recreation, and Tom Fortescue says it is great.

Father: I am glad to hear of that. But what does Bill say in his letter, Mother?

Mother: He encloses a plan of the Institute. Here it is.

Here, you see, is the upper floor where they have rooms for rent and the dormitory.

Father: Why does the Church want to go into the hotel business? Is it to make money?

Mother: By no means. That is one of the best works the Institute does. You see, the sailors' lodging houses are often disreputable houses that like to get sailors there, get them drunk and rob them of all their money, of which they have a good deal, as they are paid off in the ports. So the Church provides a place where they can be safe.

Mary: Pyllis told me a story the other day of one time that Tom was out of a job and they cared for him and a bunch of other unemployed seamen free, because they did not have any money.

But, Mother, I see they have a space marked here on the map, "Post Office". I suppose the sailors get their mail many sailors have and it keeps mail there. But why is that necessary?

John: Bill told me about that. The regular Post Office will only keep a letter for a limited length of time, and then send it to the Dead Letter Office. But the Institute is the only address many sailors have and it keeps mail for them indefinitely, until they write for it.

Father: Then here is a space called the Storage Room. What is that for?

Mother: Bill explains that lots of the men have no palce to keep their things, so the Institute will let them store their baggage there as long as they want to, just as would be the case if it were their own home. You see, Mother Church is not just a term, but a reality to many a lonely man.

John: And here is a place marked "Bank." Why do they need that?

Mother: Bill explained that. He said that when he was paid off in Tampa he had a pretty good amount of cash and the Rev. Mr. Leach there, the superintendent, explained that he could bank his money there, in large or small amounts, without any red tape, and get it when he wanted it. As it was after banking hours, this was a great convenience to him.

Father: Then here is the Library. I suppose the boys may come there and read.

Mother: Oh, yes, and not only that. For Mr. Leach, or his representative, visits every ship that comes into harbor and takes a number of magazines to them. For at sea the boys are often almost entirely without reading matter. Those magazines, he says, are always literally read to pieces.

Mary: I think I know where I can get quite a number of the new magazines. Do you suppose they would like them?

John: I remember Bill wrote me they are always anxious for them, so please send them to the Institute, as many as possible.

Father: Then here is the office. I suppose that is where Mr. Leach sits with his feet on the desk.

Mother: Maybe you would; but he is a very busy man. Bill tells of how two Frenchmen and one Italian got information that helped them to become naturalized, and two more who were sick got to the hospital through Mr. Leach's efforts, and light jobs were found for some convalescents.

Mary: But I don't see any chapel on this map. It seems strange to think of a Church Institute without some provision for church going.

Mother: Yes, it does. They have to have services in the Assembly Room in Tampa. But in many other Institutes they have beautiful chapels. In Tampa they are in a temporary building, hoping when times get better to sell it for a warehouse, so it is not a model, but it does fine work.

John: Some years ago I heard the Rev. Mr. Martin, Superintendent of the Institute in Charleston, talk, and he was a mighty fine fellow. If Mr. Leach is like him, he must be fine.

Mother: Yes, Bill says seamen everywhere sing the praises of Mr. Leach, as well as the other superintendents, all over the seas. He says they are all "men who understand" and help lots of men in all kinds of trouble by giving them just the rights kind of advice.

Father: I am very glad to hear all this; it makes me feel better about Bill's being so far from home to know that he is being watched over by the Church there as well as at home; and I am grateful to the Church for having these Institutes.

Mother: He says at the end of his letter that the League of Nations is thinking of sponsoring similar institutions in many other countries. I hope they will.

All: So do we.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

Communion Service of Old Fork Church, Hanover County, Virginia.

St. Martin's Parish still owns the beautiful communion service, the paten and chalice inscribed with the following legend: "For the use of the churches in St. Martin's Parish, in Hanover and Louisa counties, Virginia, 1759."

The history of this service is lost. There are two traditions about it. One that it was presented by St. Martin's Church, London, and the other that it was presented by William Nelson, President of the Council, and brought over by his son Thomas (afterwards Governor Nelson) upon his return from England that year, upon the completion of his education.

The following incidents are also related of this old service, in each of which Mrs. Berkeley, of "Airwell", is the heroine: First, that she defied General Tarleton and his raiders when they demanded the service; and second, that she defied the overseers of the poor who demanded it, after the glebe lands were taken from the church. Bishop Meade is authority for the last statement. It is of interest to note that this same service is now kept at the same place by the descendants of that redoubtable Churchwoman.

MEETING OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL, WOMAN'S AUXILIARY.

The National Council is holding its autumn meeting a month early, September 17-19, in order that any of its action which affects the Every-Member Canvass may be made known throughout the Church in ample time. The Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary meets directly after the Council this time, instead of preceding it as usual. Excellent attendance is indicated for both groups.

Prayer for the National Council.

Almighty Father, who dost order all things in heaven and earth; Grant to us the grace and guidance of Thy Holy Spirit. Especially we pray for Thy Church and its National Council, that with wisdom, faith and courage we may go forward in service to a bewildered and distracted world. May the light of Thine eternal purpose shine upon our onward path, directing our steps, controlling our wills, and inspiring all our efforts, to Thy glory and to the upbuilding of Thy Kingdom; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CHRISTIAN LEARNING IN THE HOME.

Washington Cathedral Offers Home Study Bible Courses.

Plans for the autumn and winter correspondence courses of the Society for the Home Study of Holy Scripture and Church History are announced from its headquarters in the East Cloister of Washington Cathedral on Mount Saint Alban, D. C.

Subjects offered for twenty-four weeks, beginning September 28, include:

"The Acts of the Apostles," by the Rev. William S. Bishop, D. D., Director of Studies for the Society.

"English Church History with Special Reference to the Reformation," by the Rev. Cornelius S. Abbott, vicar of the Church of the Good Shepherd in Washington.

"Our Prayer Book As It Is Today," by the Rev. Arthur B. Rudd, rector of Christ Church, Rockville, Maryland, and formerly Canon of the Cathedral.

Applications are being received by the Rev. Dr. Bishop, 1912 Belmont Road, Washington, D. C., for the weekly studies to be issued beginning the last Saturday in September. A nominal fee of one dollar is charged for registration in each course to cover postage and preparation of the lessons.

The Society for the Home Study of Holy Scripture and Church History has as its purpose to minister in every way possible to those who may wish to carry on the study of the Bible or of Church History in their own homes under competent guidance and direction. It is about to enter upon its seventh year of work in connection with the Cathedral, where it has attractive headquarters in the East Cloister.

Many registrations were made for the classes held during the season of 1934-1935, the registrants representing all sections of the United States with the exception of the Pacific Coast. Letters are received by the director and other instructors, testifying to the great benefit received by the students from their work in these correspondence courses.

This Society was founded by Miss Sarah F. Smiley, a devoted Churchwoman who had experienced in her own life the spiritual guidance and inspiration derived from the study of Holy Scripture, and was desirous of helping others to share in the like experience. In her purpose and effort, Miss Smiley was a pioneer, and the work which she initiated has no doubt had its effect in pointing the way for similar undertakings in the broad field of religious education.

For nearly fifty years this Society has gone on functioning, and now, with its establishment in Washington in connection with the National Cathedral, has a position of advantage for effectively carrying on its work such as it has never known before.

The Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, D. D., LL. D., is President of the Society's Board of Trustees; the Rev. Canon Joseph Fletcher is its Secretary and Treasurer; the Rev. Edwin B. Niver, D. D., Librarian, and the Rev. William S. Bishop, D. D., Director of Studies.

The following Church organizations of the Diocese of Washington are represented on the Board through their respective heads: The Church Periodical Society; the Department of Religious Education, and the Woman's Auxiliary, through its Educational Secretary.

The Society's valuable library of more than 7,000 volumes is now housed in the East Cloister in close connection with the collections belonging to the Cathedral Library and the College of Preachers.

Not only are readers welcome at the Library from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M., but under certain conditions the books of the "Smiley Collection" may be taken out for use at home. As many as fourteen leading libraries are being circulated, chiefly in the rural parishes in the Diocese of Washington and with increasing interest on the part of the readers.

ETHIOPIA IN LITERATURE.

Down through the centuries Ethiopia has played a conspicuous part in the world as shown by numerous references in literature, both holy and profane. That ancient nation whose autonomy is threatened by another power also rich in history and tradition was known and honored 2,000 years before Christ.

The rise and fall of the far-flung Roman empire is widely known because it is taught in the schools. The grandeur and glory that was Ethiopia has remained unsung save in literature and ancient historical documents.

The latest news is that the peace parleys aimed at avoiding conflict have failed. That brings war a step nearer between two powers that have figured mightily in the history of mankind. Ethiopia has spread its boundaries on numerous occasions, but has never lost any of the territory it now holds in its history of several thousand years. Italy rose to grandeur, sank to mediocrity, regained something of its influence, and now seeks to expand its boundaries again.

Dr. Charles A. Stakely, writing in the Montgomery Advertiser on the theme, "Ethiopia in Literature", points out in a scholarly manner the numerous literary and historical references to Ethiopia. He preludes his article with references to Ethiopia in Egyptian history about 2,000 years before Christ. Biblical references, he informs us, are frequent. He cites the marriage of Moses to Zipporah, daughter of Jethro, priest of Midian, who is called the Ethiopian woman. In Job we find: "The price of wisdom is above rubies. The topaz of Ethiopia shall not equal it." In Psalms: "Princes shall come out of Egypt, Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God." Other Biblical quotations are cited, ending with the famous one in Jeremiah, "Can the Ethiopian change his skin or the leopard his spots"? In the New Testament in Acts we read of the treasurer of Candace or Queen of "Ethiopia" who had "the charge of all her treasure".

Greek and Latin authors made numerous references to Ethiopia. Homer referred to it in both the Iliad and the Odyssey. In the Latin mythology as outlined by Ovid is the remarkable story of Andromeda, daughter of Cepheus and Cassiopeia, king and queen of Ethiopia.

Shakespeare, in "Romeo and Juliet", makes a character say: "It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night, like a rich jewel in an Ethiope's ear." Milton makes frequent reference to Ethiopia. Samuel Johnson in "Rasselas", the opening sentence of which is noted for its beauty, says:

"Ye who listen with credulity to the whispers of fancy and pursue with eagerness the phantoms of hope, who expect that age will pursue the promises of youth, and that the deficiences of the present day will be supplied by the morrow; attend to the history of Rasselas, prince of Abyssinia."

Coleridge and Mrs. Browning paid tribute to the ancient land. Two operas referring to Ethiopia are popular now. "L'Africaine", by Meyerbeer, and "Aida", by Verdi.

For a land so rich in tradition it is easy to hope its people will still see many years of peace.—Editorial, The Citizen-Times, Asheville, N. C.

INDIA MAKING DEFINITE PLANS FOR A FORWARD MOVEMENT IN EVANGELISM.

A Forward Movement in Evangelism, with definite plans for five years, is under way among the non-Roman Christian Communions in India. It is planned and guided by a committee of the National Christian Council, Bishop Azariah, of Dornakal, being chairman, and Bishop Banerji, assistant in Lahore, a member of the committee. Dr. Stanley Jones is also a committee member. As the Council represents several Communions detailed plans are left to each one, the Council committee suggesting only the broad outline. This includes a preparation period of seven weeks, starting in October; leaflets for guidance of pastors; an annual "week of witness" in each mission and church; retreats and conferences for ministers and theological students. Another suggestion reads:

"While it was considered that gospel meetings by well-known evangelists would be useful, it was decided that the main emphasis in this advance movement should be on the witness of individuals and churches to what Christ has done for them. Spectacular evangelism often kills individual witness and ought therefore to be discouraged."

The movement has much in common with the Episcopal Church's Forward Movement in the United States. Two notable differences are that leaflets in India must be translated into many languages and dialects in order to reach all who can read, and further than this, plans must be devised to reach the enormous numbers who cannot read at all. One of the objectives suggested to local groups is to place at least a portion of the printed Gospel in the hands of every literate person in the area for which the local church is responsible.

One marked difficulty to be met in India comes from the temptation to magnify mere numbers because of political classifications. The committee earnestly warns against seeking a mere increase in membership for the sake of securing political rights.

"All the problems of this great continent can find solution only in and through Jesus Christ," says Bishop Azariah, for his committee. "We only seek the glory of Christ and the service of India."

CONNECTICUT.

Rt. Rev. F. G. Budlong, D. D., S. T. D.,

Preliminary Notice.

The Conference will assemble this year in time for supper on Tuesday, September 24, and continue until Thursday, after lunch, September 26.

Speakers beside our own Bishop are, so far—

Bishop Cameron J. Davis, of Western New York.

Bishop-Coadjutor Frederick D. Goodwin, of Virginia.

Dr. Arthur Lee Kinsolving, of Trinity Church, Boston.

Dr. George Stewart, of Stamford.

Mr. Bruce Simonds, of New Haven.

Our host, the Rev. G. C. St. John, head of Choate School, hopes, and Bishop Budlong expects, that every clergyman of the diocese will plan to attend for the whole time of the Conference.

SACRAMENTO

Rt. Rev. Wm. H. Morehead, D. D., Bishop.

Conference of Laymen.

The third annual lay conference of the diocese was held at St. Dorothy's Rest, Camp Meeker, over the Labor Day week-end, with a good attendance of representative men. The program was largely in the hands of laymen seeking solution of the problems of this large rural diocese. In addition, Bishop Porter led discussions of the missionary work, while the Ven. W. R. H. Hodgkin, of San Francisco, presented the Forward Movement.

Renewed Life Under New Leader.

The Rev. Richard R. Houssell is the new leader in St. Barnabas' Mission, Dunsmuir. The material fabric has been improved with a new roof and other repairs to the church, the rectory has been renovated, and best of all the spiritual life is showing signs of progress. The Sunday school is again active; a new girls' altar chapter is working under competent direction; a large boys' choir has been trained to assist the adult members; and the other activities of the mission gave evidences of interest. The vicar is instructing confirmation candidates for presentation later in the season.

The Bishop's Summer Office.

Interest at the summer chapel of the Transfiguration, Lake Tahoe, has shown gratifying increase. Bishop Porter has carried on the services, living with his family in the clergy house, which has served as his summer office. Attendance at services has been larger than ever before, so that additional seats have had to be provided. The chancel is a permanent structure of rock and timber, opening on the outdoor nave under the trees.

Hospital and Community House Being Built at Indian Mission.

Through gifts of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of New York and others interested in Indian work, a hospital unit and community house is being built at the Indian Mission at Orleans on the Klamath River. It will soon be ready for use, although completion of the interior must wait until money already given is available. The priest and physician in charge is the Rev. Claude W. Silk, M. D., who for several years has done effective work in the Indian settlements along the river.

Taking a Place of Leadership.

Barrell Memorial Hall is being added to St. Stephen's Church, Colusa, to give needed room for the Sunday school and community work. It is named in honor of Mrs. Barrell, for many years a member and leader in the church, and is financed largely by the people of the town. Mrs. Barrell died about a year ago at the age of 101. Large confirmation classes have been presented by the Rev. E. L. Freeland, rector of St. John's Church, Marysville, priest in charge, and the church is taking a place of leadership in the community.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop

Thorough Every-Member Canvass Being Planned.

The diocese is planning on a very thorough Every-Member Canvass this fall. Bishop Helfenstein has appointed the Rev. Don Frank Fenn, D. D., rector of the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, as Chairman of the Field Department.

A series of meetings are to be held during the last two weeks in September, in which every clergyman in charge of a church will be contacted in small groups to discuss the problems in each parish, and to outline a program of preparation and follow-up for the canvass. A series of pamphlets has been prepared, analyzing the disposition of funds raised in the work of the National Church, in the diocese and in the parish.

It is hoped that every congregation under the leadership of its rector will have three or four weeks of direct preparation for the canvass, through sermons which will be preached each Sunday, training sessions for canvassers, and in parish meetings, to be addressed by clergy of the diocese. Every effort will be made to tap the resources of the Church in the Diocese of Maryland, so that the financial situation in the parishes, in the diocese and in the share of the diocese in the work of the National Church may be rehabilitated.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, D. D., Bishop.

Clergy and Laymen Conference.

The two-day Conference of Clergy and Laymen of the Diocese, under the auspices of the Field Department, with the Rev. O. T. Eaton, chairman, was brought to a close September 4 after a successful and inspiring session at Vade Mecum, Stokes County.

Featuring the Conference was the address by Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, Bishop of Virginia, who has spent twenty-five years as missionary to Kyoto, Japan. He is the outstanding authority in the Episcopal Church on Foreign Missions.

He spoke at length upon the work the Church had done in the Orient, and urged that Christians in America continue to foster the great undertaking where the American and European missionaries have so heroically progressed.

In giving his first hand knowledge of Japan, Bishop Tucker said that by nature the Japanese are not lovers of war, but are made aggressive by the European and American examples of trade and economics. He pictured the yellow race as a vital factor in the control of international affairs in the next century, and stated that it was up to the Christian people to set them examples by living up to the ideals of Christ.

The Wednesday morning program was opened by the celebration of the holy communion. At 10 o'clock the Conference re-assembled for a series of ten-minute talks by leading clergy and laymen of the Diocese. Rev. David W.

Yates, of Tarboro, spoke on the rural work of the church; Rev. William J. Gordon, of Leaksville-Spray, spoke on the industrial work, and Dr. John W. Herritage, negro missionary of the Episcopal Church in this Diocese, on the negro projects.

Rev. F. Craghill Brown, of Southern Pines, gave a graphic outline of the work among the tourists. Thomas Myers, graduate of the Thompson Orphanage, Charlotte, and a freshman at the University of North Carolina, gave his experiences as a student at the Charlotte institution. Arthur P. Chippy, St. Augustine College, Raleigh, outlined the work being done in that institution. Rev. Andrew J. Milstead, of Statesville, brought the series to a close with a discussion of "Parish building".

The address of the morning was delivered by Rev. Edgar R. Neff, of Fletcher. He told of the project, termed "God's Acre", which he instituted and directed in his parish and mission church. At noon the Conference was addressed by Mrs. William J. Gordon, of Leaksville, Spray. At 2 o'clock Rev. David T. Eaton, of Burlington, and C. S. Alexander delivered inspirational addresses, urging the delegates put into practice the ideas which had been given them by the various speakers at the Conference.

The Conference closed after Bishop Penick had charged the parish chairmen as to respective duties and projects.

LEXINGTON

Rt. Rev. H. P. A. Abbott, D. D., Bishop.

Retreat and Conference at Margaret Hall.

The autumn retreat for women was held at Margaret Hall, Versailles, September 1-3. The Sisters of St. Anne provided hospitality. The Rev. George Ralph Madson was the conductor.

The annual Clergy Conference followed at Margaret Hall September 4-5. Most of the clergy attended. Bishop Abbott led the discussions, which dealt with diocesan and parochial problems. Plans were made for parochial missions throughout the diocese to be held between now and Lent. The suggestion was made that the clergy would be greatly assisted if the Church papers would from time to time list the "Books the Clergy Are Reading"—such lists being particularly helpful to mission clergy who are isolated, as is frequently done in Lent.

Margaret Hall, school for girls, opens its scholastic year with registration on September 11. An increase over last year is reported. Bishop Abbott will celebrate the Holy Communion, and later conduct the opening exercises on Sepember 12. The school is operated by the Sisters of St. Anne.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop.

Episcopal Diocese to Open Historic Churches for Tour.

Every surviving historic Episcopal Church in the State will be opened to the public during a series of tours on the last Sunday in September and the first two Sundays in October.

Special services will be held in all of the churches, and guides will tell their history. The tours, a feature of the Virginia autumn travelogue, will be sponsored by the Dioceses of Virginia and Southern Virginia.

The churches, most of them situated in rural sections, are of two general types of architecture, the rectangular building and the cruciform, with a number of small variations. The earliest churches were rectangular. Bruton Church, in Williamsburg, erected 1710-15, is the earliest existent specimen of the cruciform church, church historians say.

At the time of the revolution there were some one hundred parishes, with two hundred and fifty churches and chapel buildings, of which thirty-eight churches still stand, and are used by the Episcopal Church. About a dozen others are used by other religious bodies.

All of these still in existence are east of the Blue Ridge Mountains, and most of them are in Tidewater.

In the days of the early colony, church notices were matters of vital importance to the congregation. There was a time set aside during the service for official notices, the reading of the governor's proclamations, new laws requiring to be brought quickly to the knowledge of the people and other matters of importance.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. I. B. Larned, Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Creighton, S. T. D., Suffragan.

St. James' Church, Long Beach, Dedicated.

The Rt. Rev. Ernest Milmore Stires, D. D., Bishop of Long Island, dedicated the new St. James' Church building, in Long Beach, on Sunday, September 8, at the 11 A. M. service. This new church, seating 256, was filled to capacity. The Bishop also dedicated the altar, baptismal font, pulpit, pews and memorial windows. The laying of the cornerstone had taken place on Sunday, June 2, 1935, Bishop Frank W. Creighton, Suffragan, officiating. The congregation was organized July 4, 1926, by a neighboring priest. Seminary students and priests have been in charge since then. The present priest-in-charge of this self-supporting mission is the Rev. George Wellman Parsons, who has been in charge since June, 1932. The church also includes a large social hall, containing an adequate and well-equipped kitchen.

This congregation has rented large houses, stores, etc., has met in the local Court House, etc. At last it has reached a place where it can now remain settled.

The church is situated on a beautiful plot of ground, 200 by 100 feet, a stone's throw from the ocean. It is the most centrally situated of all this city's churches. Long Beach is twenty-six miles from Manhattan, on the south shore of Long Island.

Connected with St. James is a newly organized chapel at Point Lookout, four miles east, along the ocean front, near the famous Jones Beach State Park.

George W. Parsons.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Fork Church to Mark 200th Birthday.

Fort Church, Hanover County, will celebrate its 200th birthday Sunday, September 15, at 11:15 A. M. Dinner will be served on the grounds. All friends who are interested in this old church are cordially invited to attend.

St. Anne's School Graduates Honored.

St. Anne's School, which is one of our Church schools, located at Charlottesville, Virginia, seems to be establishing an enviable record for thorough college preparation.

Announcement has just been made that one of its students, a graduate of last June, is the winner of the Hollins Scholarship. This scholarship was open to a graduate from any public or private high school in Virginia. All candidates were required to take the College Board entrance examinations. As the scholarship entitled the winner to free board and tuition at Hollins for the year 1935-1936, a great many students competed for it.

Another 1935 graduate of St. Ann's passed the entrance examinations for Barnard, and has won a substantial scholarship there.

A graduate of the 1934 class was the successful candidate for one of the seven academic scholarships that Bryn Mawr awards each year to members of her freshman class. Still another graduate of St. Anne's, a member of the 1935 graduating class at Wellesley College, was made a Wellesley scholar, one of the highest honors this college bestows.

St. Anne's will open this year on Wednesday, September 18, and among the new members of its faculty are Miss Alida Wilson, daughter of Professor James Southall Wilson, of the University of Virginia, and Miss Fannie Heck, daughter of the late Professor Heck, of the same university. Miss Heck secured her B. A. from Mills College, and has been teaching in St. Helen's Hall in Portland, Oregon, for the past year. Miss Sarah Abbott, of Cambridge, New York, also comes to St. Anne's to take charge of the Primary Department. Miss Abbott graduated from the Wheelock School in Boston in 1933.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. Henry J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Memorial to Bishop-General Polk.

The young people of the Church of the Incarnation, Atlanta, will erect a memorial in honor of Bishop-General Leonidas Polk some time in the early part of September. This announcement was made through "The Challenge".

The marker honoring Bishop Polk will be located near Marietta, on the battleground, the scene of Bishop Polk's death in 1864. It will be of stone, built by the young men of the League, with a marble tablet bearing the inscription, telling of the Bishop-General's life and death.

Bishop Polk, born in Raleigh, N. C., educated at West Point, where he graduated in 1827, entered the ministry after resigning from the army, and later became the first Bishop of Louisiana. He was one of the guiding spirits in founding the University of the South, at Sewanee, Tenn.

After the outbreak of the War Between the States, he accepted the call of the Confederate War Department, with the permission of his fellow Bishops, was appointed major-general by Jefferson Davis and served with General Johnston in the campaign about Atlanta. He was killed near Marietta and buried from St. Luke's Church, which had been organized during the spring of 1864.

A bronze tablet is to be placed on the Grant Building, corner of Forsyth and Walton Streets, by the Daughters of the Confederacy, commemorating the spot from which Bishop-General Polk was buried. Bishop H. J. Mikell will speak at the dedication of the tablet.

Amateur Radio Listeners.

Every afternoon at 4:30 o'clock, E. S. T., messages of hope, cheer and encouragement are sent out over the air on a short wave set by "The Parson", as the Rev. Geoffrey C. Hinshelwood of Grace Church, Gainesville, Ga., is known. He has quite a large group of listeners, and his correspondence with those interested in amateur radio is voluminous.

Memorial Windows Dedicated.

Four new memorial windows were dedicated at the Church of Our Saviour, Atlanta, Sunday, by Bishop H. J. Mikell, These were the gifts of Mrs. Paul Alexander Steele, in memory of her husband; Mrs. Steele and her sister, Miss Clara Dalton, in memory of their mother, Mrs. Cornelia Ann Dalton; Mrs. Florence T. Holland and Tommy Holland, one in memory of Mrs. Holland's mother, Mrs. Sarah George Seymour, and the Woman's Auxiliary, Church School and Y. P. S. L. united in giving one as a Thank Offering. These, together with two dedicated earlier in the year, given by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ellis, in memory of their children, Henry and Margaret, and Mrs. Jack Savage, in memory of her stepmother, Mrs. Caroline Matilda Robinson, form a series of new windows being installed in the church. New carpets and new covering for the kneeling benches were given through the generosity of one of the members. Under the leadership of Canon William Stephen Turner, rector, the indebtedness of the parish has been met and the building fund is growing. The congregation is increasing, and a deeper spiritual conception of the meaning of the Church has permeated the work as a whole.

Activities of the Business Women's Chapter.

The Business Women's Chapter of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Cathedral of St. Philip, will hear Mr. Gerald B. Van Deene, president of the National Library Binder's Association, on Sunday afternoon, September 15. Mr. Van Deene has just returned from a three months' trip abroad, where he visited the old libraries, being permitted to see the rare old manscripts of monasteries and other valuable records of the fourth and fifth centuries.

This group of women sponsors the maintenance of the Cathedral grounds, and is actively engaged in beautifying the Cathedral Hill.

A Japanese Tea will be given by the Business Women on Saturday afternoon, September 28, at the Chapter House of the Cathedral. Rare prints from Japan will be on display at this time.

Y. P. S. L. Notes.

Lillington Beavers of the Church of the Incarnation, Atlanta, has been appointed editor-in-chief of The Challenge.

The president of the League publishing The Challenge each month will serve as the editor of the paper. The September issue will be prepared by the Y. P. S. L. of Grace Church, Gainesville.

The Incarnation Y. P. S. L. has completed the funds necessary to redecorate the church, and the work is now under way. The money was raised by donations, and the circulation of small aprons, in which the members of the congregation dropped "change", which the Y. P. S. L. collected to be used to beautify the church.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Bishop.

The Old Barn Conference.

The Annual Old Barn Conference for clergy and laymen of the Diocese of Southern Ohio will meet in the St. Edmund's School buildings, Glendale, Ohio, September 18 to 22. The clergy sessions are held Wednesday through Friday lunch. The laymen sessions from Friday supper through lunch Sunday.

Originally these annual conferences were held in a "reformed" barn, which reformation resulted in a most acceptable country clubhouse. That with the happy faculty of the Rev. B. H. Reinheimer determined the name of this annual conference which has come to be a most effective agency in the work of the Church in Southern Ohio.

The sale of this property made it necessary for the Field Department of the diocese to seek other quarters for the Conference, but the happy name with its rich associations continues. This year the conference will meet in the buildings of St. Edmund's School. The school has been closed and its fine property offered to the diocese.

The object of the Conference as given this year: "To unite our clergy and laymen in support of the whole work of the Church; to develop leadership throughout the diocese; to gain fresh courage and strength from the fellowship which the Conference develops. In a word, to give Southern Ohio that teamwork which makes it possible to go forward."

On the program are three main leaders, all outstanding. They are: The Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, Suffragan Bishop of Long Island, former Bishop of Mexico, for several years head of the Department of Domestic Missions of the National Council.

The Rev. David R. Covell, Southern Ohio's own new Executive Secretary, who has already won his place in the diocese, and who will learn this year what the Old Barn Conference in Southern Ohio is like.

The Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, of Chattanooga, Tenn., one of the many young clergy who make it comfortable for the souls of the aged as they look forward to the future of the Church and see into what able hands it is passing.

These are the names on the program. But our own Bishop Hobson will be there. And where he is, there is strength, courage and clear vision of the work of the Church in these times. and a profound recognition of the opportunities and responsibilities that are with the Church in these days.

The picture of the Old Barn Conference includes also men playing golf, tennis, swimming, bridge and others walking, or just sitting and talking. And that latter, if you are careful and wise in choosing your loafers, is often a most important feature of any conference.

WYOMING.

Rt. Rev. Elmer N. Schmuck, D. D., Bishop

Please Take Note.

At the meeting of the Convocation in June, the Rev. R. E. Abraham, rector of Trinity Church, Thermopolis, was elected secretary for the diocese.

Mr. Abraham succeeds the Rev. Hewton Ward, of Douglas.

All mail relative to the office of secretary will please be mailed to Mr. Abraham at Thermopolis.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt. D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Coadjutor

Dr. Gass to Succeed Rev. Percy Silver at the Church of the Incarnation.

The Rev. John Gass, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Charleston, W. Va., has accepted the rectorship of the Church of the Incarnation, New York, effective November 3.

Born in Augusta, Georgia, forty-five years ago, Dr. Gass was educated in the Sewanee Military Academy, the University of the South, the Episcopal Theological Seminary, Cambridge, Mass. Ordained deacon and priest in 1914-15, he has held charges in West Point, Miss., Frankfort, Ky., Parkersburg, W. Va. He served in the World War as chaplain with rank of Lieutenant. In 1930 he received the degree of Doctor in Divinity from the Virginia Seminary in Alexandria. Dr. Gass became rector of St. John's, Charleston, in 1925.

Dr. Gass has been a delegate to three General Conventions, trustee of the University of the South, director of the Family Welfare Association of America, member of the West Virginia Unemployment Relief Administration in 1932-33.

Dr. Gass succeeds the Rev. Percy Silver at the Church of the Incarnation, who died December 15, 1934.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D. Bishop.

Tribute to Dr. Robert Johnston.

The following tribute to the late Dr. Robert Johnston, formerly rector of St. John's Church, Washington, who died in the summer in England, appeared in the parish magazine of St. Paul's Church, South London, where Dr. Johnston was last affiliated:

"It is with deepest regert that I announce the death of Robert Johnston, at Walton-on-the-Hill, Tadworth, Thursday, May 23, just as he was becoming well-known in this parish. To me personally, it means the loss of a very dear and loyal friend who had closely associated himself with my work since he first came to Tadworth in the autumn of 1933.

"When the offer of this parish came to me, Dr. Johnston was as anxious and worried as I was myself, that I should be guided aright in making a difficult decision. This was typical of his unselfish concern for others.

"Robert Johnston had a genius for friendship and a forceful personality which combined a warm heart with a kindly humor, and to the end he preserved an enthusiasm for life in all its aspects to which the passing years added no touch of cynicism. He put his whole life and soul into whatever he undertook which impressed his wide circle of friends with the charm and virility of his ever youthful spirit. At the same time he soon gained the confidence of all who sought his advice or help by his well-informed knowledge of men and matters and ripe experience of the world throughout an exceptionally fruitful and active ministry. For eleven years he was Vicar of a large artisan parish in Edinburgh before proceeding to America, where for twenty-seven years he held most important charges at Philadelphia, and finally St. John's, Washington.

"As a gifted preacher, Canon Johnston has left his mark on the American Church, which will long live. A keen student of human nature to the end, his broad sympathies and wide tolerance gave him a charity of outlook which was always ready to make allowances for human weakness, and see the best side of people. At the same time there was nothing colorless about his strong personality and when he espoused a cause there was no more redoubtable fighter in the face of opposition. He had a strong dislike of anything in the form of cant or what he termed 'piosity', which he carefully distinguished from genuine piety.

"Parishioners who were fortunate enough to have heard his course of Lenten Sermons will have found them essentially practical and stimulating. With the aid of vivid illustrations drawn from life as well as from the Gospels, he was able to help us see God working in terms of human conduct and personal relationships. As a preacher, he had the rare gift of being able to establish the closest contact with his congregations aided by a forceful personality, excellent voice, and remarkable clearness of style.

COLLECT FOR THE THIRTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Almighty and merciful God, of whose only gift it cometh that Thy faithful people do unto Thee true and laudable service; Grant, we beseech Thee, that we may so faithfully serve Thee in this life, that we fail not finally to attain Thy heavenly promises; through the merits of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

TO OUR FOREIGN MISSIONARIES.

Our thoughts were with you when you left the homeland,
Our prayers were with you when you said "Good-bye."
Our love committed you into the keeping
Of Him who made the earth and sea and sky.

And all the way across the wide, vast ocean
Our thoughts, our prayers, our love went with you all.
The Father heard our ardent intercession.
He heard and answered Macedonia's call.

"Come o'er and help us," came the plaintive pleading
Of those still groping in dark heathen night.
You answered, "Send us, Lord, with Thy Evangel,
And let us flood the darkness with Thy Light!"

How oft you prayed with us: "Lord of the harvest,
Send forth Thy laborers, for the task is great,
And toilers few. O send them, Father, send them
While yet 'tis day, ere it will be too late."

He heard your prayers and ours, and He has sent you
As His ambassadors to lands afar,
Proclaiming pardon, peace, and free salvation
Brought by the rising of the Morning Star.

He who has made of one blood all earth's people,
All mankind to His feast of grace invites.
His love embraces each and every nation.
Race cannot sever what the Cross unites.

Our thoughts are with you, wheresoe'er you're toiling,
Where'er the feet so beautiful may tread,
O'er hill and dale and plain, through streams and forests,
Through desert lands with dangers overspread.

Our prayers are with you in your varied climates,
Our love is with you through the frost and heat,
And when in language, strange and unfamiliar,
The Gospel of salvation you repeat.

Our prayers are with you, when toil-worn, discouraged,
You see no fruit, but God may hide this till
His angels gather all the wheat at harvest.
Beside all waters sow His blest seed still.

He who can keep the roots of lovely roses
Alive beneath the winter's garb of snow,
Can bring to bloom the Gospel kernel hidden
To which your labors watchful care bestow.

Faint not! Toil on! Some day "Well done, My servant,"
Shall greet you from the Masters' lips divine.
Toil in His strength, until in glory yonder
His faithful own like sparkling stars shall shine.

We daily pray the gracious heavenly Father
To keep you in the Everlasting Arms,
To clothe and feed you, heal you, grant you shelter,
To shield you from all dangers and alarms.

We pray that He may grant His Spirit's unction
To all your witnessing in Jesus' Name,
That sheep and lambs may feed in verdant pastures,
Where'er the blest Evangel you proclaim.

We know that He who died for your redemption,
Who purchased you with His own precious blood,
Who brought you peace and pardon, life eternal,
Still pleads your cause before the throne of God.

Belov'd in Christ, though many miles divide us,
Still we can meet before the throne of grace,
Where prayers united rise like fragrant incense.
The tie that binds us, bridges all the space.

God bless and keep you, loved and unforgotten!
Our prayers, our thoughts, our love with you abide.
And should we meet no more this side of glory,
We'll say, "Good morning" on the other side!

Anna Hoppe, in the Augustana Foreign Missionary.

Grounds of Immortality.

Dr. Temple in his recent notable book on Nature, Man and God, rests his belief in immortality on the love of God and thinks that any spirit communications would not help but would rather embarrass such belief. "It seems to me positively undesirable that there should be experimental proof of man's survival of death." Jesus seems to have taught the same view in His reply to Dives who wanted messengers sent to warn his brethren. Leslie Stephen thought that "the majestic doubt" about immortality was more satisfying than all the spirit rappings that had been reported. At any rate, we have a more sure proof in the love of God for His children. "Thou wilt perfect that which concerneth me," is a principle that carries with it immortality. God will not start a work and leave it unfinished. Every living thing carries in it the capacity for achieving its pattern and in man this desire is constitutional and imperative. A human life broken off by the accident of death seems an irrational conclusion: all its capacities are germs of immortal development and fulfillment. Knowledge never reaches a limit but each new truth opens vistas upon wider scenes and loftier visions. Affection is never satisfied but feeds on its love as an eternal hunger. This instinctive belief in immortality is lodged deeper in our constitution than knowledge and is therefore unaffected by all sceptical reasoning. We have just read a book on the illusion of immortality in which the author labors all the traditional doubts and arguments against it, but we found it curiously ineffective and inconclusive. It was like arguing against gravitation which all the while was pulling down what the author was trying to build up. There is something in human nature underneath all his arguments which was silently undermining them. All religions testify against such unbelief, every Christian cemetery shouts against it, and the sceptic might better save his breath and printed page. We do not believe the world is essentially irrational and hopelessly and tragically confusing in its constitution and end, but that end will unfold and vindicate its beginning and God will be justified of His work. The argument from the love of God comes to its highest expression in Christ, for He showed us the ideal of human life and gave assurance of its real fruition and crown.—Presbyterian Banner.

Regeneration or Regimentation.

There is a place for regimentation, a possibly enlarging place, in the home, in the school, in the factory, in the state, and all such. Dozens of reasons for it all along the line. Innocence needs protection and guidance. Wilfulness compels restraint. Business if and when brutish must be held in with bit and bridle. The weak and the poor and the underprivileged have an inherent right to be championed against the master minds that know no god but greed. Such protection can not come save by group control. Only the group has power enough to bind the beasts of business. Granted that these are relatively few, such as there are must be made to feel their limitations. Civilization cannot last unless group power is exercised to protect the rights and avenge the wrongs of the little ones of society. That makes Christian Democracy mighty important.

For group control very easily falls into the hands of selfish, wilful men, drunk with the sight of power. Too often what are called social reforms turn out to be just a rearrangement of tyrannies. We cannot have group control, moved by the will to do justly and love mercy and walk humbly with God, by mere regimentation. That has its place, but a very subordinate and temporary role in the building of a good world. Too subordinate and too temporary and too superficial to constitute the major passion of a Gospel preacher. That statement must not be misunderstood to be a criticism of those self-sacrificing leaders who give themselves, as with the passion of their Lord, in efforts to secure justice for the men and women and children who are suffering wrong from social and economic brutality. The statement is rather to call and to hold attention, to the teaching of Jesus touching the infection source of the disturbing ailment of society.

Nothing could be more clear than that Jesus, who came that we—all of us—might have life and have it more abundantly, taught that we must get it, never by regimentation, only by regeneration. It is not surprising that, driven by a sort of desperation in the face of colossal swindling and successful, unpunished fraud, there should be leadership demanding a massed Christian frontal attack on the social order, rather the social disorder. It has even been preached with the fervor of a new Gospel, that the times demand a shift of the center of gravity from the inner life to the social order. That means, if it has any meaning, a shift in emphasis from regeneration to regimentation.

The Pharisee sought to bring every detail of life under external rule. That is what regimentation does. That might produce a coerced social order, but never the Kingdom of God. That seeks its goal by making clean the inside of the cup.—Dr. G. N. Luccock, in Presbyterian Banner.

SECURITY.

F. L. Earl.

Security
Is what we need,
To everyone
A certain meed;

With time to think,
To learn, to know
How to prepare,
Before we go:

Security,
That we may live
To understand
What God would give.

The True Prophet.

When we are confronted, as we shall often be, by the problem of what and how to preach, we should remember that the evidence of history everywhere supports the prophet's suggestion that the true servant of Jehovah is he whose desire is not to exalt himself, but to exalt the divine will, whose strength is in his calm fidelity to truth as God gives him to see the truth. Few of today's best sellers will be numbered with tomorrow's classics; the Utopian schemes of today will be the curiosities of tomorrow. It has always been so. Jesus knew that. He knew that there are people whose minds are like soil that is too shallow for anything to take root, and he was not carried away by their momentary enthusiasm. He had some very harsh things to say about the leaders of religion in his way who were obsessed with the desire for self-glorification. And to his followers He gave the guiding principle: "Thy Father who seeth in secret shall recompense thee."—Rev. H. L. Sumner.

The Wonders of the Planetarium.

Has the reader visited a planetarium? There is one at Chicago where it was an attraction at the recent world's fair; there is another in Philadelphia, and they are now building one in New York that will probably be the finest in the world. It consists of a great dome with a contrivance down on the floor in the center that looks like a mounted tube or barrels having in it numerous eyes which are lenses through which light streams out and splashes stars on the dome that are made to represent the heavens very literally. One steps into the twilight of the dome as into the night sky and looks up at a scene of splendor that is almost equal to and an exact image of the sky itself with all the stars and constellations in place. The instrument swings on a pivot and the tube revolves so that the motions of the heavens are exactly reproduced while a lecturer explains what is seen and going on. It can be set to represent the skies at any time in the past and in the future, and it is interesting to look upon the sky just as it appeared at the birth of Christ. It is almost as awesome as the night sky itself and can be manipulated so as to show us motions in a few seconds that would require thousands or millions of years in the cosmic machinery. It is a great means of education. As usual this marvel is of German invention and manufacture, a product of the celebrated Zeiss factory for the production of fine lenses. Pity that the Germans do not see that their true glory lies in such fields and not in Krupp's factory for making great guns to roar out over battlefields and slaughter men. And yet if we admire and wonder at the wisdom of man in inventing and fabricating a toy model of the heavens, how much more should we worship the God that makes the mighty expanse of the real heavens and there displays His glory?—Selected.

No Room for the Children.

"Where is Benny?" inquired his father at lunch one day.

"Oh, he has gone to play with the Smiths; he played there all the morning, and he could hardly wait to finish his lunch before going back."

"He seems to be always there; I don't like it; I should like my son to be in his own home sometimes."

"So should I, but I can't keep him at home."

Mrs. Haamilton looked around at her neat, well-kept home: the tastefully furnished sitting room with its polished floor, new rugs, and hand-painted cushions; the attractive dining room; the sewing room; the sun room for the plants; the dainty kitchen. Benny's toy box was in the kitchen; it was the only thing that did not quite tone in with the color scheme. She thought of the spare bedroom, and Daddy's bedroom, and her own room with Benny's pink and white crib in one corner. It was all so well-appointed. "I wonder why Benny does not like to stay at home," she murmured.

"Mother, come and see! Mrs. Smith says you may! Come and see what we have made." Benny had burst into the house, his little face glowing with excitement.

"All right, Benny," answered Mrs. Hamilton, taking the boy's hand and starting out. "But we must ask the little Smiths to come and play at your house tomorrow; you go to play with them so often."

Benny's face dropped. "But, Mother, there is nothing to do in our house."

"What do you do at the Smith's house?"

"We play trains."

"Well, you have lots of trains; your box is full of them."

"Yes, but I have nowhere to play with them."

The Smith's house was not as large as the Hamilton's, but Benny led his mother into quite a spacious room that had been given up to the children. It was simply the space under the veranda boarded in and made habitable. It had a good, varnished floor and large windows. There on the floor was a wonderful layout of trains, tracks, tunnels, stations, forests and rivers. A crudely made group of houses and stores represented a town; blue paper made a lake.

"I made these trees," Benny proudly announced. "It took me days to do it."

"I hope that Benny does not bother you by coming so often," apologized Benny's mother to Mrs. Smith.

"Oh, no. Now that we have this room the children can have their little friends as much as they like without bothering the rest of the family."

In another part of the room two little girls were furnishing a doll's house, and at a strongly built table at one of the windows sat a bigger boy drawing.

"I like to be with the children, so I keep my sewing machine in this corner," continued Mrs. Smith. "Then, when I have time, I come here and sew while the children play. Since having this room finished off, we have had no trouble in keeping the children at home."

That night Benny's mother did some thinking. "Yes," she admitted, "we have a room for our guests, a room for the plants, a room for my machine and even a garage for the car, but we have no room at all for our most priceless possession, our son. Tomorrow these plants shall go into the other rooms, and Benny shall help me make this sun room into a playroom for himself and his friends."—Laura Gray, in National Kindergarten Association Release.

TRUST.

I cannot see with my poor mortal sight
The path entire that leads to realms of light.
There may be valleys dark, scenes that affright,
But I can trust!

My Father has assured me I'm His Own,
Bought with the life-blood of His holy Son.
I know not how His mercy leads me on,
But I can trust!

I cannot draw the mystic veil aside
That unknown morrows from my view doth hide,
I cannot look beyond Time's rolling tide.
But I can trust!

I know not why my pilgrim-path should be
So hedged about, oft desolate, when He
Can with a word create a highway free,
But I can trust!

Too weary oft to toil, or praise, or pray—
Oft wondering in the silence, "Does it pay?"—
I do not know my God's mysterious way,
But I can trust!

I know not when I'll face the Reaper grim,
When earth's receding lights shall flicker dim.
Enough for me to know I'll be with Him,
So I can trust!

I know that step by step my gracious God
Will lead me to His heavenly abode.
Enough for me to tread where He has trod.
So I can trust!

Anna Hoppe.

Which is the better strategy, a round up of forces for direct action against the abominations of business that neither fears God nor regards man, or a quiet uncompromising inexorable demands for the way of Christ in the hearts of men? Let us agree that this is not a time for choosing between, but of accepting both, not either or; rather both and to neglect either is treason to the Lord Christ.—Dr. George Luccock.

For the Southern Churchman.

A PRAYER FOR CHILDREN.

By Mrs. Walter Stevens.

Dear Jesus, I Love Thee.

Dear Jesus, I love Thee, I want to be Thine
And live so that others may see my light shine.

I want to be honest, and useful, and true
And do unto others as I'd have them do.

I need Thee each moment, I need Thee each day,
O! Come to me Saviour and in my heart stay.

With Thy guiding hand I can hope to be strong
And work for the right while I put down the wrong.

Amen.

Stars of Fall.

When the fall nights come and the air tastes of frost, an ice-blue star crosses the sky. It is Vega of the Lyre, third brightest of our Northern stars. Only Arcturus, low in the west, and Sirius, the sky king, yet to come, rank above the Harp Star.

Watch until that night comes when just at dark Vega gleams from the very center of the sky. The next day search where the wet meadows are still green. If you know her haunts you will find, burning blue in the deep grass, the last and loveliest of our flowers. Through long lashes the fringed gentian looks up to her birth star throned in the zenith of the sky. We humans forget that the stars shine for other earth folk than ourselves.

Vega was the first star to be photographed—in 1850 by the daguerreotype process. She is now speeding toward us at the rate of nine and a half miles per second, faster than a bullet from a high-powered rifle. The crash, however, will be delayed several years, so the astronomers tell me.

Toward the southeastern horizon shines a "Y," faint indeed, but as perfect as if it were on the front of a Yale sweater. This is the Water Jar which is tipped by Aquarius, the Waterman, and pours a ceaseless stream into the thirsty mouth of the Southern Fish, which is marked by Formalhaut, a first magnitude star, which never rises far above the southern horizon.

The Water Jar is full of so-called lucky stars. To the right of the center star of the "Y" is Sadalmelik, the Luck of the King, while just below is Sadalsuud, the Luckiest of the Lucky. Then there is Sadachbia, the Snake Star, being the Luck of the Serpent.

Not far from Vega, in the very center of the Milky Way, shines the Northern Cross, more correctly known as Cygnus the Swan. The bright star at the head of the Cross is Deneb, the faintest of all of the first magnitude stars. If the constellation is considered as a flying swan, Deneb is the tail of the bird, while the base of the cross is its outstretched neck.

The Persians called this constellation the Roc, that fabulous bird which made Sinbad the Sailor so much trouble, while to the Arabians it was the Hen. In this constellation is Sixty-one Cygni, a hardly visible star, but one of the nearest to our earth. Sirius is another one of the near-by stars. Neither of these stars, however, is apt to crowd us unduly. If the distance from the earth to the sun were one inch, the distance from the earth to either of these stars would be about seven and one-half miles.

In the lower side of the Milky Way and below Cygnus is a bright star between two fainter guard stars. This is Altair the lucida or Alpha star of Aquilla the Eagle. The three stars are the Family of Aquilla, and their line is used in determining distances in the sky, being exactly five degrees in length.

According to a Korean legend, Altair is a prince, who was to marry the beautiful princess Vega, but the match was broken off by Vega's stern father. From the farther bank of the Milky Way the poor prince looks longingly toward his would-be bride. Once a year, on the seventh night of the seventh moon, all the magpies in Korea flew up into the sky and made a suspension bridge on which the twain meet. All good Koreans throw stones at any magpie seen on earth on that day, because he should be up in the sky helping the lovers.

Altair is the standard first magnitude star of the sky. The brightness of all the others is measured by it, just as El Nath in Taurus the Bull is the standard of whiteness. Sirius, the brightest star in the sky, is nine and a half times as brilliant as Altair.

Above Altair, on the lower edge of the Milky Way, is a tiny parallelogram on the Way's edge, Delphinus the Dolphin. Probably, too, it is the Diamond, mentioned by the writer of that immortal verse which begins, "Twinkle, twinkle." The constellation is also called Job's Coffin. Why, no one yet has ever been able to discover.

Look close just above Altair and you will see, in the Way, Sagitta the Arrow, a tiny constellation made up of four stars, the point being turned toward the neck of the Swan. Forever and forever it speeds through the skies, the smallest of all of our constellations.—Samuel Scoville, Jr., in S. S. Times.

Whose Fault Was It That Billy Was Lost?

"Carolyn, where's Billy?"

Mother Elliott had just come back from a shopping trip, and was looking for her active two-year-old son.

"Ummm?" Carolyin did not raise her eyes from her absorbing story.

"Where's Billy? I left him in your care."

"Billy? Oh, he's with Nancy. At least I think so."

Mother sighed. Carolyn cared far too much for stories, and far too little for household responsibilities. Something must be done to wake her up, why, she would be fourteen next month. Just then Nancy came running down the hall, humming a gay tune as she came.

"Where is Billy, Nancy? Carolyn said he was with you."

"Oh, she did, did she? Well, he's not with me, hasn't been, in fact. But I expect he's with Roger. I heard some noise out that way."

Of course, he would be with Roger. He adored his big brother, and Roger was devoted to him, when he was not too busy with other things. All the children were so busy with their own interests.

Roger was located in the back yard making an airplane, with the help of his chum, Richard Brown.

"Bill? No, he hasn't been out here, has he, Dick? I haven't seen him. It's the girls' business to look after the kid when you're away. Saturday only comes once a week, Mums. Now, don't be hard on a fellow," as he saw disapproval written on his mother's face. "We're making a dandy plane. Shouldn't wonder if it would really fly. See?"

But mother was gone, her baby must be found.

Sally, the maid, had been ill and was away for a few days, so where might Billy not have wandered with all the doors open, and the three children of responsible age, all busy with their own plans?

The house was searched, but no sign of the little boy. The other children were aroused to real alarm now, and did their part looking for the little curly-headed lad whom they really loved dearly. Long and earnestly they hunted but no sign of Billy. Stories of kidnappers came to all of their minds. Carolyn's face was whitest of all, for well she knew that he had really been left in her care.

"Shall we call Daddy, Mums?" Roger's voice had a quiver in it. "He might be able to think of something."

"I don't want to disturb him at the office if I can help it. We'll try once more. You go down the street again, Nancy. Roger can go up to State Street and around there. Carolyn and I will go across the garden toward the stream in the meadow," mother's voice broke as visions of her baby boy wandering into the stream after "itte bitte fishes" that he adored, came to her.

Two hours had passed, but no signs of Billy. Then when mother was about ready to call the police, Daddy Elliott appeared. Roger had not been able to stand it, and had gone to his father.

"Now, cheer up, Mary," said Daddy after one look at mother's white face. "We're going to find that chap, and after that—" but as he saw the scared faces of the three children, he thought perhaps they were getting punishment enough, without adding a scolding which they richly deserved.

"It will be dark soon. I'll take my flashlight."

"Let me get it, Daddy," Carolyn was only too eager to be of service, as she started upstairs.

"Wait, Carolyn. I think I left it in my overcoat pocket last night, and the coat's right here in the closet under the stairs." He opened the door and got the flash, then turned it on to see if it was working. "Come here, quick, mother," he cried, and there, curled up in a little ball, was baby Billy Elliott, with one thumb in his mouth, fast asleep.

"And I pushed it to as I came in the hall," Nancy said. "But I never thought of it afterwards."

"Well, I know one thing," Carolyn said thoughtfully. "I've learned my lesson. I'll never neglect things again for an old story. I've been too badly scared this time."

And did she ever forget her promise? Well, what do you think?—Margaret Fasset, in the Presbyterian.

The Sweet Peas.

Mary's bright eyes saw Mother as she opened a small package that Father had brought home the night before.

"What's that, Mother?"

"Peas," said Mother.

"Peas?" asked Mary. "Are they good to eat?"

"No," said Mother, "these are not the kind of peas we eat. These are the kind that make pretty flowers. Don't you remember the flowers we had last year out by the garden fence? How would you like to have some flowers this year, your very own?"

"Oh, goody! goody! Some flowers all my very own!"

"Then get on your cap and coat, and we will go out and put the seeds to bed in old Mother Earth, for they will have to sleep a long time."

When Mary and her mother went into the garden, they found that Father had already made a little narrow bed all along by the garden fence, and Mother showed Mary how to put the little seeds into the bed and to cover them with the dirt covers.

Some of the little seeds said, "Umph, we're not sleepy," and they gave a great big roll and rolled right out of the covers.

Then they said, "My, it's much nicer out here with Jolly Round Sun shining down than it would be shut up in that bed in old Mother Earth."

But, after a time, old Jolly Round Sun, himself, went to bed, and it began to get cold and colder and colder, and these little seeds began to get hard and harder and harder, until they got so very hard they could never make any pretty flowers at all.

Some of the little seeds had rolled so far that they rolled under some leaves, and they said, "Now old Jolly Round Sun has gone to bed, so we will sleep here, and, in the morning, when old Jolly Sun gets up, we can have a much nicer time than if we were shut up in that bed in old Mother Earth."

But, in the morning, old Jolly Round Sun did not get up, and the cold North Wind began to blow, and the cold Rain came pitter-patter down, and it rolled these little seeds out from under the leaves, and rolled them along, and rolled them along; and they began to get soft, and softer, until, at last, they fell all to pieces, and they never could make any pretty flowers at all.

But the little seeds that had stayed in the bed of old Mother Earth were just as warm and comfy as they could be. One of them said, "It's dark, and I'm scared."

But another little seed said, "Oh, we're all right. I'm sleepy. Let's go to sleep."

So they shut their eyes and went to sleep, and they slept so long that, when they woke up, they stretched so hard they split their little jackets right up the back, and out of each little seed came a little white stem.

These little white stems pushed up, and pushed up, until one day they pushed right out of the covers, and looked straight up into Mary's bright blue eyes; for she had been watching, and watching, and asking her mother, "When will my little seeds begin to grow?"

Now, old Jolly Round Sun was shining all warm and bright; the cold North Wind had gone away, and the warm South Wind was blowing; and every few days the soft Warm Rain pattered down and gave the little stems all the water they wanted to drink; and they grew and grew, and, after a while, some little leaves came all over them. Soon they began to reach out little fingers to find something to hold to, to help them climb, and Mary's mother said, "We must tie some strings to the fence, for them to hold to."

So Mary and Mother tied strings to sticks stuck into the ground all along behind the row of little vines. Then they tied the other ends of the strings to the top of the fence, and the little fingers twisted around and around them, and the stems grew up so high that they were as tall as Mary herself.

One day, Mary came running to Mother, and said, "Mother, come quick! See the little green things all over my sweet-pea vines."

"Why," said Mother, "those are the little cases that hold the flowers, the buds. See, here is a little flower right now trying to get out."

Sure enough, before that very night, there was a little pink flower sitting up on the stem and nodding right at Mary. In a few days, there were more flowers than Mary could hold in her two hands.

As Mary looked at them, she said, "Mother, whatever did make these pretty flowers grow out of those ugly little seeds we put to sleep in old Mother Earth so long ago?"

And Mother said, "Right in the heart of each of those little seeds, God had put what we call 'life,' and that is what made them grow."—From "Stories Old and Stories New," by Bertha Tralle.

DEAR RAIN.

Monica Williams.

Dear rain, you feel so cool against my face,
As softly you come down
From skies where laden clouds embrace,
The brightness of the dawn.

Your soothing touch refreshes as you give
New life alike to flower and weed,
And man and bird and beast all live
In this most friendly need.

You do not ask if each one all alike
Are worthy so to share,
But through the goodness of Gods' love
You pour out, everywhere.

You do not ask a recompense for
All the good you do,
Nor seek to lift the burden of
The sorrows you bring, too.

You only pour out all you are
And so God's law obey,
And then the sunbeams draw you back
To rain another day.

The Zoo Doctor.

One of the most interesting of jobs is that of the zoo doctor. And many are under the impression that he has a decidedly easy time of it. Nothing is farther from the truth, for the zoo doctor is not only kept busy during the entire day, but has cases to handle that require the utmost skill and rival any of the work done on humans by skilled surgeons.

Animals are subject to a great variety of diseases besides inflicting punishment on themselves and each other. There are certain operations which must be performed regularly, simple enough in themselves, but exceptionally difficult because of the wild beasts upon which the operations must be performed.

For example, the bigger cats must have their claws cut regularly; the elephant has toe-nails which require attention every few months; the monkeys break their arms with distressing regularity; and the snakes develop abscesses on their jaws, which require immediate attention. And to each and every need the doctor must be prepared to give full and competent treatment.

In all of the greater zoos, there are special sanatoriums where the animals are first received and examined. Each new inmate is given a complete physical examination and should anything be wrong, he is kept isolated from the others until he has been cured. Many zoos today have regular hospital quarters and special operating rooms.

And in every zoo, each animal that dies is dissected and studied. Doctors today know as much about the insides of animals as they do about the insides of humans.

Some of the doctor's problems are most interesting. In the Bronx Zoo, which, by the way, covers more area than any other similar establishment in the entire world, a chimpanzee contracted pneumonia. Many such creatures contract this dread disease and little can be done for them. So thought most doctors, but one of them made an interesting experiment. Finding that a lung of the young chimpanzee was useless, he sent for the oxygen-tank and attached the tube to the patient. The life-giving air entered the sufferer's lungs, and soon the chimpanzee was as alive as ever. Another triumph for science.

The wild animals are treated much like humans with their ills. When necessary, chloroform is applied. Monkeys have plaster casts placed on their broken arms and then it is tied about their necks with wooden collars. This is because the monkeys insist on biting into the plaster casts and tearing away the leather.

A baby sucks its thumb. To teach it better, mother places pepper or castor-oil or something else on the thumb. The baby doesn't like the taste; it stops sucking its thumb. In the same way, monkeys often bite their own tails. It pains them, but they don't stop. So the zoo doctor places a red ointment on the tail. This tastes terrible; the monkey stops biting its tail.

Toothaches are frequent among all the animals. The elephants are frequent sufferers, but the best of patients, for they seem to realize that all the trouble is for their own good.

The doctors often have a most difficult time in administering the anesthetic to the animals. In putting a rhinoceros to sleep preparatory to an operation, the task required an hour and forty-five minutes, two pounds of chloroform and almost a pound of ether.

Yes, the zoo doctor has an interesting time of it; he is kept busy all the time, and is often forced to put forth the best in him to solve some of the problems. And among other qualifications, the doctor must be a brave soul, with a full knowledge of animal psychologoy and ways. Otherwise his career may be a short-lived one.—The Girls' World.

Personal Notes

Dr. Yerkes Accepts Call to Sewanee.

Word was received in Philadelphia September 6 that the Rev. Royden Keith Yerkes, D. D., Ph. D., Professor of the History of Religions in the Philadelphia Divinity School, since 1918, has accepted a call to become Professor of Systematic Theology in the Theological School of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., and will enter upon his new duties in October.

Dr. Yerkes, it was learned, received the call, while on his vacation. With the exception of a few years when he was teaching at Nashotah House in the Diocese of Milwaukee, Dr. Yerkes' entire ministry has been spent in the Diocese of Pennsylvania. Prior to his coming to a full Professorship in the Philadelphia Divinity School he had served three years as an Instructor in the History of Religions. A native of Philadelphia, Dr. Yerkes was educated at the University of Pennsylvania, graduating in the class of 1903. In 1905 he graduated from the Philadelphia Divinity School with the highest honors of the school.

Following graduation he became assistant at the Church of Our Saviour, Jenkintown, Penn., serving there for three years, after which he served for a short time as rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, going from there to Nashotah House. In 1911 he returned to the Diocese of Pennsylvania as assistant at St. Luke's, Germantown. Following this he served as Instructor in Hebrew at the University of Pennsylvania, and also as rector of the old Church of the Transfiguration, a parish in close proximity to the University at that time and which subsequently became the headquarters for Episcopal Church work among the students of the University under the Rev. Dr. John R. Hart, Jr.

During his ministry in the diocese he has been especially active in religious educational work, having been a member of the faculty for many years of the Church Normal School, conducted under the auspices of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education and has conducted special courses at a number of Summer School Conferences, and has also served on a number of occasions at the College of Preachers, Washington. From 1911 to 1931 he served as a member of the Board of Examining Chaplains in the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

The Rev. Emile S. Harper of San Francisco will become dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Sacramento, on September 15. The Cathedral is a merger of Trinity Pro-Cathedral and St. Paul's Parish. The services are held in St. Paul's Church, and the work of the Sunday School and the young people's activities are centered at Trinity Church.

The Rev. Geoffrey Horsfield, rector of St. Paul's Church, Savannah, Ga., left by motor Monday, September 2, for a two weeks' vacation in the North.

The Rev. R. E. Abraham, rector of Trinity Church, Thermopolis, Wyoming, was elected Secretary of the Diocese, at a meeting of the Conovcation in Laramie in June. Please address his mail, relative to the office to the above address.

The Rev. John Ridout, formerly assistant minister at Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, Arizona, has been commissioned First Lieutenant Chaplain, Reserve Corps, and ordered to active duty with the CCC Camps at Fort Bliss, Texas.

The Rev. Francis T. Brown, formerly Vicar of St. Paul's Church, Yuma, Arizona, has accepted a call as Vicar of St. Mark's Church, Mesa, Arizona, and entered on his new duties September 1.

The Rev. C. L. Mills, of Jackson, Wyoming, has been called as rector of St. Stephen's Church, Douglas, Arizona, in succession to the late Rev. E. W. Simonson.

The Rev. Edgar Wilcock has resigned as assistant at All Saints' Church, Salome, Arizona, and accepted work in the Diocese of Southern Florida.

Mr. Henry Keissell, a layman formerly of the Diocese of Atlanta, and now of the Diocese of Duluth, has taken up his residence in Little Falls, Minn., where he is to be in charge of the Church of Our Saviour. He is a candidate for Holy Orders and will soon take his examinations for the dioconate.

Mr. Keissel was confirmed at the Church of the Incarnation, Atlanta, was Lay Reader at the Church of the Ascension, Cartersville, Georgia, where he

Rev. John S. Alfriend Retires.

The oldest Episcopal rector in point of service in the Diocese of West Virginia, the Rev. John S. Alfriend, rector, St. Paul's, Weston, has retired, after thirty-nine years of service in the ministry.

The Rev. Dr. Alfriend held charges in Pulaski, Virginia and Charles Town, W. Va., before taking charge of St. Paul's, Weston, fifteen years ago. For fifteen years Dr. Alfriend was chairman of the Standing Committee of the Diocese and for twenty years one of the two Examining Chaplains to the Bishop. He was sent as a delegate to ten General Conventions.

Dr. Alfriend and family will make Clarksburg, W. Va., their permanent home.

Deaths.

Rev. Emory Shailer Towson.

Burial services for the Rev. Emory Shailer Towson, retired priest of the Diocese of West Virginia, were held in Philadelphia, on Saturday, August 31, where he had been making his home since shortly after he retired from an active ministry which began in 1897, following his ordination by the late Bishop Randolph of Southern Virginia. Mr. Towson had been in poor health for some time. He was in his sixty-eighth year.

Born in Towson, Maryland, Mr. Towson was educated at Shurtleff College, the Johns Hopkins University and Crozier Seminary. After a brief ministry in the Baptist Communion, he came into the Episcopal Church. Following his ministry in Southern Virginia, he served from 1901 to 1909 at Zion Church, Palmyra, New York. In 1909 he became rector of the Church of the Covenant, Philadelphia, and in 1913 went to the Missionary District of Spokane, serving as a missionary for two years and for two years longer as rector of St. James' and St. Peter's Churches in that district. During the World War he served at Camp Lewis, Washington. From 1920 to 1924 he was rector of Christ Church, Fairmont, West Virginia, and from 1924 to 1934, when he retired, he was in charge of St. Mark's, Berkeley Springs, West Virginia. Mr. Towson is survived by his widow, two sons, Dr. Charles Emory Towson, and Dr. Ira Gladstone Towson, both of Germantown, and a daughter, Mrs. Aurthur Vanderpool Winton, of Fort Wright, Fisher's Island, New York.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

God Himself cannot do man's best without best men to help Him.

If we trust God ourselves, we may lead others to Him.—The Pilot.

"Look back with thanksgiving
Look forward with praise,
And God shall supply thee
With strength as thy days."

The great men are those who have done everything thoroughly and who have never despised anything, however small, of God's making.—Ruskin.

The man who misses the deep meanings of prayer has not so much refused an obligation; he has robbed himself of life's supreme privilege—friendship with God.—Selected.

"It is God the world needs, whatever the cry of the world may be."

I sometimes think our prayers
Might well be merged in one;
And nest and perch and hearth and church
Repeat "Thy will be done."—Anon.

It is in Christ alone that we may have a clear distinct view of the glory of God and His excellencies; for Him, and Him alone, hath He appointed the Representative of Himself unto us.—Owen.

I took my Christ to church one day
But He could not get in,
The doors were narrow for a man
Whose shoulders bore the sin
Of all the world of souls without
And all the souls within.
—Lawrence.

The study of the Bible is a post-graduate course in the richest library of human experience.—Herbert Hoover.

"If peace be in the heart,
The wildest winter storm is full of solemn beauty,
The midnight lightning flash but shows the path of duty,
Each living creature tells some new joyous story,
The very trees and stones all catch a roll of glory,
If peace be in the heart."

The hoary centuries are full of Him. The echoes of His sweet voice are heard today. His love has perfumed the past nineteen hundred years, and He lives today as the Head of the Church. He lives today the object of warmest adoration, the most passionate love, for whom millions would die this very hour. Empires have fallen, thrones have crumbled, but Jesus lives.—Kittredge.

All other religions are concerned with man seeking God. Christianity is the religion of God seeking man. The ethnic faiths show man's quest after God; Christianity is God's quest for man through Jesus Christ. Note how every utterance of Christ's is based on this point of view: How that He always refers to His Father and Himself as seeking men. He has been sent to men. God is in Him, reconciling the world to Himself.—Selected.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

PEACEFUL METHODS.

The unfortunate assassination of Huey Long brings to mind the whole attitude of many Americans towards firearms. For a supposedly peaceful nation, we support by law the right of individuals to be armed in an alarming fashion. One smiles as he thinks of England where even the police do not cary firearms!

Of course, if we resort to methods of dictatorship, we shall probably be forced to protect our dictators in the traditional manner of dictators—the methods of heavily armed retainers being a cardinal point in the technique. Whatever Mr. Long stood for in politics, and we are afraid it was little except the personal advancement of Mr. Long, he was a traditional dictator. The flaming uniforms of a Hitler or a Mussolini were absent, but the armed guard was there and force demands force in return. May his death at least teach Americans a much needed lesson as to the end of such paths.

In a larger way the philosophy of guns and ammunition is carried out in international relations. Perhaps the demented assassin is not as easy to spot in the international picture. But in the race for armaments, the strong dictating nation is inviting return of physical violence and if the world is again to go mad and resort to murderous war, it will be because the method of armaments has been used rather than the method of peaceful arbitration.

It is doubly unfortunate that certain representatives of Christianity seem to condone both the use of firearms and the use of armaments in general. We still hear a good deal about "self defense." Is not the best defense that which we can make use of in the learning of the golden rule for business and government in general? Is not a Christian attitude towards the rights of others something that the world has not yet learned, and is it not high time that even in little communities where it is yet considered the sign of a strong man to carry a pistol Christian ministers point out the cowardliness of such conduct and the results that are bound to come?

"Negative thinking" is something that psychologists tell us is harmful. What could be more negative than the continued reliance upon physical force? The Christian religion is a religion of positive thinking built upon posiive faith. In the childhood days of civilization recorded in the Old Testament it is true that war and murder were still used, but to those who have the inspiration of The Son of God there is a growth that must be made a reality in our lives, and He on the Cross forever showed the foolishness of methods of physical force.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION AND THE PARISH.

With the autumn months most city and town parishes will begin the Sunday School, or, as we have been taught to say, the Church School. In rural areas it has been running at full force during the months when their greatest activities are carried on—the summer.

But the autumn brings up the whole question of religious education. Though our Church can claim credit for the beginnings of Sunday School work general, we have certainly allowed others to surpass us in the continuation of this great work. Hard as the work is, we have a greater challenge than ever, for religious education in the home has fallen into a state of indifference or negligence, and the only education in religious teachings received by the average child is the few minutes a week given by the Sunday School.

The sad fact is only too true that most of our clergy and laity are ignorant of the whole subject of religious education. And this is true in spite of the fact that our department of Religious Education in the National Council has been and still is (despite financial cuts) most efficient. Once we were at a Summer Conference. Some fine young women who had consecrated their education and talent to the subject of the training of children in religion were teaching a course in their subject. Many of the clergy present were almost insolently indifferent. They did not understand the problem, and they did not realize that behind the technique that was being taught was a method that would hold in the present doubting world. But the consecration and talent was wasted, for in everything we must have the willingness to learn as well as the teacher who is eager to impart knowledge.

Can we not plead for a better use of the National Council's department? Can we not hope that Episcopalians will still receive light enough to realize that they are ignorant about one of the most important things in the world? Can we not get over the supercilious attitude that such things belong to Baptist and Methodists and not to cultured Episcopalians? Unless we do, we may find ourselves in a few generations without enough adults informed about religion to make very much difference whether our Church exists or not.

But there is hopefulness in the fact that a fine group in our Church are aroused to the problem, and when people are aroused something is done. Vestries and rectors are gradually learning that almost the first appropriation necessary is that for a Church School,

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

German Cardinals Threaten to Impose an Interdict.

Christian Century, September 11, 1935.

Tense as the religious situation in Germany has been, it seems now to be hastening toward a crisis far more severe than any so far experienced. As these words are written, the Protestant pastors are deciding whether to accept what the government authorities have declared is a final ultimatum, demanding state control over the life of the churches. Meanwhile, the Catholic hierarchy has reached its decision and has publicly cast down the gauntlet to Hitler. On Sunday, September 1, a pastoral letter signed by the three German cardinals, and twenty-three archbishops, bishops and other church dignitaries, was read in all the Catholic churches of the Reich. In this letter the authorities of the Catholic church warned the Reichsfuhrer of "the danger of abuse of power and other interference and oppression of the Christian conscience." They reiterated their refusal to accept a state dictatorship over their churches. They denied charges of "political Catholicism." They instructed members of their churches that it is their "holy duty" to enroll their children in such religious organizations as the Nazis have tried to suppress in favor of the Hitler Youth. And to top it all, the hierarchy uttered a threat which does not come frequently from Catholic lips in these days. "Our church vanquished the old heathens and will not be upset by the new heathenism," the cardinals and the bishops warned. "But it is possible to remove the light of faith from countries which fail us in this hour." This is nothing less than a threat to put all Germany under an interdict. German national feeling has never forgotten the result of one interdict; even the treaty of Versailles has not left as deep wounds as the courtyard of Canossa. The cardinals are fully aware that no punishment imposed by the church today could produce another such prostration before the papal power. But Hitler, also, knows that the 23,000,000 Catholics in Germany would not accept complacently withdrawal of their sacraments.

LABELS.

Editorial—Chicago Herald and Examiner, September 5, 1935.

The habit of branding all who differ from us is pernicious. It is possible to "curse by labels" and it mars the Christian fellowship. The most common one today is the red label. Let a man suggest that there are evils in our system and seek to remedy the evil—let him see that something is wrong when so few have nearly all the money and so many have hardly enough to eat. Let him speak out and he is apt to be labelled Radical, Socialist or even Communist. His ideas are dismissed by many and he is considered dangerous and unworthy of fellowship.

Let a man awaken to the curse of war and see peace in season and out of season, let him take a stand on the matter before the world and he is dubbed a Pacifist and treated by some as though his wits had departed. Pacifist, as a preacher I heard this summer remark, means a maker of peace, and Jesus calls every one of us to be peacemakers. Unless we are, we can hardly hope to taste His "blessed."

"Old fashioned" is another label. "Victorian" we say of a thing and condemn it, but some of the moral and spiritual values of that past day are worth preserving. As we let go yesterday's temporal fashions, the stiff manners, the hampering clothes, the horse-hair furniture, let us hold to yesterday's eternal treasures. The priceless things of life belong to yesterday as well as today. Love and loyalty, honor and integrity, chivalry and devotion, all these belong to yesterday as well as today.

Some still use the labels Modernist and Fundamentalist. Great harm is done when we persist in these labels. Christ is the great and only name. Is the man a Christian? Is he regenerate? Is he consecrated? Is he a believer? As Bishop Taylor Smith said, "Has he the inside of the bottle and not the label?" Whichever way a man's mind turns on the various questions does his heart turn to Christ in everything. That is the question. The hungry sheep who look up from the pews know little about the label and perhaps care less but they know when they are fed.

In the second and third centuries "Christian" was a label of condemnation. The Roman citizens had a violent prejudice against the Christians. All the evils of the time were attributed to them. Let a crop fail and "the Christians to the lions." Once the Jews and Gentile were severed. There was no fellowship between them. But St. Paul says: "Christ has broken down the middle wall of partition between us." Labels keep men apart. They breed enmity and resentment. They tend to destroy the Christian fellowship. As we set out to reform the world, let each begin with himself. It will help a great deal if we junk our labels and measure everyone and everything by the standard of Christ.

Youth and the Church.

Editorial—The Canadian Churchman, September 12, 1935.

The character of a city or nation can be no higher than the collective, average character of its citizenship.

All the laws and edicts that might be devised by sociologists, economists or political idealists for raising the level of public morality, and thus increasing the general welfare, could not overcome that truth.

In a democracy, the common morality must be improved before the public morality can be elevated for purposes of better government and higher communal good.

To reason otherwise is to say that a community or a people can lift itself by its bootstraps—that citizens in the mass can, by some magical legislative hocus-pocus, transform themselves into beings superior to what they are when taken singly.

Only by building individual morality can public morality be assured.

And it has been demonstrated that through religion can be imparted to youth in the mass the strength of character that is indispensable to the advancement of the human race.

No more potent agency has been found than religion for inculcating, as matters of everyday practice, ideas of rigid personal honor, of charity, of sacrifice and of courageous adherence to right against wrong.

Based as they are upon spiritual conviction, or faith in supernatural law, religious principles are stronger than any rules ever devised by man for the regulation of his behavior.

An honest mind, properly trained in the light of religious teaching, can be trusted to function honestly in any crisis, regardless of its skill in reasoning.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

The Will to Power or the Will to Serve?

Dictatorships seem at present to be the order of the day. Mussolini, the dictator of Italy, has even gone beyond the absolute control of a single nation, for he has served notice to the world at large, as represented by the League of Nations, that he will brook no interference from anyone, and that any such opposition to his will in regard to the invasion of Ethiopia, would be considered by him as an act of war. There is a realization on the part of the powers belonging to the League of Nations that its existence as a bulwark against war is being imperilled, but they are afraid of taking any drastic action lest it should precipitate a conflagration, which would involve the whole of Europe. On the other hand, if Italy is allowed to carry on a war of conquest against Ethiopia, a still greater crisis might arise in the form of a rising of the colored races against the white, or at any rate profoundly disturb the relations between them. The nations have never before been brought face to face with such a perplexing and perilous dilemma.

A World Phenomenon.

Such a world phenomenon as Mussolini is a demonstration of the power of the human will when developed to an abnormal extent. It is true that in absorbing, as it were, all the powers of government into his own person, he has been actuated by a desire to make of Italy a great nation and to revive, as far as possible, the glory of the Roman Empire. But his overvaulting ambition has carried him too far, in seeking to conquer an independent nation in order that he may add its territory and resources to his own nation. The whole world looks on with practically universal disapproval, but this one superman seems to be able, by the sheer power of his own will, to defy the judgment of mankind. The world stands still and can apparently do nothing to avert the blow that is being delivered, not only against Ethiopia, but against civilization itself.

Possibilities of Personality.

The possibilities of human personality can scarcely be exaggerated, when we contemplate the career and present position of this man, Mussolini, especially when we consider his humble origin. It is not this kind of leadership, however, that this poor distracted world needs at the present time. Such a leader as Mussolini is rather calculated to bring about more chaotic conditions than ever. It is not the Will to Power that is needed to create a better and more stable civilization, but the Will to Serve.

Christ and the Law of Service.

The figure of Christ stands in the history of the world as the Perfect Example of manhood at its best. And His life was above all, one of service; for though He was the Son of God, yet He humbled Himself to become the Servant of all humanity. "I am among you as He that serveth," He said to His disciples, in order that they might know and all the world might know, that this is the ideal life, and the one which most pleases God, and brings out the divine image in our nature.

The Need for Great Men.

The world urgently needs great men at this critical time in human history, but their greatness must be manifested in their likeness to Christ, and their longing and desire to serve their fellowmen. If mere natural ability, when fully developed, can manifest such a commanding influence as to make its will supreme in world affairs, Christianity ought to be capable of producing leaders whom the world will recognize as wielding an influence equal to and greater than any force which is merely natural. For personality, great as its possibilities are, even on a natural plane, must have greater possibilities still when reinforced with union with God, and working in alliance with Him. The Law of Service has been revealed to us by Christ Himself, as the Law of His own life, and therefore divine, and that being so, by working on the same plan as He did, we are sure that we are working together with God, since Christ's life was a fulfillment of the Divine Purpose, and in harmony with it. "Whose I am and Whom I serve," said St. Paul, which goes far to explain the secret of the tremendous influence which he exerted in his own day, and has been exerting ever since by his writings.

Collective Responsibility for Service.

But great leaders are not sufficient, mighty though their influence may be; there should be a general rise in the level of Christian life and service among the rank and file of the army of the Living God. There is an imense amount of reserve power in the Christian Church, and this ought to be brought out and used to influence the world. It is impossible to measure the capacity for service in the humblest servant of God when the Holy Spirit is allowed to use him as he has the power and willingness to do. The possibilities of the human soul are known only to God Himself who alone knows how to make the most of them.

Equipment for Service.

We ought to pray that He will take every gift and talent and power with which He has endowed us, and train them and equip them for the highest kind of service open to us here on earth. This is for God's honor and glory and not our own, and therefore it is our duty to seek for such a revelation to us and to the world of what God created us for and is able to make of us, at our best.

Christ's Channel.

If I could but His channel be,
That He might let the forces free
Which like a great and mighty tide
Will all that hinders override.
Then shall I see things come to pass
Which none have seen this age, alas!
But why should we not see them now
As blossoms come upon the bough?
A new spring hastens on its way
To show what can be in His day,
When He shall His great power reveal
The sorrows of the world to heal.
Then may I have a part with Him
To fill man's cup full to the brim
With joy of knowing what His power
Can make us in His destined hour,
When in the brightness of His day
All things shall come beneath His sway.

Personal Qualifications for the Ministry

By THOMAS L. HARRIS.

Rector Church of St. Luke and The Epiphany, Philadelphia.

LET US BEGIN with a dazzling glimpse of the obvious. The paramount personal qualification for the ministry, is that the minister himself should be a person. Although obvious enough this qualification is often either ignored or mistaken. A vestry on the hunt for a new rector is apt to confuse having a charming personality with being a person; while the rector himself thinks that being highly individualistic is identical with being a person. The vestry's mistake is more pardonable because a charming personality may really disclose a person underneath, though, alas, it often is only the smiling face rising above a stuffed shirt. The younger clergy have a cruelly apt name for this type. The young Apollo with a winning smile and a charming pulpit manner, who dazzles by a swift rise from glory unto glory, yet somehow in early middle life leaves an indelible impression of failure in his ministry, may deceive all his people some of the time—usually the first year in his new parish—but his irreverent brethren have probably long since classified him as one of "the personality boys." Charm, a winsome smile, affability, these are gifts and graces which may be of inestimable value to a person, but are meretricious on a stuffed shirt. "Personality" in the popular sense is apt to be a very superficial characteristic. Unhapy the man who has nothing substantial behind those ornaments and unhapy the parish that finds itself led by a graceful figurehead rather than by a real person.

The minister, on the other hand, frequently confuses being an individual with being a person. Most of us suffer at sometime from an acute attack of rectoritis. Some of us never recover—with disastrous consequences for our ministry. The minister suffering from rectoritis is assertive, eccentric, domineering, individualistic. He is, if you like, a character, not a person, a rector but not a parson. His mannerisms may amuse but they are not edifying. The initiated suspect that his individuality has a neurotic origin. Occasionally a great individualist may render his church a service, but more often the gifted individualist is a heretic rather than a saint, and the average individualist is a nuisance to his vestry, his brethren and the Bishop.

What, then, makes a person? What are the characteristics of a person? First of all, a true person exhibits a consistent, and well-rounded development. The healthy tree grows, and with varying speed according to the circumstances of age and climate, but it does not grow lopsided or deformed. A person likewise grows—but grows consistently, not ecentrically. We may say, then, the first characteristic of a person is an integrated development. A true person is whole-hearted, whole-souled, not divided by complexes, not deformed by one-sided development. The second characteristic of a person is that he is consecrated. This really follows from the first characteristic; for growth cannot be a consistent development unless it is directed towards one end. Of course the stimuli of growth may be varied, and the pace of growth may alter, but it moves in one direction. Any person has reacted to many stimuli. The first intimations of religion gained in Sunday School and Church; the intellectual stimulus of college, the spiritual stimuli of the ministry; all these have played upon the person who is a minister; but assuming him to be a person these are not distracting stimuli, but attracting; consciously he draws at his cares and studies one way—and that way leads to God through Christ. Without being consecrated no man can be integrated—he cannot be a person. Of course there are lesser consecrations—the most familiar being a whole-hearted devotion to oneself; but such self-worship produces only individuals, not persons. Other consecrations there are; to a church, to science, to a political party; but none of these provides the possibility of perfect consecration, because only devotion to a person can form a person. Unquestionably, the chief personal qualification for the ministry is being oneself a person—equally certain it is that one can become a person only by consecration to a person and that Person is God in Christ.

INTELLUCTUAL and natural qualifications for the ministry are eminently desirable, but absolutely essential is a genuine devotion to our Lord and consecration to God's will.

But, lest this should seem an empty platitude, let us return to the maker of integration. A poorly integrated person is a disaster in the ministry. The leadership he should provide is marred by his own conflicts; the unhealthy physician of souls cannot bring sound health to those in need. There is no limit to the damage done the cause of Christ by unhealthy, poorly adjusted priests. Let us leave the melancholy prospect and turn to see how integration is gained. Integration comes from handling real difficulties. Disintegration begins when the real problems of life are not solved but set aside. The minister who has not met the difficulties of adjustment to parents is not fit to serve Him who said to His mother, "Woman, what have I to do with thee?" In the development of personality the first cruical stage is solving the problem of relating ourselves to our parents. If we are dishonest with them then disintegration begins. But there are many other issues to be found. In marriage, in vocation, in the daily choices which are our response to life's countless challenges, we become either more closely knit into a person or tend to disintegrate. The ministry is no place for a man who fears to choose, and to choose whole-heartedly. Perhaps no other profession so constantly exposes a man to the perils of choice. The minister is master of his own time and must choose what he will do with it; he must choose his text and theme for his weekly sermon, and the responsibility of spiritual leadership resolves itself into the duty of choosing. No wonder that in the Roman Church the perils of choice are safe-guarded by elaborate regulations. Nevertheless, no system of regulations, however wise, can altogether relieve the priest of his rsponsibility to choose. There is a more excellent way than regulation—this, too, the Roman Church has followed—namely consecration. The ultimate strength of the human person is when his will conforms to God's. Then choice ceases to be disintegrating effort but an act of the whole being. "Ama et fac quod vis" "Love and do what you will," is the final secret of psychology and ethics.

Consecration to God is, therefore, an absolute prerequisite for the priest, indeed for any man, if he is to become a person. Otherwise he will be torn asunder by the conflicting claims of his desire and reality itself. And consecration is rarely in the aorist tense; usually it is in the imperfect, as a continuing process. Consecration is a process that needs constant stimulation from worship, from meditation, from ethical action. In worship the creature adores the creator; he

The Episcopal Church and Labor

By the Rev. Floyd Van Keuren,

Executive Secretary of the Social Service Commission of the Diocese of New York.

THE Episcopal Church is deeply interested in the labor movement. Her Founder was a carpenter. And today the problems of labor are the personal problems of a large percentage of her membership. Working men and women form a great proportion of her congregations; many parishes are almost exclusively made up of working people. Among her members, too, are conscientious employers as deply concerned with these difficult problems as are their employees. Outside her own membership she is equally interested; for the relationship between employer and employee, is a vital part of that whole field of human relationships in which the Church has a divine call to spread the Kingdom of God.

In expressing her interest in labor, however, the Episcopal Church is wise to observe certain cautions, lest she injure the cause she would help. She should, in the first place, be sure that the particular labor movement whose cause she is to sponsor is a movement of honest labor. For there are honest labor movements and there are dishonest labor movements, and it is not always easy to distinguish between them. A tree is still known by its fruits, but treacherous camouflage, perversive propaganda and dishonest politics easily make excellent fruit appear to be growing on very corrupt trees.

Names and titles, for example, mean nothing; the better the name, the worse may be the organization itself. Such words as "workers," "industrial," and "union," are being used by many irresponsible, shiftless, and even sinister groups, who are "workers" only in the sense that they are working for the destruction of industrial peace. They are not interested in justice for American labor; they are greedy for what they might get for themselves out of the overthrow of American institutions. They are really the instigators of most of the strikes, and are to blame for a large part of the disorders accompanying strikes. This is one of the reasons why both the general public and the best labor leaders are beginning to lose sympathy with strike methods. Even peaceful picketing has been so exploited by these groups that intelligent persons are more inclined to patronize than to boycott picketed shops.

These rabble groups are at war with honest labor as represented by the better element in the American Federation of Labor, and are indeed boring from within, in an effort to capture that organization for their own sinister purposes, or to destroy it. Yet, unfortunately, certain church people and public officials, innocently taking them at their word as "labor" organizations, and blindly failing to distinguish between honest and dishonest labor, have supported their subversive movements and even endorsed their vicious strikes. What a tragic pity it is, as a great labor leader has commented, that Church people should thus blindly and unwittingly fight against the cause of honest labor by giving aid and support to its enemies.

THE problem of labor is a difficult and complicated one, but it is neither so difficult nor so complicated as certain interested reformers and social radicals would have us believe. It is a matter of intricate and progressive adjustments toward better and fuller social welfare on both sides. Inherently it is in no sense a "class struggle," although many aspects of class conflict have been introduced into it as propaganda to try to prove a necessity for a new social and economic order.

The Episcopal Church should avoid the trap of advocating a new social and economic order, if by that is meant a repudiating and up-rooting of the old social order. True, we have been told of the collapse of the old order, and we have had neurotic reflections on the end of an era. The informed student of social history knows that there has been no collapse of the old order—such a statement is sheer propagnda to justify revolutionary experiments. The old order has had its faults and failures, but instead of collapsing it has been growing better, century by century. There have been off years, and even generations, as in the growth of a tree there are winter periods; but, on the whole, human society has been developing toward the Kingdom of God as our Lord said it would, "first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." Slow, persistent, evolutionary growth is God's way for social progress.

Make the test for yourselves and see how false is the propaganda of the radicals. Compare any period of history with that of one hundred years before, and observe how glorious has been the progress of social evolution. Why, it would have to be so,—wouldn't it?—for one who believes in God.

THIS suggests another caution which should guide the Church in her assistance to labor. She should beware of the extremist in the labor movement, and should give her support to labor's conservative and intelligent leadership. The best leadership in the American Federation of Labor is sometimes criticized because it represents the American middle-class point of view. Well, have we any more sane and more wholesome point of view than that of our great American middle-class? It is there that the soundest social judgment is to be found, and not among the extremes of society. Consider the extremely ignorant on the one hand, and the extreme intelligentsia on the other; or, on the one hand, what the Soviets call the "proletariat," and on the other, the ultra plutocrat—all of these extremes, by the very fact that they are extremes, are unrelated to wholesome, normal society. They have been well called, "lunatic fringes." Their social ignorance usually fosters social arrogance. In the physiology of the human body, as a physician recently said to me, extremes are pathological, a form of disease. One might, with equal truth, say that in the body of society such extremes are communist, socialist and fascist are psychopathic—forms of mental disease.

The matter is not, of course, one of education or the lack of it, of money or the lack of it. It is a matter of wholesome human character, of honesty, morality, self-discipline, and other old fashioned but Christian virtues. The honest labor movement believes in these standards. It knows that without these social standards the labor movement itself will fail. The Episcopal Church may well stand shoulder to shoulder with labor's best leaders in their efforts to maintain these standards.

Something of this was suggested in a recent sign, "The motorman of this car was chosen because he is courteous, capable and efficient." If some such standards were a requisite for every job, labor would again have dignity and power. If such were the standards for membership in labor unions the labor movement would indeed move forward victoriously. Suppose we carry it farther. What a grand old world it would be if every worker of every kind—employee, employer, government official, clergyman—knew that his only "right" to have a job at all depended on his being "courteous, capable and efficient."

Unfortunately, certain Labor Sunday messages of the churches seem not to be greatly concerned with these matters. Based on the false assumption that our social order has collapsed, these messages sometimes read more like socialist or communist political platforms than words of help from religious groups. Some are but thinly disguised appeals for the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of some sore of proletarian collectivism. It is a pity when church bodies seem more anxious to arouse the passions of irresponsible and undisciplined rank and file elements than they are to rally real workers to a loyal support of responsible and conservative labor leaders.

TO cry "Peace! Peace!" when there is no peace is indeed a weak and blind thing to do. But to cry "Fire! Fire!" when the danger is slight, is criminal. Those who know real social conditions throughout this country, behind the screen of radical undermining propaganda, know that there would be little danger of social fires, were it not for the menace of social incendiaries—radicals of various types. Some of them are children and visionary dreamers, filled with religious fervour for justice and mercy, but utterly inexperienced and impractical, and playing into the hands of vicious and sinister radicals, who are hostile to law and order and to all established government except a Communist one. Many of these latter are alien enemies guided by the steel hand of Stalin. We may thank God that our great labor leaders are waging war against these social incendiaries. Should not the Church help in this struggle of labor against social incendiarism? Surely, the Church can best help the labor movement by fostering and encouraging and supporting the best in that movement.

Justice on both sides; the division of the fruits of labor, as much as is possible according to the social value of the service rendered, and, when there is work to be done and ability to do it, the general acceptance of St. Paul's sound employment slogan "If any will not work, neither let him eat."—these principles must continue to be set forth by better and better labor laws progressively adjusted to changing conditions. But such laws will always be evaded, as similar laws have been in the past, by those employers and employees

Salt of the Earth

By JAMES E. FREEMAN.

Bishop of Washington.

WITHIN THE LIFE of every man there is that which certifies to him that he is possessed of a quality of life that is indestructible. As Tennyson puts it, "We know we were not made to die." No matter how we may express it in a formal creed, we have the deep consciousness that the better part of our nature, the real self within us, must go on. The intimations of immortality come to us with increasing insistence and stronger affirmations as life proceeds. Quite apart from revelation itself, we discover in every race and people a passion for life, a desire for higher fulfillment, and this passion will not be denied, no matter what the disappointments and disillusionments of life may suggest.

One of the great interpreters of this conception of an endless life is the apostle St. Paul. He writes with strong conviction concerning it in the fifteenth chapter of his first letter to the Corinthians, so assured is he in his triumphant belief that he cries out: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" In another place in a letter written to the Church in Rome, he says: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." It is the concurrent witness of the eternal spirit with that which resides in man that compels him to believe in his higher destiny, in a divine quality within his nature that survives all the shocks and ills of time. Even though in moments of careless, objectless living he seems to silence the voices that tell him he has a spark of the divine in his nature, when severe tests and trials are upon him he inevitably asserts his belief that he must go on even when death has sealed his eyes in an "iron sleep."

Ever and again in these recent years we have heard it suggested that man has lost his zest for a fuller, more abundant life, that the misfortunes of this life rob him of desire for a life that is to be. We do not believe it. All our observation and experience affirm the utter indestructibleness of man's hope for higher attainment. He may suppress his deeper feelings and emotions, regard himself as the victim of fortuitous circumstances, while away his days in excesses and the gratification of selfish desire, but sometime, somewhere, when he is rendered sober and reflective by misfortune or disaster, the witness within answers to the witnes without, and he sees life as a process of development, leading on beyond the years into a future where all his better hopes and ideals shall have their logical fulfillment.

> "'Alas for him who never sees,
> The stars shine through the cypress trees."

Thus the poet wrote; to him the tragedy of tragedies was a life without assurance, without the capacity to see the glimmering stars shining through the darkening shadows of the somber trees.

I have dealt with every variety and expression of life, from the most depraved to the most virtuous, and I have yet to find the individual who persistently refused to believe in the larger, more complete life. There may have been doubts and misgivings, there may have been barriers that seemed insurmountable, but when the supreme test came, the spirit within asserted itself and it found peace and satisfaction in the assuring voice that said: "Because I live, ye shall live also." So real was Christ's recognition of this spirit within man that he used all His powers to give it a finer, fuller expression. Wherever He touched life, no matter what its limitations, He evoked a response by showing it what it possessed of divinity. Herein, we discover His power over men, yes, and His continuing power even down to the latest day. Our human nature responds to His appeal, not alone because He speaks with authority, but because He calls forth that which we recognize is common to life itself. We are at our best and our truest when we give the divine element in our natures its fullest, freest expression; when we really assert our rightful heritage as the "children of God."

It is the "spirit that beareth witness" with our spirit that gives to life a new meaning and a consciousness of its ultimate attainment.

Bishop Jackson Kemper "Bishop of All Outdoors"

RECALLING the days when the Middle West and the entire region of the Mississippi Basin was a wilderness, high officials of the Episcopal Church in the United States, clerical and lay, will participate beginning Sunday, September 22, in a week of observances of the Centennial Anniversary of the consecration, September 25, 1835, of Jackson Kemper as the first Missionary Bishop of the American Church.

Kemper, signifying "champion," heads the list as predecessor and fore-runner or Hare, Whipple, Chase, Otey, Tuttle, Talbot, Rowe, McKim, and the other great American missionary bishops who as real pioneers, were in the forefront of the struggle for the "winning of the West"; or, facing East, carried the Cross overseas to the uttermost parts of the world. His life is one of the epics of the Plains.

Designated Missionary Bishop of "the Northwest," Kemper entered his "diocese" six weeks after his consecration in Philadelphia on a conestoga wagon, with his trunk as a seat and a mule in the shafts, wearing top boots and a "four quart" hat. He assumed jurisdiction over a region of three hundred thousand square miles in extent. It was a desolate waste, with no other means of travel save over trapper's trails, unsettled, with Indians still roaming at large, and the flood of immigration just setting in. Scattered over the vast domain were about 800,000 whites and Indians living practically in a state of nature. Casting about, he found that the total equipment for his task consisted of one minister and no Church in Indiana, and one Church and no minister in Missouri. He was practically without help, financial or otherwise: nothing but his zeal and determination.

Fortunately, Kemper was not unacquainted with part of the territory into which he had plunged. A year previous to his consecration he had visited the Indian settlement at Green Bay, Wisconsin. So he set to work, travelling across Indiana and Illinois in his open wagon, toiling through swamps: and by stage coach and wagon, flat boat and afoot, he shoved over into Missouri and Iowa, up into Minnesota, into Wisconsin, and even down into Oklahoma. He faced all the hardships of the pioneer, slept where night found him, ate when possible: but persistently and everlastingly applied himself to his task, holding services, establishing churches and missions, training ministers, displaying generally in his work for his Church the same courage and resource of which the incoming immigrants were compounded, keeping pace with them, his churches rising as fast as the settlements were laid out by the settlers.

One gets an idea of the magnitude of the task he set for himself and carried through, from the fact that in the region in which he labored for nineteen years following his consecration are now comprised the great states of Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Missouri, Nebraska and North and South Dakota.

FROM 1835 to 1854 Kemper labored steadfastly in the cause in which he was enlisted. Then, in the latter year, his efforts having born rich fruitage, for the second time he was called to be Bishop of the newly created diocese of Wisconsin, a wilderness when he entered the territory at the beginning of his missionary episcopate. He accepted the post with the proviso that he be permitted to retain his missionary jurisdiction. He died May 24, 1870, a missionary to the end of his days, hailed reverently by his Church as an apostle worthy to be spoken of in the same breath with St. Paul, whom in many respects he was said to resemble, especially in his fire and zeal and eloquence; his faith and in his capacity to endure all the privations and hardships of the pioneer and trail breaker. During his nineteen years as Bishop of the Northwest, Kemper travelled 300,000 miles, a greater distance than the first great apostle travelled after his conversion on the road to Damascus. A man of splendid physique and great power of endurance, which was at its peak in those days of his great adventure, Kemper almost necessarily possessed a sustaining sense of humor.

"Were it not for the sure word of prophecy," he wrote once, "I would wish to relinquish the post which I sought not, and where I have almost thought at times that I commanded a forlorn hope."

It must have been in these darker hours that his sense of humor came to his assistance, and he was able to say when asked of what he was Bishop,

"Bishop of what, sir? I am Bishop of all out doors."

In the nineteen years of his work in the wilderness, Kemper was able to contemplate upon becoming Bishop of Wisconsin, a diocese in Missouri, with its Bishop and twenty-seven clergy: Indiana, a diocese with its Bishop and twenty-five clergy. Wisconsin, his own diocese, with fifty-five clergy: Iowa, a diocese with a Bishop and thirty-one clergy, and Minnesota, Kansas and Nebraska, similarly organized.

Now, with a century having intervened since he journeyed forth, eleven thriving and prosperous states have been carved out of the wildernes into which he plunged; and within these states where there was one church and one minister all told, when Kemper became Bishop of all out doors, the Episcopal Church is hailing today twenty-two thriving dioceses, with a total of 1,121 churches, 914 ministers and a membership list aggregating a quarter of a million.

It is the life and achievements of this historic figure in Nation and Church that primarily will be commemorated in the services which have been arranged for the week of September 22 in Wisconsin. But in a larger sense it is an important epoch in the history of the American Church, which the advent of Kemper signalizes, upon which great stress will be laid.

It was with Kemper's election at the General Convention of the Church in 1835 that the Episcopal Church emerged from the lethargy into which it had fallen in the years following its emergence as an independent Church, after the Revolution and assumed the worldwide function of propagating the faith which is the reason for its existence. Insular, almost parochial in its work up to then, a sermon preached in the Convention of 1835 by Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, recalled to the assembled bishops, priests and laymen the missionary motive which is the bases of Christian organization. The Church had been dragging along, concerned largely with its local, petty concerns. Theretofore, what little missionary work it had engaged in was financed and administered separately and apart from the ordinary work of the Church by a volunteer missionary society of a dues paying character.

The Convention, under Bishop Doane's leadership, changed all that. At an inspired session of the gathering, the missionary motive was proclaimed to be the first and chief concern of the Church, which itself was declared to be in fact the Missionary Society, of which every baptized person in the Communion was held to be a responsible member. Haphazard support of missionary work came to an end. The suport of the missionary enterprise, with the entire world as its field, was made a fixed charge upon the Church as a whole.

Kemper's election as the first missionary Bishop of the Church followed, and the seed which was sown in that Convention of 1835 has borne fruit since then in the dispatch of 98 missionary bishops by the Episcopal Church to domestic missionary districts, and throughout the world, with the full force of the Church behind them in their efforts.

KEMPER'S dispatch as a missionary bishop marked, also, an interesting break with the past. Under the age old procedure Bishops were "called" to service. But Kemper was "sent," since there was no one in the wilderness, where a Bishop was needed most, to call him. Also interesting to note is that, with this innovation, came another departure from established custom, which, incidentally, practically revolutionized the world-wide missionary movement. Bishops in the old days were largely associated with knee breeches, a coach-and-four and a palace. It is from the English Church, it will be recalled, that the American Bishops stem. But Kemper went forth in true pioneer fashion —in the garb of a plainsman, perched on a lumber wagon or astride a pony, his See in his hat, the broad heavens for his palace,—and thereby set a fashion for missionary bishops the world over.

This interesting pioneer, who gave the best part of his life to the promotion of religion in the wilderness, was a college graduate of culture and refinement; a man, too, of force and character, iron will, though intensely human, and capable of what seems to have been an incredible ability to endure hardship. The First Missionary Bishop of the Church began his clerical career in Connecticut, the diocese of the first Bishop of the American Church, and he was consecrated by that William White, Father of the American Church, who in the dark days of the War for Independence, "bared his neck to the rope" by serving as Chaplain of the First Continental Congress.

Born in Pleasant Valley, New York, December 21, 1789, of German parents, he had given the first twenty years of his clerical life to parochial work when the summons to the mission field reached him. He died May 24, 1870, the 31st Bishop in the American succession. One of the impressive features of the series of observances of the Centennial of his consecration will be a service on the afternoon of Sunday, September 22, at the side of his grave on the campus of the Theological school at Nashotah, Wisconsin, of which he was one of the founders, and in sight of which, in the modest home where he passed his declining years, he died.

Commemorative services of the Centennial will be held genrally throughout the Episcopal Church; but it is in the dioceses of Milwaukee, Eau Claire and Fond du Lac, all in the state of Wisconsin, that the formal services in which the Presiding Bishop will participate, will be held. The program of these services is as follows:

Sunday, September 22.

A short and informal service outdoors at Nashotah at 3 P. M.

a. A few words by the Presiding Bishop.
b. An address on Bishop Kemper and Nashotah by Dean Nutter.
c. An address on Bishop Kemper the Man by Bishop Wilson.

Procession to grave of Bishop Kemper, with suitable prayers by Bishop Ivins, and the indication of other graves of interest in Nashotah Cemetery by an informed guide.

Picnic supper.

who may become a person looks to him who is. In meditation, a man looks upon Man and sets God Incarnate upon the altar of his own heart. The priest who is too busy to meditate lovingly upon His Master's life and words and work ceases to be His servant. But beyond worship, beyond meditation, there lies the world, which is the field for God's work, which is the context of every human person. The life of action springs from the life of prayer. In ethical action whether it be within the family or in the management of financial affairs our personalities must find their expression. Deeds are the fruits by which the tree of personality is known.

WE HAVE said nothing about these personal qualifications which a vestry is apt to seek. Forcefulness, gentlemanliness, the ability to mix with people, these qualifications have their place in the total picture. It is, however, no more possible to choose the ideal minister by such a list of characteristics than it is to choose a beauty by abstract notions as to regularity and measurement of features.

If the essential of Christian consecration is there even uncouthness may cease to be a blemish. St. Paul doubtless lacked many of the natural graces; indeed he admits his handicap in his letter to the Galatians— but the Galatians loved him and followed him nevertheless because that handicap (whatever it may have been) was overcome by Paul's consecration to Christ.

He who has this essential personal qualification for the ministry need not fear that his ministry will be in vain. He may lack brilliance of mind, or cleverness of oratory, he may never become one of the great preachers or scholars or administrators of the Church. Such a man cannot, however, fail as a priest. A priest must speak as a person to other persons; he must lead his flock to the Great Shepherd of the Sheep. The minister might well choose for his motto what Cardinal Newman selected for his arms, "'Cor ad cor loquitar." "Heart speaks to heart." A whole-hearted consecrated soul alone can minister to those whose souls are torn by sin and doubt. Only a person can be a parson.

who themselves lack personal honor, human kindness and high morality.

These are the fruits of real religion—personal religion based on the knowledge of God as revealed in Jesus Christ. Here then is the Church's greatest opportunity to be of service to the labor movement—to bring employers and employees to Christ, that they may be no longer children tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of radical dictrine, but that each may attain unto a unity of faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT.

With this issue the Reverend G. W. Gasque becomes Editor of our "News From the Front" page. Mr. Gasque is Rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Atlanta, Georgia. He is deeply interested in Missions, and is the author of a set of lectures on our mission fields which a bishop describes as "one of the most informing and interesting things on Missions that I ever read."

It is hoped that Mr. Gasque wil have the hearty co-operation of those who can supply news from the mission fields, especially the missionaries. We take this opportunity to welcome Mr. Gasque into our family of editors.

« « IMPORTANT » »

We would like to take this opportunity to urge those subscribers who have not paid their subscriptions to do so by return mail. The Southern Churchman is making a valiant fight and it is a great drain on our treasury to have to send out some thousands of bills each month for past due accounts. The bills are small, but in the aggregate they amount to a large sum, which we need to carry on the work. We shall appreciate tremendously your cooperation.

As much as we dislike to take this step, from now on we shall be forced to cancel subscriptions on which payments have been overdue for three months.

BISHOP OF NORTH TEXAS MAKES MEMORIAL ADDRESS

Vested Choir of St. Andrews' Church Provides Music for Annual Convention at Auditorium

For the Forty-fifth Annual Re-Union of United Confederate Veterans, and the Fortieth Annual Convention of the Sons of Confederate Veterans in Amarillo, in the Missionary District of North Texas, held from September 3 to 6, Bishop E. Cecil Seaman delivered the memorial address in the Municipal Auditorium. The vested choir of St. Andrew's Church furnished the music for the occasion, and the rector, the Rev. Fredrick A. Foster, was invited to have an important part in the services.

Bishop Seaman is Chaplain of the local Camp of the Sons of Veterans, his father, the late W. H. Seaman, of Galveston, having served on General Kirby-Smith's staff.

On Sunday evening, August 25, Bishop Seaman, assisted by the Rev. A. B. Hanson, dedicated a new brick mission house attached to St. Stephen's Church, at Sweetwater.

Mr. Dalton Moore supervised the erection of this second unit of the St. Stephen's Mission, made possible by an Advance Work gift from the District of Idaho some years ago, supplemented by a like sum raised locally.

SALT LAKE CITY CLASS TRAVELS 2,500 MILES

When Archdeacon Bulkley, of Utah, presented a class of fourteen from three missions outside of Salt Lake City, eight of the candidates came from Kenilworth, a distance of 132 miles, others came from Eureka, 100 miles away, and others from Park City, 32 miles distant. Altogether the fourteen candidates traveled to and from their confirmation more than 2,500 miles.

The service was held in the chapel of the girl's school, Rowland Hall, as it was just after St. Mark's Cathedral had been badly damaged by fire.

St. Mark's was the first church built by Bishop Tuttle, and is the oldest non-Mormon church in the state.

It is hoped that the fire insurance, which covers only a part of the cost, will be supplemented by many gifts to make possible the rebuilding and modernization of the cathedral as a memorial to Bishop Tuttle, the great missionary pioneer.

Bishop Tuttle was sent to Utah in 1867. In this Mormon state there are today more than 2,000 communicants of the Episcopal Church. St. Mark's has a communicant list of 600.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

Prayer for the Missionary District of Alaska.

O God, whose fatherly care reacheth to the uttermost parts of the earth, we humbly beseech Thee graciously to behold and bless all of our missionaries, near and far, especially do we now remember Bishop Rowe and his staff of Alaska. Defend them from all dangers of soul and body; and grant that both they and we, drawing nearer to Thee, may be bound together by Thy love, in the communion of Thy Holy Spirit and in the fellowship of Thy saints; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SIXTY-NINE CHILDREN IN TWO SMALL ROOMS

Puerto Rico School Discharges One Teacher and Closes Two Grades Many Pupils Turned Away.

The New World School, at Manati, Puerto Rico, under the care of the Rev. John Droste, continues to be the only school in the District offering more than the first and second grades provided by the public schools. With sixty-nine children crowded into two small rooms, after turning many away, the school has taught the third, fourth, fifth and seventh grades.

With a little more room and two more teachers, they could continue all the grades from the third to the seventh and still have more children than they could provide for. Instead, the reduced appropriations compel the discharging of one teacher and the closing of two grades.

When Mr. and Mrs. Droste first opened the school, the people could not read or write, and unless the school can be continued it will not be a great while until they will not be able to read their Bibles and Prayer Books.

Last year the farm attached to the school earned nearly $200, which was used for taxes, implements and repairs. This sum, with a contribution from the earnings of the craft shop of St. Andrew's, in Mayaguez, saved the school from closing altogether.

BISHOP BARNWELL PLANS TO LEAVE FOR GEORGIA.

Missionary District of Idaho Loses Two Veteran Archdeacons After Many Years of Service.

Formal action by the Presiding Bishop upon receipt of sufficient consents from the Dioceses to the election of the Rt. Rev. Middleton S. Barnwell, D. D., to be Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Georgia, has been received, and by further action by the Presiding Bishop, Bishop Barnwell is Bishop-in-charge of Idaho until further appointment or election.

Bishop Barnwell plans to leave Idaho for Georgia soon after the fifteenth of September.

The District is hoping to have the vacancy filled at the November meeting of the House of Bishops.

Following the election of Bishop Barnwell to be Bishop Coadjutor of Georgia, Idaho lost by death both of her Archdeacons, the Ven. H. Stoy, who served southern Idaho for more than thirty years, and Ven. M. B. Nash, who served northern Idaho for fifteen years.

These veteran missionaries were greatly belived for their quiet, patient, and effective ministry, by more than two thousand people scattered over an area of nearly eighty-five thousand miles. Their places will be hard to fill.

MEXICAN VILLAGES WANT SERVICE OF THE CHURCH

From Mexico Bishop Salinas reports two eager little groups in distant villages among whom two of his clergy have been working. About fifty people at Tuxpan, and thirty at Iguala, have been receiving instruction and desire to have the Episcopal Church there, but the law forbids public religious services except in a building designated as a church, and the people have no such building.

At Tuxpan the people have purchased a piece of land, and for several months they have been collecting stones and bricks, looking forward to the day when they may be able to build. Even the children are doing their part by bringing in stones balanced on their heads.

A former student at Hooker School, located in Mexico City, and her husband, have been foremost in begging for the Church in Tuxpan, and these two people and their neighbors whom they have inspired are giving liberally of their time and limited income to realize their dream.

Iguala is in an area of 15,000 population, and directly on the road to a famous summer resort. A church in this village would greatly influence the many other villages for many miles around. The Bishop could only promise to get what help he could.

ISLAM, OR MOHAMMEDANISM.

I. Founder, History and Extent.

Islam, the religion of Mohammed, is the greatest rival of Christianity in the world today. A little more than one-eighth of the entire population of the world belong to this faith, and its members are scattered from the Philippines through Asia, northern Africa and eastern Europe, in strength. Furthermore, its missionaries are penetrating central Africa and are even, some of them, found on American soil.

But to begin at the beginning. In 570 Mohammed, the founder of Islam, was born in Mecca in Arabia. A poor boy, he was taken at the age of twelve on a trip into Syria. There he came into touch with a very corrupt form of Christianity and of Judaism. But corrupt as it was, it was so far superior to anything he had ever known at Mecca, that it started him to thinking. The Arabians, up to this time, had had a very benighted form of idol worship. Especially was this so in his native city of Mecca, where a large black meteorite was worshipped as chief idol, and where a number of idols were grouped about it. Mecca was thus the center of religious life as he had known it.

At the age of twenty-five he became camel driver for a rich widow whom he afterwards married. Ten years later he announced that when he had gone into a cave for meditation, the angel Gabriel had appeared to him and told him to preach and had dictated to him what to say. That was the beginning of the Koran or the Bible of Islam. Mohammed said that it was but the copy of the Koran in heaven. At this time Mohammed could neither read nor write, so the words were preserved by his followers and after his death were gathered together and put in the order they are now in, the only general rule of which is that the longer chapters come first and the shorter last. Thus the first revelation given him is numbered Chapter 96, and the last is numbered 9.

He now began to get followers, the first of whom were members of his family. As he preached against idols his fellow-townsmen of Mecca would not listen to him and persecuted him. But the people of Medina, nearby, did listen, so in 622, he fled to Medina. There his followers increased until he returned with an army in 630 and captured Mecca. Eventually all of Arabia was converted and they looked for other worlds to conquer. Northern Africa was quickly conquered and the Straits of Gibraltar crossed, until all of Spain was Moslem and a part of France. So also in eastern Europe Grace and the Balkans fell. The flag of Islam was a crescent and a star on a red background. It swept east until Persia and other countries were conquered and China was invaded. In Europe it was said that the crescent seemed likely to round out into a full moon until all Europe was conquered. But in 690 or 741, Charles Martel, the French general, defeated the Mohammedan forces at the Battle of Tours and Europe was safe for Christianity. After that they were gradually driven out of western Europe until, in 1492, Spain saw the last of them. In eastern Europe the only part left them, today is the city of Constantinople. But in Asia and in Africa they are still strong and fanatically loyal to their prophet.

II. The Religion of Islam.

When we speak of the Heathen it is a mistake to include the Moslem. For Heathen means one who does not believe in the One God, and Mohammed taught, "There is but one God and Mohammed is his prophet." So much he had gotten from his early contact with Christianity and Judaism. His religion was at first a great improvement over anything his people had ever known before. But the purity of his earlier utterances was spoiled by his later teachings, when his revelations excused him and were given as orders for anything he wanted to do.

Thus, he wanted to get followers in a hurry, so he proclaimed that it was God's will that the idolater, even though he were your brother, was doomed unless he gave up his idolatry, and to the believer belonged the goods of the idolater. Furthermore, if a Moslem died in battle he was certain to go to heaven and have plenty of pretty girls to wait on him.

Another example of how he managed to have convenient revelations is the story of how Mohammed fell in love with the wife of his adopted son. But she would have nothing to do with him, so he had a dream that said her husband should divorce her, and that it would be blasphemy for her not to marry the prophet.

On another occasion his favorite wife was put in a very embarassing position that started gossip, so the prophet had a revelation that said she was innocent and it would be an awful sin for anyone ever to even mention the gossip about her.

He gave four great commands to his followers. The first was that they must pray five times a day facing towards Mecca. For this they carry prayer rugs and when the call to prayer comes from the steeple of their mosque or church, every Moslem must fall on his knees and say a short prayer. The second command was that they must give to beggars on a fixed scale, and more if possible. The result of this has been to create a large class of Moslem beggars that live off of society. The third command was that they fast until sunset every day in a certain month, and the fourth command was that at least once in a lifetime one must visit Mecca.

In addition to this they have certain other rules, like going to mosque to hear a sermon every Friday, and drinking no wine. So also it allows the ordinary man to have four wives, and slavery was a part of their religion, for there is a text of the Koran, "If thine enemy will not believe, enslave him."

The chief attributes of Islam may be said to be four: first, its fanaticism, for wherever it has been in control it has usually made it a criminal and capital offense for anyone to leave it for another religion, and indeed they have sanction for this in the Koran, for in the 9th chapter, which was the last that Mohammed wrote, are to be found these words, "Kill the idolaters wheresoever ye shall find them and take them prisoners and besiege them and lay wait for them in every convenient place." Second may be said to be its ferocity, for which they had the example of their prophet, as in the battle in which he killed every man of a tribe that opposed him, 800 in number, and sold the women and children into slavery, dividing the proceeds among his followers. The third attribute of their faith is its wonderful missionary zeal that is chiefly shown today in Africa. For there we are told that every Mohammedan considers himself a missionary whose duty it is to win others to his faith, and when a tribe has been won to Islam there is very little chance of their ever becoming Christian. The fourth characteristic is its fatalism, which can be considered roughly as submission, for their idea is that God the all-merciful has planned everything for the best so that whatever happens must be submitted to without complaint or attempt to change.

Comparison of Islam and Christianity.

When we undertake to compare the two religions of Islam and Christianity we may well do it from three angles or viewpoints: 1. Its preferred method of growth; 2. Its capacity for making people happy; 3. The founders of the religions and their influence on their religion and on world history today.

To take up first, their preferred method of growth. Islam at first chose persuasion, but soon adopted the sword, which its founder preferred. Christianity at first adopted persuasion; during the middle ages, for a time after the death of its founder, it tried the sword in a few cases, but then it came back to persuasion once more, so that persuasion is the preferred method of winning converts to Christ. If, as both religions teach, God is all merciful, which would our reason lead us to believe to be his way, the sword or the pulpit?

Next we come to the capacity of both religions for making its followers happy. There is an old saying that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery. Now Turkey has always been considered the leading Moslem country. But recently it has abandoned practically all the distinctive Moslem customs, such as polygamy, or one man with many wives, the harem, or the women being kept in a separate part of the house and seeing no men but those of their own immediate family. They have copied the European countries in nearly everything, and are even bringing western learning into their schools. The reason is that they see the western way has brought more happiness. They even have now a "Red Crescent Society" to correspond with our Red Cross.

In adition to this, hospitals and universal education, which have been the marks of Christian countries, are being copied by them. So again we ask which seems the truest reflection of the will of God which both religions proclaim in kindness and love towards all mankind?

When we consider the third point of the influence of Mohammed and of Christ on their religions we can sum it up by saying that in Islam its founder said, "Do as I say," but in Christianity its founder says, "Do as I do," or "Follow me." Moreover, if we were to follow Mohammed in his actions as an individual, the moral sense of any civilized country would be so shocked today that we would be soon in the penitentiary. But the whole world proclaims that the reason for all our ills is that we do not follow the Christ.

Thus, then, when we view the two religions side by side, we choose the one that reflects most perfectly God as the God of Love, not only in words but in the life of its Founder.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

PROGRAM OF BISHOP KEMPER CENTENARY.

The principal single event of the celebration is an outdoor service at Nashotah on the afternoon of September 22. This is the Sunday closest to the consecration date of Bishop Kemper and it is hoped that at the morning services in each parish suitable mention will be made of Bishop Kemper and his work.

Library and Arcade, Nashotah.

The committee is very anxious that the celebration of the anniversary of Bishop Kemper's consecration in 1835 shall not cease with the activities of a single day. 1935 is an anniversary year, the anniversary of a tremendous step forward in the missionary policy and life of the Church, particularly in relation to that branch of it situated in the Middle West. Many of our blessings and privileges can be dated from the consecration of Bishop Kemper as the first missionary Bishop of the Church.

Therefore, the committee feels that, as an act of thanksgiving for God's gift of Jackson Kemper, the whole of 1935 should be devoted to a renewal and strengthening of the life of the Church in this Diocese; that special effort should be made to recruit confirmation classes, to increase Church attendance, to enlarge Sunday Schools, to improve the physical property of parishes, to rehabilitate pledges, and to re-invigorate generally the life of the Church in each parish and mission.

The successful culmination of such a plan, the committee feels, would be a fitting and worthy memorial to Jackson Kemper, and would in some measure today be our compliment to the preserverance and zeal he showed a hundred years ago. Jackson Kemper brought new life to the Church in the Middle West. With but part of the devotion he showed, and the help of God, we too can revitalize the Church today.—G. F. White, Chairman, Pro Tem.

Kemper the Founder.

One hundred years ago, Sept. 25, 1835, Jackson Kemper was consecrated a Bishop in the Church of God, and sent out into our part of the country to found Christ's Church. One hundred years is a long time in history in Wisconsin, and now we are preparing to observe the Centenary of Bishop Kemper's Consecration and a century of the Church's work in Wisconsin.

That the Church in Wisconsin is as strong as it is certainly is due to the splendid foundation Bishop Kemper laid, and upon which Bishops Armitage, Wells, Knight, Nicholson and Webb have built the fabric that we now have. That is a list of really great men and in this Centenary we honor them and remember them before God along with our Founder, Bishop Kemper.

But what of our day and generation? When we shall have gone on and a future generation observes some diocesan anniversary, will there be any memorial to us evidenced in the life of the Church?

These are difficult days. Every one of our institutions, Nashotah House, which Kemper founded and loved so well that he made his home nearby, Kemper Hall, founded as a memorial to him, Racine College, throughout the whole Church the outstanding institution of learning and piety of another generation, all are fighting with their backs to the wall for their very existence. Every congregation has such serious problems. But only a few despair. Thank God almost all understand the world's need for us today and in the spirit of Kemper and his illustrous successors we shall put on our strength anew and strive to prove worthy followers of our great forbears. —Benjamin F. P. Ivins, Bishop of Milwaukee.

Bishop Kemper's Consecration.

The consecration of Jackson Kemper as a missionary bishop was a step agreed on at the previous General Convention and this fact gave the event an unusual degree of interest and accounted for the vast congregation that gathered in the beautiful Church of St. Peter, Philadelphia, which was filled to overflowing, September 25, 1835, to witness one of the most notable services in the history of the American Church. Notable, indeed, was the presence at this service as chief consecrator, the aged and venerable Bishop White, the second bishop of the American Episcopate, consecrated Feb. 4, 1787, by the Archbishop of Canterbury. So the Episcopal heritage that came to Wisconsin came from the very head waters of the American Episcopate. Between Bishop White the second Bishop of the American Episcopate, and Bishop Kemper, there had been 30 other Bishops. Kemper was the 31st Bishop of the American Church, and he was consecrated by the second Bishop in this illustrious line. An eye witness of the Consecration of Bishop Kemper thus describes the Apostolic White: "With hoary head, to him a crown of glory, he advanced with tottering step, leaning on the venerable Moors whose silvery locks flowed in graceful profusion down his shoulders. O what calmness and solemnity, what meekness and heavenly mindedness beamed from their countenances and as my eyes were riveted on that man of God, who half a century before was himself consecrated to the Apostolic office by the Metropolitan of Canterbury, I was reminded of the Beloved Apostle St. John, about the same age and being unable to speak much in public used to deliver his oft repeated charge: "Little Children, Love One Another."

Kemper's Missionary Platform.

Following his consecration a great mass meeting was held in the Church of the Ascension, Philadelphia, October 25, 1835, on the eve of his departure for the Western field. Hundreds were turned away unable to gain admission. Nothing like it had ever been witnessed before. Enthusiasm reached its climax when Bishop Kemper arose to speak these parting words: "I have obeyed the command of the Divine Master communicated to me through the instrumentality of His Church, and having been commissioned, I expect to start tomorrow morning to exercise pastoral functions as a Missionary Bishop in Missouri and Indiana. Though I make sacrifices and shall exchange comparative ease and comfort for a life of toil and peril, yet the danger and sacrifices are not greater than hundreds are ready to encounter for wealth. I can promise nothing, yet I know the work is great and holy, and being of divine appointment, I look with humble confidence for a blessing upon the labors which we shall be enabled, through the gracious influence of the Holy Spirit to perform. He who has called me will go with me and I will go cheerfully." This statement has in it all the expression that marks one of the greatest souls of the Church. How fortunate was the Church in Wisconsin, in securing for its founder such a saint, scholar and statesman!

Kemper's Missionary Diocese.

This was a territory including the now states of Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri and the country west of the Missouri river. In terms of area, it was 350,000 square miles.

KEMPER HALL.

Wisconsin alone was 56,000 square miles and is now administered under three Dioceses, each with a Bishop. We hear about the horse and buggy days, but when Kemper began his work not many enjoyed the luxury of a horse and buggy. It was preeminently the day of the horse, and it was either by long rides on horseback or by river boat that the great Bishop travelled. In the 35 years of his episcopate he never saw a Pullman car. Like St. Paul he was not weary to measure kingdoms with his feeble step. He had received his commission to go and plant the standards of the Church in this great Northwest territory, and naught could thwart him in his purpose.

Kemper the Man.

When God picks a man to do a great work he usually picks one of herculean mold. Kemper, who was called to a task calling for great physical reserves, was such a man. The writer knows nothing of the physical lineaments of the first Bishop of Wisconsin, but a glance at his face as shown in his pictures indicates that the body that bore that noble head was so constructed and so trained and controlled that it was prepared to endure hardships and privations in the wilderness he was to traverse and subdue. If heart and brain are to do their best work the body must furnish the energy. There is no doubt Bishop Kemper had a splendid body.

Kemper, Our First Bishop.

On the 24 of June, 1847, the clergy and laity of Wisconsin met in St. Paul's Church, Milwaukee, to organize a Diocese. This was done and after adopting a constitution and canons, the 23 clergy and 35 lay deputies unanimously elected Bishop Kemper as Bishop of the Diocese. He accepted the election, but continued as Missionary Bishop until 1859. What was known as the Diocese of Wisconsin at that time has since divided into three Dioceses, known as the Diocese of Milwaukee, organized in 1847, the Diocese of Fond du Lac, organized in 1875, and the Diocese of Eau Claire, organized in 1928. Four Oneida Indians participated in the election of Bishop Kemper.

Bishop Kemper and Nashotah.

This is a story unique in the annals of the Church and cannot be adequately told in the space available. Bishop Kemper, alive to the needs of the people in the vast empire, in his visits to the East, constantly dwelt on the need of clergy, and especially did he urge the students of the General Theological Seminary in New York to offer themselves for the work in the far West. Eight young men were moved to offer themselves for this work, and by the wise counsel of Bishop Kemper it was determined to make the then territory of Wisconsin the field of their labors. Three notable young deacons, whose names are still household words, Hobart, Adams and Breck, came out to Wisconsin, and settled at Prairieville in a log cabin. This was the beginning of that community life of Kemper's helpers that resulted in the establishment of the seminary at Nashotah. Out of the labors of these men was founded Churches at Racine, Kenosha, Elkhorn, Delavan, Waukesha and Portage City and a score of other places Parishes were established. These men received a stipend of $250.00 each. In 1842 Hobart went East and secured funds to purchase a site for their new home, now that Prairieville had become too cramped. 450 acres of as fine land as can be found in Wisconsin was purchased, the present Nashotah site, and in the early part of August, 1842, the work of Nashotah proper was begun. Bishop Kemper placed Mr. Breck in charge of the Nashotah Mission. Three young men joined the mission to prepare for the Holy Ministry and the work of Theological education was begun.

A GOOD SUMMER.

Collections for July and August amounted to $143,174 as compared with $88,798 in the same period last year. This indicates attention to duty on the part of parochial and diocesan treasurers and the thanks of the Council are extended to them.

The total receipts to date are $82,819 more than for the same period last year. A part of the increase is due to larger "expectations" for the year 1935, but the percentage of collections on the amount due on "expectations" to September 1, 1935, is 90 per cent as compared with 86 per cent last year.

Thirty-five dioceses and districts are in the 100 per cent class. The District of Cuba has already paid more than its total "expectation" for the year, and several other dioceses and missionary districts have approached so close to the total "expectation" of the year that we are hopeful that many of them will be able to make substantial over-payments. It should not be necessary for me to emphasize how helpful such over-payments will be in these difficult times.

The new plan adopted by General Convention whereby mathematical quotas were abandoned, and the "objective" of each diocese was reached by agreement between the diocese and the National Council, places upon each diocese an even greater responsibility than heretofore for the support of the missionary program of the Church You no longer have a quota imposed upon you, and in its place you assumed after consultation with the Council, a voluntary "objective". Later in the year you advised us what your "expectation" on this "objective" would be. If, in the early part of the year, you reported this "expectation" at a figure which you can now exceed, we know that you will be glad to make this extra contribution.

As usual, we made another trip to the bank on the first of September, but we hope that further borrowings can be avoided. This depends on the remittances in the coming months.

With thanks for your cooperation, I am

Faithfully yours,
Lewis B. Franklin,
Treasurer.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S VOICE.

It is interesting to hear that what is believed to be the only gramophone record—it is of the old phonograph cylinder type—ever made by Queen Victoria has been discovered in the archives of the Edison Bell Company in London. It contains a message of good will from her to the then Emperor of Abyssinia.

Experts are now trying to restore it, so that her voice may be heard as clearly as when the record was made fifty years ago.

AN APPEAL FOR PRAYERS.

An appeal for prayers for international justice and the preservation of peace in all places of worship of Catholics, Jews and Protestants throughout the country in their services on Saturday and Sunday, September 21 and 22, has been issued by the American Committee on the Ethiopian Crisis.

"In view of the undiminished threat of a war of conquest and exploitation in Ethiopia and of resultant international and racial tension, we believe that unitedly Divine aid should be sought," said Emory Ross, executive secretary of the committee. Everywhere those peoples whose countries have in past years been carved up between the great powers are watching the Christian nations and asking if they can prevent this latest effort to use brutal force to seize the territory of a weaker people.

"The committee hopes that this call will bring to the mind of Christians everywhere that the nations have renounced war as an instrument of national policy," continued Mr. Ross. "The response to this appeal for earnest prayer for justice and peace will help our nation reaffirm its stand and will invoke Divine aid in the effort to secure our world against the horrors and chaos threatened and against a terrible injustice to a land that has a certain right to call itself the oldest Christian nation."

The American Committee on the Ethiopian Crisis, whose offices are at 8 West Fortieth Street, New York City, is an inter-racial, inter-faith organization. Its purposes are: (a) To aid in maintaining peace in the present tense situation between Italy and Ethiopia; (b) to aid Ethiopia by peaceful means in preserving her historic political and territorial sovereignty; (c) to maintain close relations with the Imperial Ethiopian Government, and insofar as may be mutually desired to act unofficially between its representatives and interested groups outside Ethiopia. The plan of organization includes (a) an Executive Committee of about twenty-five members; (b) a National Committee of about one hundred and fifty members; (c) general membership of all contributors.

NEW JERSEY

Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D. Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. W. Knight, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor.

Corner Stone of New Cathedral to Be Laid on October 5.

In the presence of distinguished guests, the corner stone of the new million-dollar Trinity Cathedral of the Diocese of New Jersey, will be laid in Trenton Saturday morning, October 5. The Cathedral that is to replace the present downtown one, now too small and inconveniently located on Academy Street, will be erected on a large tract of land belonging to the Diocese. The plot has a 400 foot frontage on West State Street, the same on Berkeley Avenue and 300 feet on South Overbrook Avenue.

The Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, Bishop of the Diocese, is honorary chairman of the general committee arranging the impressive ceremonies. He will be assisted by the Rt. Rev. Albion W. Knight, Bishop Coadjutor, Canon Frederick B. Halsey, of Trinity Cathedral and the Rev. Robert B. Gribbon, of All Saints Church; Ferdinand W. Roebling, Jr., of Trenton, donor of the new Synod Hall and the Cathedral crypt, D. Parry Forst and B. F. A. Walton, both of Trenton, representing the Cathedral Chapter; Frederic M. P. Pearse, of Metuchen, Chancellor of the Diocese, Joseph Walton, of Moorestown, former Judge C. McK. Whittemore, of Elizabeth, Jay V. Tomlinson, of Bordentown, Robert C. Maxwell, of Princeton, Catesby L. Jones, of Bernardsville, Samuel Mountford, of Trenton, Darius Burton, of Asbury Park, Alexander F. Rand, of Camden, Hughes Stewart, of Trenton, C. R. Hoe, of Cranford, Major C. M. Duncan, of Freehold, M. C. Fawcett, of Plainfield, representing the Diocese. Mr. Jones is also chairman of the committee to plan for the organization of the "Cathedral Builders of New Jersey," a permanent organization to insure the future of the Cathedral.

Early in July construction was begun on the Cathedral crypt which, it is expected, will be completed by Christmas. Plans for this and the Cathedral itself have been drawn by the Percy L. Fowler Company, of Trenton. The crypt will be mostly underground, located directly beneath the sanctuary, chancel, transepte and part of the nave of the cathedral. It will be Norman in character, with massive pillars supporting the arcades. There will be a vaulted masonry ceiling.

The Cathedral will be Gothic in style, stone inside and out. It will be cruciform in shape, having north and south transepts, north and south aisles and an ambulatory surrounding the sanctuary. This will connect with the two chapels projecting from the chancel end of the Cathedral on the State Street side, and also with the present All Saints Church that is to become the Lady Chapel.

Over the intersection of the transepts and nave which forms the crossing will rise a tall tower. At the west end of the Cathedral will be the northex, with gallery above. Breaking out from the north aisle toward the west end of the structure will be the north porch, one of the main entrances to the edifice. Directly opposite, from the south aisle, will be a beautiful stone vaulted octagonal baptistry.

Leading from the south ambulatory and connecting with the Synod Hall will be the cloister which is to give access to vesting rooms, choir rooms, the Chapter House and the new Diocesan House that is to face on Berkeley Avenue. The plans call for retention of the present Bishop's Garden, facing South Overbrook Avenue. When enlarged, according to present plans, it will form a garden setting for the Chapter House and Synod Hall. Gardens will likewise be laid out on the westerly side of the cloister between the Cathedral and the Diocesan House. Adjioning the garden there is to be a large parking space that will open onto a new street across the westerly end of the Cathedral grounds, extending from West State Street to Berkeley Avenue.

MINNESOTA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. McElwain, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. S. E. Keeler, D. D. Coadjutor

Province of Northwest Meets in Synod.

The Synod of the Province of the Northwest, of which Minnesota is a part, will convene in Gethsemane Cathedral, Fargo, North Dakota, September 24, 25 and 26, with national, provinciai and diocesan leaders on the three-day program. All general sessions will be held in the Cathedral with the Woman's Auxiliary meeting in the First Congregational Church just two blocks distant. All meetings will be open to the public. The usual registration fee of $2 is asked of each visitor or delegate. The sessions will be full of inspiration and Minnesota Churchmen are urged to take advantage of this opportunity in the Synod meeting so near to our own Diocese. The Rt. Rev. Frederick B. Bartlett, D. D., Bishop of North Dakota; the Very Rev. John Richardson, dean of the Cathedral; and the Rt. Rev. Fred T. Ingley, D. D., president of the Synod, assure a hearty welcome and cordial hospitality to all who attend.

Delegates to the Synod from the Diocese of Minnesota as elected at the Diocesan Convention are the Rev. Messrs. Gesner, Atwill, Tyner, Knickerbocker, Ward and Bailie, and Messrs. Lester Bigelow, G. A. N. King and C. J. Gutgesell, Minneapolis; Milton Lightner, St. Paul; Harry C. Cook, Red Wing, and W. H. Chard, Willmar.

Auxiliary Also Meets.

Mrs. David R. West, Minneapolis, diocesan president of the Woman's Auxiliary ,will head the delegation of women to the Synod of the Province of the Northwest, meeting in Fargo, North Dakota, September 25, 26 and 27. Other delegates are Mrs. F. L. Metcalf, St. Paul, and Miss Margaret Densmore, Red Wing. All women interested are invited to attend the sessions as visitors.

Important Announcements.

St. Mark's Parish, Minneapolis, makes two important advance announcements. The first is in regards to the twenty-fifth anniversary service and dinner to be held on Sunday and Monday, September 29 and 30. It is anticipated that Bishop James E. Freeman, D. D., Dr. Harry P. Nichols, and Dr. Phillips E. Osgood, as well as Bishop McElwain and Bishop Keeler, will be present for this noteworthy celebration. All former parishioners and friends of St. Mark's are requested to keep these dates in mind and plan to attend the services.

The second announcement is made by the women of St. Mark's, who have recently combined in one great Woman's Auxiliary. For the first meeting of this organization on October 23, the women are bringing to Minneapolis and to the parish Mrs. Harper Sibley, of Rochester, New York. Mrs. Sibley, a devoted Church woman ,was a member of the Commission on Rethinking Missions and as a result of her first hand knowledge of missions, is unusually well qualified to present a practical challenge to the women of St. Mark's. More detailed information regarding this particular meeting will appear later.—The Minnesota Missionary.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop

Bishop McCormick Asks for an Assistant.

Acting under the urgent orders of his physicians, the Rt. Rev. John N. McCormick, D. D., has asked for sssistance in administering the Diocese of Western Michigan, and has requested that consent be given to the election of a Bishop Coadjutor to whom the active operation of the diocese may be committed. At a joint meeting of the Standing Committee and the Executive Council of the Diocese, unanimous consent to his request was given. This action will be followed by a formal call for the election of a Bishop Coadjutor at the regular annual Convention of the Diocese on January 15 and 16, 1936. Meanwhile Bishop McCormick will continue his administrative duties and will meet engagements so far as his health may permit.

Bishop McCormick is in the seventy-third year of his age and is completing the thirtieth year of his episcopate. He was elected in December, 1905, as Coadjutor to the late Bishop George D. Gillespie and was consecrated on February 14, 1906, in St. Mark's Church, Grand Rapids. At the time of his election he was rector of St. Mark's Parish and President of the Standing Committee of the Diocese.

The Bishop's hope is to continue in office with the assistance of a Coadjutor and under the limitations imposed by his health until the next General Convention of the Church in 1937, when he contemplates complete retirement, but he will resign at an earlier date, should his health seem to require it.

Bishop McCormick's life has been filled to the brim with active service, not only to the Church, but also to the community in which he lives, the state and the nation. His field of endeavor has covered two continents. Outstanding in his record was his war service, in which he was credited with the organization of the chaplain service in the American Expeditionary Forces.

Born in Richmond, Virginia, February 1, 1863, Bishop McCormick attended Randolph-Macon College and was graduated from the theological course in 1883. The following year he was ordained a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In 1886, however, he took up graduate work in Johns Hopkins University, serving several pastorates meanwhile. He was ordained deacon in 1893 and priest in 1894 by Bishop Randolph, and served as minister in charge and rector of St. Paul's Church, Suffolk, Virginia, from 1893 to 1895. The next three years were spent at St. Luke's Church, Atlanta, Georgia, and in 1898 he became rector of St. Mark's Church, Grand Rapids, Michigan, serving that parish until his election as Coadjutor in 1906. While rector of St. Mark's, he served in many civic capacities, being named a member of the original planning commission and the morals and efficiency commission. In 1908 he was named by Governor Chase S. Osborn as a member of the State Board of Corrections and Charities on which he served until 1920, when this board was abolished.

Bishop McCormick first went overseas in the World War in October, 1917, to take charge of the War Commission work of the Episcopal Church. At the request of General Pershing ,he affiliated with the Red Cross and was placed in charge of all chaplains in the hospital service. He worked with the late Bishop Charles H. Brent, of Western New York, to organize a definite chaplain's service. Returning to his diocese in July, 1918, he remained only a short time before returning to Europe to serve with the first and second divisions of the Army of Occupation. After the war he continued to hold the rank of lieutenant colonel in the organized reserves until his retirement in 1927. Two sons of Bishop McCormick served in the war, one in the navy and the other as a chaplain with the Fifteenth Field Artillery, the latter losing his life in action.

In 1923 he was appointed Bishop in charge of American churches in Europe and in this capacity visited all Episcopal churches on the continent.

While engaged in his church duties, he still found time for authorship, some of his books being, "Distinctive Marks of the Episcopal Church," "The Litany and the Life," "Pain and Sympathy," "Good News from a Far Country," and other works. Only recently he penned an autobiographical volume, "A Small Part." He also contributed widely to church publications and other periodicals.

He has worked to bring about a closer relationship between the Episcopal Church and other religious bodies, extending his efforts to the Greek Orthodox Church on a visit to the Near East in 1925.

Margaret Sanger Invited to All-India Conference.

Margaret Sanger, widely known Churchwoman and founder of the birth control movement, with headquarters in Washington, has been invited to the All-India Women's Conference in Travancore, India, in December and to present the subject of birth control. In part, the official invitation says, "It is strange that your country which boasts of being more advanced than the rest of the world should still hang on to the puritanical ideas of its Pilgrim Fathers. The All-India Conference should express its sympathy and lend full support to the women of America in their efforts to change their law about birth control information." This conference represents over 122,000,000 Indian women.

Robert Barrow New Organist at National Cathedral.

Robert G. Barrow, a native Washingtonian, honor graduate of St. Alban's School for Boys, and a pupil of the late Edgar Priest, organist and choirmaster of the National Cathedral, has just taken up his duties as successor to Mr. Priest. He was a former crucifer at the Cathedral and has recently returned from England where he studied under the Ditson Fellowship, at Westminister Abbey.

Mass Meeting Called.

Under the auspices of the Committee on Religious Life in the Nation's Capital, a mass meeting has been called for October 2, in Washington, with Jewish, Catholic and Protestant speakers. The committee is making an effort to get in touch with all newcomers and to put them in touch with churches and synagogues of their own choice. The Bishop of Washington has expressed the opinion that this movement is one of the most significant religious efforts ever launched in the city.

Recenty the annual pilgrimage to Washington Cathedral of the California State Society in the District of Columbia, was made under the general direction of Mrs. Gertrude Scott, one of the officers of this society.

Swedish Episcopal Congregation Moves.

On October 1, Trinity Parish, New York, and more particularly Trinity Chapel on West 25th Street, becomes the home of the Swedish congregation which for nearly fifty years has worshipped at St. Bartholomew's Church. The Rev. Eric G. Ericson, their pastor, is transferred from the staff of St. Bartholomew's to the staff of Trinity Parish.

Even in New York city few Church people realize that the Episcopal Church has a strong and loyal group of Swedish communicants for whom services are regularly held in the Swedish language. To the older people the familiar language is a comfort. The younger ones, if they prefer, become an integral part of the English-speaking congregation and all of them, young and old, unite in the regular early Eucharists of the parish. Mr. Gustav V. Lindgren is to be organist and choir director of the Swedish services at Trinity Chapel. He is one of the most gifted Swedish-American musicians, a graduate of the Royal Academy of Music in Stockholm, and he has at his rdsposal rich resources in Swedish church music, both modern and medieval.

The Rev. Mr. Ericson has been in charge of this congregation for the past eighteen years. His quiet work with individuals and families has reached out in widening circles until at least two thousand Swedish families know him as a friend of great charm and dignity and regard him as their Pastor for all the Church's ministrations. Many of his people live at a distance from New York city but through their contact with him they, and others who move away into other parts of the country, turn naturally to the Episcopal Church and bring up their children in Episcopal Church schools.

Mr. Ericson was born in Stockholm and came to America at the age of fifteen, to live in Providence, R. I. On his first Sunday in Providence he attended service in the Swedish Church which the late Bishop David H. Greer had founded, and feeling much at home in the beautiful services, he entered at once into the life of the church. At the age of seventeen he decided to study for the ministry of the Episcopal Church, and after attending St. Stephen's College and the Seabury Divinity School, he was ordained deacon on May 28, 1911, in St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, and priest on June 6, 1912, in Emmanuel Church, Lichfield, Minn. After parish work in Minnesota, he came to St. Bartholomew's in May, 1917.

By individual letters and by notices in the Swedish press, the members of the congregation are being notified of their change of parish. They are a widely scattered group as New York has no "Swedish colony." The Swedish work at Trinity Chapel will be formally inaugurated on Sunday night, November 3, with a festival service commemorating the great Swedish king and defender of the faith, Gustavus Adolphus.

Pastor Ericson's work has a definite missionary basis. There are thousands of Swedish people in and around greater New York who are no longer in touch with any church, to whom the Episcopal Church can make a particularly strong appeal. With the continued approval of the Bishop of the Diocese and the friendly co-operation of Trinity Parish and Trinity Chapel, a work of great value to the Swedish people and to the Church will be continued and strengthened. The nearest other Swedish Episcopal Churches are in Providence and Boston.

The Vicar of Trinity Chapel is the Rev. Dr. J. Wilson Sutton; he is also bishop-elect of Vermont but has not yet announced his decision regarding that election.

Swedish services began under Dr. Greer at St. Bartholomew's in 1889. A young Swedish clergyman was appointed pastor, now known throughout the Church as the Rev. Dr. Johan Gottfried Hammarskold, retired after many years distnguished service. After three years at St. Bartholomew's he was succeeded by the Rev. Hugo Holmgren who was there for twenty-five years, until Mr. Ericson came.

Fine Summer Work at Splashdam.

One of the most interesting places where work is being done in the diocese is the Mission of the Good Shepherd at Splashdam. This is a coal mining camp in Dickenson county in the southwestern part of the State, not far from the Kentucky line. In the early period of its development the camp was practically inaccessible except by the railroad to the mine, there being practically no public highway into the camp for a considerable period.

The missionary in charge is Miss Florence F. Pickard, and during the summer just ended she had the assistance of Miss Gertrude Clark, Miss Mary Averill and Mr. George F. Packard, a student at Virginia Seminary. One of

FIRST THE TRUE.

'Tis first the true, and then the beautiful,
Not first the beautiful, and then the true;
First the wild wood, with rock and fen and pool,
Then the gay garden, rich in scent and hue.

'Tis first the good, and then the beautiful,
Not first the beautiful, and then the good:
First the rough seed, sown in the rougher soil,
Then the flower blossoms or the branching wood.

We Would See Jesus.

The proud leaders of cultured Greece would have wondered why "certain Greeks" would desire to "see Jesus." Didn't Greece offer anything and everything that any man might desire? No other nation was so intellectual, none so cultured, none so rich in philosophical lore, aesthetic values, and literary excellence. Their systems of philosophy were well night perfect, their language. art and architecture, beautiful beyond compare, and their poetry the despair of competing nations. Any man must have been singularly unreasonable to crave spiritual satisfaction from any foreign source, when Greece was so plentifully supplied with temples of worship, with gods galore, and with ethical teachings of the wisest men of all the ages.

And yet these particular Greeks "would see Jesus." Why this strange request? There are two answers: First, they had lost faith in the reality and efficacy of the gods and religions of Greece. And second, they were irresistably drawn by the appeal and fame of Jesus. They had evidently heard of the wonderful words of the Great Teacher of Israel, of the matchless charm of His personality, of the mighty works that He had wrought in the land, of the beauty and splendor of His character.

When they were led to Jesus they must have been surprised to find One so far above everything that cultured Greece had been able to produce, for here was a Teacher who "spake as never man spake," here was a Leader who led as never man led, here was a Character more beautiful than the eyes of man had looked upon, here was an influence more gracious than any that had ever swayed the hearts of men. These Greeks with their insatiable thirst for the new, the strange and the beautiful, with their proverbial intellectual hospitality and their passionate devotion to any fresh manifestation of the eternal principle of beauty, must have been profoundly stirred in spirit when they stood in the presence of Him in whose personality was embodied all the grandeur that was Rome, all the glory that was Greece, all the truth that was Israel, and all the beauty that was heaven. "Sirs, we would see Jesus." Wise Greeks, wise above their fellows!

Future of the Church.

I believe it is true to say that the future of the Christian Church depends on its ability to relate its message to the needs of the present and to speak and act decisively and unitedly at a time when the hearts of so many good people are failing them for fear and when there is no one conviction, no one faith on which they can lay hold, or by which they can set the compass of their lives.

And we would agree, I'm sure, that more is required of the Church in this way than just the relief work, the rescue work—helping ill and needy people, supporting institutions, relieving the unemployed, etc.—work in which she already has a very honourable record. But applied Christianity means more than that. People have a right to say that a "practical Christianity" which never gets beyond ambulance work is not "practical" enough. There is a sense in which the Priest and the Levite still pass by on the other side if they can only offer temporary relief and no real remedy. It is true that Christ gave Himself to rescue those who had become outcasts or casualties in an evil society. But He also proclaimed the coming of a new kingdom, in which the power of God was available to end the wrongs of an evil society altogether. It is largely because of a growing doubt in people's minds whether Christ through His Church can really substantiate that second claim—to remake society altogether—a doubt whether Christianity is a force capable of making a new world order, that you now get proclaimed openly and brazenly—what has for the last 400 years been spreading secretly—the sovereignty of Caesar over the sovereignty of God. And we must realize that there are millions today—almost whole nations—who feel that when it comes to remodelling society Caesar is making a better job than ever God has shown signs of doing, and that Caesar therefore deserves from them a more thoroughgoing and sacrificial allegiance than many of us have ever given to God.—Rev. Alan Thornhill, in a Sermon preached in Hertford College Chapel, Oxford.

Being A Finisher.

There is no surer rule for success in life than to resolve to finish everything one begins. The task may be small, inconsequential, and the result hardly worth the labor. Yet the mere fact that it possessed enough merit to warrant starting proves that it is worth finishing.

Finishing a job that has been begun, no matter how distasteful it may seem, is a trait of character which, incorporated in our make-up, will save many of us future disappointments.

All of us are familiar with the pitiful plight of the person who can never finish anything. Halfway through high school he lets his laziness conquer him, and quits to seek a job. He finally manages to secure a position as a clerk in a grocery store, grows tired of that after awhile, quarrels with his employer and leaves there also. Then he tries business college, so he can get a job in an office—which to him means little to do and plenty of ease. But in business college he gets mired down in the shorthand course, struggles for a while, but finds it easier to drop it than to stick to it. On through life he goes like that, unreliable, untrusted and wondering why he is getting nowhere.

Oftentimes the tragedy of such a person's life lies in the fact that had he combatted that first urge to quit—possibly that urge that led him to leave high school unfinished—his course of life might have been shaped entirely differently. The loss of this first battle with himself, all unknown to him, undermined his self-confidence and weakened his resistance. Had he instead completed high school, future temptations to leave work half undone would have been much easier overcome. He would have said to himself: "Well, I stuck it out once, and I can see this through to the end, too, if I make up my mind to do it."

There are times when all of us feel like giving up in the midst of some disheartening, difficult task. By remembering that the completion of each unpleasant task gives us added strength for meeting future ordeals, most of us can make our lives a great deal happier.

The Child's Reading.

This time I was determined. The ever recurring sight of my eldest boy reading Wild West stories kept a previous failure constantly before me. And I had been so careful to keep him supplied with the very best literature. Never will I forget the chagrin upon finding the first "blood and thunder" magazine. It had made its appearance surreptitiously, and I was really alarmed. My boy, I thought, must have inherited a wild streak. I wanted so much to see my children read wholesome literature that the incident grieved and perplexed me. How, I wondered, could he care for such trash when his reading had always been so carefully supervised?

My youngest boy, Willis, was just now pleading for a book that should be all his own. The question in my mind was how to instill in him a desire for only the best. I could not readily admit that the fault was really mine with regard to the other boy. Surely, I had done everything that a mother could. However, I did finally visit the children's department of our library.

What I found there was a revelation. I found children who not only read what was best for them, but who were eager to do so. It was vacation time and Miss Edwards had organized a vacation reading club. The scene was so interesting, so instructive, that I remained most of the afternoon.

Miss Edwards knew her children. "Hello, Henry, are you a member of our club yet? The new number of 'Popular Mechanics' has come. Well! Here is Alice. She devours history. I promised her this Knickerbocker's History of New York. Don't take it too seriously, Alice!"

The surprising thing was, Miss Edwards guided each reader's choice without coercion; she never attempted to forbid, merely suggested. "Johnny," she said, "this makes the third adventure story you have chosen. Adventure stories are delightful, but we like you to read at least one of every type so you'll be able to tell which you really like best. You look over these books—I can recommend any of them —and if you don't find one you like, I'll give you another adventure story."

Miss Edwards seemed to be so competent I could not resist asking her advice.

"I fear your mistake was," she said smilingly, "you made too much of an issue of the matter This only increased your boy's curiosity to partake of the forbidden fruit. Then, too," she continued, "there is no harm in adventure stories so long as they are wholesome. In fact, it is as natural for boys to like them as it is for a duck to swim. The boy sees in the adventure some hero, someone to emulate. If this brave hero fights for truth and honor, the boy reader will not be misled. It is far better for parents to supply the boy with the proper adventure stories than to have him seek them elsewhere."

Miss Edwards was right. I had caused my boy to seek his reading away from home. By allowing him some choice in the matter I could still have been his guide. Perhaps it was not yet too late.

"Yes," continued Miss Edwards, "I learn here that parents often choose books for themselves rather than for their children. Scarcely any two children are alike; where one has a literary bent and can digest heavy reading, a sister or brother may be able to appreciate only the very lightest. Our method is to have only good books, then to give the child freedom in his selection."

My second son was taken to the library as soon as he could sign his name. He is fond of reading, and has given me no trouble with regard to his selection of books.

Since I first asked my eldest son to read aloud to me, and tried to enjoy his book with him, he has been more careful in his selections and has come increasingly critical! But—lost years don't return.—Mrs. D. W. Hinds, in Nat. Kindergarten Asso. Release.

Man's Need and God's Love.

Your car breaks down on the road, and in spite of all your fuss and fury it refuses to budge until its needs are attended to. Drive a car long enough and you will be surprised at the variety of ways in which it can declare its needs.

It is not otherwise with human beings. The body operates like a machine, the most intricate of all machines, and demands constant care. Nature intended to give it a good beginning and she provides for its wants in no niggardly fashion. Man interferes with this process with the result that the wreckage of human bodies is a sad commentary on man's frailty. Hospitals and asylums appeal to your pity.

We do not go far until we discover that man's need influences his whole environment. He lives in an economic system that is supposed to care for his necessities. It is all based on a system of exchange—so much service, so much remuneration. The idea is good, but the people themselves desire the things that are not for their highest good very often, and on the other hand, greed, dishonesty, treachery and selfishness interrupt the process, leaving a trail of misery across the world.

Man's need, then, goes deeper. Ignorance calls aloud for his attention, and his answer is in the school and college. Human beings must learn to think, think for themselves about the right things, but even his learning fails to keep him out of gaol. Crime becomes more clever, science becoming the slave of the gangster. Education is handicapped in its contribution to human well being.

Man, we remember then, is a social animal as Aristotle said. He must learn to blend his life with the hopes and struggles of others in the interests of a higher life. Multitudes are doing this very thing supported by an enlightened philosophy that treats society as an organism, every little part being vital to the welfare of the whole. But again there is something lacking The human heart is selfish, self centered, and self righteous. Co-operation is still a pipe dream.

We are told that man only lacks perspective. He must see the great family of which he forms a part, in all its world wide significance, grasping the underlying interdependence and the necessity for brotherhood. The ideal is very real and within our reach, but again there is a deplorable lack of willingness to attain the goal. Why? The trouble lies in the human heart. Hate, jealousy, cruelty, distrust, arrogance are forces of destruction beyond man's power to control. Great literature writes its shameful record age by age.

Deeper still we must travel then. Man's need is ultimately spiritual. It is within himself. The individual must be made over if civilization is to progress to its goal. "Create in me a clean heart and renew a right spirit within me," said the Psalmist, and he was right. Here we come to the point at which religion speaks. Man is the work of God, and he can only be right when he is right with God.

Science, education, law, industry, are powerful factors for good or evil, but only the wisdom of God can enable man to utilize them for the ends for which they were intended.—Robt. McGowan.

The Religion of Browning.

On a lovely June evening in Florence, Nathaniel Hawthorne and William Cullen Bryant visited the Brownings. They sat out on the pretty Italian balcony eating strawberries and cake and talking on God, the Bible, books and spiritualism. (How I should like to have been with them then!) Hawthorne and Bryant were charmed with the wonderful gentleness, sweetness and brilliancy of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, and by the vivacity and comraderie and conversational powers of Robert Browning. Hawthorne said Browning seemed to be in all parts of the room at once, and to leap from one great subject of talk to another, "like a roe or young hart upon the mountains of Bether."

During a brief lull in the wonderful talk Nathaniel Hawthorne asked Browning if he really loved Nature very much.

"Oh yes, I do," said Browning eagerly, "a very great deal; but I love human beings a great deal more." Browning's love for humanity was a love for the individual. In "Sordello," "Songs from Pippa Passes," "Rabi Ben Eyra," "The Lost Leader," "A Grammarian's Funeral," and many other of his poems Browning proves his solemn confession of Faith: "My stress ever lays on the scenes and incidents in the development of a human soul; little else is worth study. I at least always thought so." He was a student, a lover, and a campaigner of human souls. Browning loved society and he loved London with its opportunities to mingle freely with all sorts and conditions of men, study their problems, and seek to gather the sorrows, fears, problems, weaknesses and God-likenesses and salvability of every last man.

Tennyson and Browning were dear and intimate friends. But Tennyson hated society, and even stayed away from the little church in the Isle of Wight for fear of being interviewed. When Mrs. Tennyson chided him for this shyness, and urged him to profit by the cheery example of Browning, he tugged at his beard, and puffed away furiously at his big pipe and replied: "Browning! hah! that chatty fellow will die in a dress-suit."

But while Browning loved nature and man, he loved Christ supremely. He loved Christ even as John loved Him in "Patmos Isle": "I saw, I heard, I knew." And Browning, too, saw with John's eyes, and handled with John's hands, "That which was from the first, the word of life." And like John, too, his soul grew up into Jesus Christ, to match what first he guessed as points (of truth) until at last he came to know them as God's Fixed Stars, and named them in the Gospel that he wrote and which all the Christian world rejoices in more and more.—Charles G. Smith, in Christian Index.

MY PRAYER.

William P. Rockey.

When loneliness is flooding me
With thoughts of loved-ones gone,
O, let me draw my strength from The,
O, help me battle on!

I stumble and I blindly grope
When life is dark and drear;
O, send unto me Light and Hope—
Forgive my doubt and fear!

O, lift my weary heart, so sad—
My courage bowed in care;
O, lift me up and make me glad,
With joy of life to share.

The precepts of Thy holy will,
I'll labor, God, to obey;
Reflect to me Thy love, until
My life will dawn its ray.

I seek Thy help and guidance, Lord,
For faith to walk aright;
O, let me merit Thy reward—
Be pleasing in Thy sight.

Make void my heart of bitter hate,
Transplant Thy tender love;
O, teach me how to emulate
The shining lives above.

When mortal eyes are veiled in sleep—
My task on earth is done,
The vigil, that You helped me keep
With loved ones, will be won.

Had to Depend on the Lord.

A clergyman, having forgotten his notes one Sunday, apologized to his congregation by saying that he would have to depend upon the Lord that morning for what he might say, but in the evening he would come better prepared. This may have been a slip of the tongue, but are there not some who, if they were to speak right out from their inmost souls, would deliberately use the same language?—The Expositor of Holiness.

FOR THE CHILDREN

KEEP ON.

If the road is rough
And the journey steep,
If you find it hard
The pace to keep,
Don't give up.

If you seem to lose,
When you ought to win,
If the feeling comes
That you must give in,
Don't give up.

If all the world
Seems hard, unjust,
Keep close to God
And in Him trust.
Don't give up.

Left Out.

"You won't have very much fun at my house," Elsie informed her cousin, Hilda. "I never do. Everybody leaves me out of everything."

Hilda laughed merrily, and her black eyes sparkled as she tossed her glossy, black curls.

"Oh, I always have fun wherever I am," she said lightly. "What are we going to do this afternoon?"

"Well," Elsie replied doubtfully, her blue eyes clouded, "we could go to the library and get a book, I suppose.'

"But we did that yesterday," Hilda objected. "Besides, you sound terribly bored just saying it. Do you really want to go to the library again, Elsie?"

"'No," Elsie admitted.

Hilda's merry face sobered as she looked at her cousin.

"I declare, Elsie," she said, "you' the strangest girl. What would you like to do this afternoon?"

"Go to the party at Gertrude's," Elsie returned, before she thought. "But we can't do that."

"Well, why not? Isn't it your class party? And don't Sunday School clases always like visitors?"

"Yes, but—"

"But nobody gave you an extra-special invitation, is that it " asked Hilda shrewdly. "Really, Elsie, you must take some things for granted."

"Oh, if you're going to be hateful Elsie began. Then: "How do you think I'll feel walking in there when nobody ever pays the least bit of attention to me, or even wants me around? If they had wanted me to come, somebody would have mentioned it, surely."

"Why don't you try thinking about somebody else besides Elsie Barnes for a change?" Hilda suggested, with the least bit of impatience in her voice "I'm beginning to think you were right when you said I wouldn't have any fun at your house. You're certainly doing your best to keep me from having any."

Elsie's lip trembled, but before the tears could spill over the telephone rang, and she had to answer it. It was only a wrong number, but it gave Hilda an idea.

"Why don't you call Gertrude now and tell her you're bringing me?" Hilda suggester. "We always let the hostess know when there is going to be an extra guest, when we have our class parties."

"I don't—oh, all right," Elsie gave in grudgingly. "You certainly like your own way, Hilda Connors. But I suppose it doesn't matter to you whether I feel like thirty cents or not."

Elsie dialed the number and informed Gertrude that she was bringing a guest. Hilda could hear Gertrude's cordial voice quite plainly, but Elsie's forlorn expression did not change.

"Ask her if she wants us to do anything," Hilda whispered in her ear.

"Well, I hope you're satisfied," Elsie gloomed, after she had done Hilda's bidding and had hung up the receiver. "She says to bring a game. Now what on earth am I going to do? I don't know any games."

"Oh, I know a lovely one," Hilda exclaimed. "It's a written game."

"But everybody brings written games," Elsie objected. "It's about the only kind we seem to know.

"Then let's have a lively one," Hilda suggested. "Let's play 'spin the plate.' You get a heavy pie-plate and spin it in the middle of the floor and call out somebody's name. The girl whose name is called has to catch it before it stops spinning or pay a forfeit. Then she spins the plate and calls out a name, and so on. Let's make the forfeits stunts. Everybody who fails to catch the plate has to do a stunt."

"That sounds like fun," Elsie agreed. "I'm sure they'll like it, after you get it started."

"After you get it started," Hilda corrected. "This is your class party. I'm just company."

Elsie protested, but Hilda was firm. Strangely enough, at the party, she found that Hilda's ready friendliness drew her at once into the heart of the merriment, and Elsie with her. Elsie felt a bit proud as she saw how much the girls liked her lively cousin. "Spinning the plate" proved to be the best game of the afternoon.

"Why didn't you let us know you had such bright ideas before this?" o' of the girls laughingly chided Elsie. "I can guess who's going to be the next chairman of the entertainment committee."

"But Hilda though of it," Elsie said honestly. "I wouldn't be any good at it."

"Nonesense," Hilda said instantly. "Of course you would. I found it in a book myself. It's the way you put over your games that counts."

Elsie walked home beside Hilda in a glow of pleasure.

"Now, do you see what I've been trying to show you?" Hilda asked, softly.

"I believe I do, a little," Elsie admitted. "When you put your mind on helping others to enjoy themselves you forget to wonder if anybody is going to help you have a good time, and you really have more fun in the end."

"That's it," Hilda cried delightedly. "And it's so simple, after all."—Junior World.

A Leaf Tells the Story of Its Life.

I was a small leaf. I had hundreds and millions of brothers and sisters; I had so many that I did not know them all. My mother was a great oak tree. I made my first appearance in March; a thin, transparent veil of green. Every small vein seemed to push outward from my thin body. A tiny straw could have ruined me for life. I could not understand speech at first, but as I grew older, and became stronger, I began to understand mother's whispering language.

When I was very young she sang sweet, caressing melodies as the warm spring wind blew past. I loved the wind; it made its warm-cool flight over the earth, knowing or caring not where it next would travel, because it promised all the same. I loved the sun; I loved to dance and play in the sunlight. I loved to hear my mother whisper and sing to us. She sang and whispered not only to us, but to all the world, and those who cared to listen heard. Later in the summer she became quieter; she told us little or nothing; she seemed to rest and enjoy the peacefulness of the forest. She did not sleep. The sun sent hot rays upon us and scorched our leaves. We turned from a soft green to a dark brownish green. Two birds made their nesting near to the place where I lived. Sometimes I helped to keep the hot rays of the sun from reaching the little birds.

My life was not all happiness. I had many worries and troubles. During the summer a great hailstorm came. For months I thought the wind would carry me from the tree. I fluttered wildly in the terrible storm. Then suddenly a great lump of hail tore through my body. This was my first scar. How I hated it! But after it healed up I was happy again, although now I was afraid of the clouds.

Fall came slowly on. Across the great fields were farmers harvesting their crops. The earth was turning in its color to a soft brown. One cool night mother tree said: "Dear leaves, you're going to be separated from me. Jack Frost will be here tonight. He'll dab your coats up with colors of gold and red and brown paint. The earth will turn white, but this soon will melt and go away. Your coats will never turn back to green. The wind will grow cold; your stems will turn brown and weaken. The north wind will soon call for you, and you must go and follow it. Do not fear or refuse, for if you stay with me you'll not be beautiful and will accomplish nothing."

I wondered what I could accomplish. I immediately made up my mind to go, but you may be sure I hated to leave my mother tree. The next morning I had the most beautiful coat. I thought I was the handsomest of all the leaves. Now I did not even hate that awful scar. I knew the time would soon come when I'd leave. I wondered what I should do when I would reach the earth. The beautiful birds were gone. I was glad because I knew they had gone to warmer regions.

The wind came. It was cold and blew from the North. Mother tree whispered as the wind blew through her branches, "Go, go, go!" I, after some time, went gaily flying into the frosty air. I went high above the trees, twirling about, and fluttering as I went. At last I dropped close at mother tree's side. Many other leaves dropped with me to the ground, and I knew that I had settled where I would probably rest for life.

The days began to get cold and bitter. Mother tree stood bare. For a while she still talked to us, and then, she went to sleep. After a long year of hard work why shouldn't she rest? I could not sleep until a great sheet of snow covered me.

Now I am a different thing. I'll live throughout the ages. My coat has changed, until I am the color of earth. Every year I will watch my mother and listen to her until I am buried under other leaves under the depths of soil. But this makes me happier than all. I help to form the foundation that my great mother oak tree rests upon.

How They Fool You.

You are curled up comfortably beside your loud-speaker, listening to a radio play. During the course of the action you hear all sorts of noises. Sawing wood, doors slamming, crackling fire, rain, dogs barking. How do they do it? Ah, what a question!

To make a radio play seem real various sound-effects must be included during the broadcast. Since it is impossible to start fires, or to saw wood, or to start a rainstorm in the broadcasting studio, some substitute must be devised that will give the desired effect without causing the inconvenience of providing the genuine article. Let's examine some of these devices and see how this trickery is accomplished.

Sawing wood, for instance, is nothing more than a stiff scrubing brush scraped back and forth over a rough board. Crackling fire is stimulated by crumpling a handful of celophane before a microphone, and rain is usually imitated by pouring sand on a crisp head of lettuce. If no lettuce is available, waxed paper will do.

Amusing? Yes, but read on.

If you hear the roar of an airplane's motor over the air, you can rest assured that no airplane is flying around in the studio. It's merely an ordinary vacuum cleaner being driven at various speeds. And the deafening rumble of an elevated train is simulated by the same sweeper, only this time it is run in the bottom of a large galvanized ash-can.

Wind is nothing more than an electric fan with its blades whirring at varied speeds before a microphone. That same fan, with its blades removed, is used to sound like an automobile, starting and stopping, or in motion, depending upon the way it is operated.

When the sound of water is needed, anything but water is used. A waterfall, for instance, is nothing more than a few streamers of tissue paper, shaken back and forth. The more paper the bigger the cataract. The sound of rain against a window-pane is achieved by dropping dried peas on an ordinary window screen, and the dashing of the surf along the sea coast is mimicked by putting the same dried peas on the same window screen and rotating them in a swishing sort of way. A man falling into a puddle of water is merely a large bundle of crumpled newspaper being dropped to the floor.

Suppose you are listening to an exciting play in which a bunch of policemen batter down a heavy door. As you listen, you can almost see the splinters fly, can't you? Well, if you could see that "heavy wooden door" you wouldn't be thrilled and excited. You'd laugh. Why? Because battering down a door consists of no more complicated an operation than stepping on and crushing an ordinary berry basket—the type strawberries come in.

Should you listen to a play in which two characters fight a duel, you will know, hereafter, that the clinking of the swords as they strike each other is nothing more nor less than a pair of common tablespons being tapped together before the microphone. And if somebody speaks over the telephone, that curious, tinny and mechanical tone is achieved not by having somebody actually talk over a telephone, but by having the character hold an ordinary tumbler over his mouth. Speaking into it gives the effect of talking over the telephone.

If somebody eats over the radio, and you hear him, you needn't envy him. He's eating nothing but dried toast, no matter what he says it is. A dish, a spoon and a piece of toast is always used for the effects of eating—and what's more, the craracter who is supposed to do the eating never even tastes the toast. A special "eater" is employed to munch the bread. Why? Because the hard crumbs might cause the regular actor trouble if they stuck in his throat!

If two automobiles run into each other, somebody rams a piece of stove-pipe through a pane of glass. Perhaps the sound effects men may drop a few chairs and other miscellaneous things at the same time, and all in all it will sound exactly like a collision.

The men who invent these curious devices don't have exactly the easiest job in the world, either. Suppose, for instance, that you were asked to supply the noise of a panther creeping through underbrush in the jungles. What would you do? What sort of gadget would you invent?

The head sound-effects man of one of the major broadcasting stations was recently confronted with the problem of presenting just such an effect. He had not the faintest idea what to do for a long time. But when the broadcast went on the air, he was there with the goods. What did he do? He simply took an ordinary household broom up to the microphone and squeezed a handful of the coarse straws. Every time he squeezed the panther took another step.

Simple? Try it yourself sometime. At least try to figure out how the sounds you think you hear are made the next time you listen to a play on the radio. It's going to keep you guessing. —Girls' World.

FIVE WEE SPECKLED EGGS.

Why should I worry about problems today,
Why should I fear only storms from the west,
When I discovered on my kitchen shelf,
Five wee speckled eggs in a little wren's nest?

Why should I grumble when rain's pouring down,
Why should I quarrel at jobs I detest,
For I have a treasure that wealth cannot buy—
Five wee speckled eggs in a little wren's nest.

So give me the country, and I'll be content,
With the feeling that life has offered its best,
For there's joy in the heart, just to have in the house
Five wee speckled eggs in a little wren's nest.

—Mrs. A. B. Brown, in Christian Index.

Interesting Conundrums.

Introduce these at the next party you give, or attend; they'll be pleasantly received:

Why is rain different from Sunday? Because it can fall on any day of the week.

Why is a tight boot like an oak tree? Because it produces a corn (acorn).

Why is an Irish city likely to be the largest in the world? Because it is always Dublin (doubling).

What word of five letters has only one left if you take away two? Stone.

What is it you cannot hold for ten minutes, although it is lighter than a feather? Your breath.

Of what trade is the sun? A tanner.

Why is coffee like a dull knife? It has to be ground.

What happens twice in a moment and not once in a thousand years? The letter M.

How many sides has a tree? Two—inside and outside.

What is the longest word in the English language? Smiles, because there is a mile between the first and last letters.

What plant stands for the number four? IV (ivy).

Why is it easy to get into a bald man's house? Because he has few locks.

Why is it dangerous to sleep on a train? Because it is running over sleepers all the time.

Why is a pig in a parlor like a house on fire? Because the sooner it is out the better.

Why is a blindman's buff like sympathy? It is a fellow feeling for another.

What ships are always within sight? Hardships.

Why are teeth like verbs? Because they are regular, irregular and defective.

When is a merchant above his business? When he lives over his shop.

Why should gloves never be sold? Because they are intended to be kept on hand.

Why is a butcher hard to get along with? He is always cutting up.

Why is a man who keeps a fish store never generous? Because his business makes him sell fish (selfish).

Why may carpenters think there is no such thing as stone? Because they never saw it.

What kind of fruit does the electric plant bear? Curants.—L. E. Eubanks, in The Sentinel.

AUTUMN DAYS.

Maude Forrest Mumma.

The bright Autumn days are coming again,
With fairest of flowers in Autumn's gay skies;
The purples, and golds, the reds and the yellows,
The scarlets, vermillions, the saffrons and blues.

Snapdragons, dahlias, and cosmos galore,
Kind Nature has given a bountiful store;
Chrysanthemums large, chrysanthemums small,
The pompon and dwarf ones, we welcome you all!

The Radiance Rose endures to the last,
O how I shall miss you when Autumn is past!
But Winter will bring its own beauty and joys,
With sleighing and snowballs, with Santa and toys.

A Parable.

A parable tells of seven brothers who lived together. Six worked and the seventh cared for the house, having the meals ready and the house bright for his brothers in the evening. But the six said that the seventh must work, too. So in the evening they returned home and found the house dark and no meal prepared. Then they saw how foolish they had been, and quickly restored the old way. Sunday is a day among the seven which provides light, comfort and good for the others. If it is driven out to work, the other days will miss its blessing.—Selected.

THE COLOR TRUE.

Florence Van Fleet Lyman.

Christ's Mother wore a gown of blue,
Mayhap it was of gentian blue,
That lowly flower fringed of cup
That only to the heaven looks up.

And ever since that long ago
The blue of sky, the sea below,
And blossoms sweet a-blowing blue
Are symbols loved and known as true.

DEATHS

MRS. ELIZA RANDOLPH PALMER.

Died, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. M. Crute, Cumberland County, Virginia, MRS. ELIZA RANDOLPH PALMER, daughter of Captain William A. and Anne Henderson Perkins, and widow of Dr. Charles Palmer, of Ca Ira, aged eighty-four years. She leaves a record of fine courage and unselfish devotion. She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Crute and Mrs. Annie Adams.

MISS MARY E. TODD.

On Saturday morning, August 17, 1935, MARY ELIZA TODD entered into life eternal. She passed away in the old ancestral home of the Todds, "The Hill", Smithfield, Virginia, in which she was born October 19, 1856, and where she had lived her entire life. She was the eldest daughter of the late Everard Moore Todd and Nannie Robinson Southall.

The funeral services were conducted at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, August the 18th, in Christ Church, Smithfield, Virginia, by the Rector, the Rev. William Brayshaw, assisted by the Rev. R. R. Phelps of Linden, Ohio. Burial was in the Todd family lot at the Old Brick Church of Isle of Wight County.

She is survived by three sisters, Mrs. Willis W. Morrison of Pleasant Point, Surrey County, Miss Diana M. Todd and Mrs. Tazewell Spratley of Smithfield.

The strife is o'er, the battle done,
The Victory of Life is won,
The Song of Triumph has begun.
Alleluia.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

the most valuable activities of the mission were the Sunday evening services that Mr. Packard conducted in June and July, and he was most helpful in the Sunday school, especially with his fine influence over the boys in the camp. In August Mr. Packard supplied at other points in the mission field during the vacations of the Rev. Hugh V. Clary, of the Bluefield area, and the Rev. John A. Winslow, of the Dante area.

During a part of the summer Miss Pickard and her assistants conducted a Vacation Bible School at Bartlick, another coal mining camp, about three miles north of Splashdam, where no regular Church work whatever is being carried on. At Splashdam she conducted a Bible School of ten weeks' duration; five for the Primary Department and five for the Junior and Senior Departments ,and in addition to all this she had a Bible School for the colored people in the camp. Miss Pickard feels that these various Bible Schools had a most excellent effect in developing among the people an increase of reverence and devotion as well as better knowledge of the Bible.

At the present time Miss Pickard is enjoying her own vacation at "Camp Fowler", Alden, Michigan. Mr. Packard has returned to his home at Ruxton, Maryland, for a brief rest, after which he will resume his work at Virginia Seminary.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. Henry J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Initiation in the Order, Omicron Delta Epsilon Fraternity.

On Sunday afternoon, September 8, fourteen young people were initiated in the Order of St. Stephen of the Omicron Delta Epsilon Fraternity, Georgia Alpha Chapter, located at St. Luke's Church in Atlanta, this group constituting the charter members of the chapter which was duly instituted by the rite of The Pledge of the Cup on Sunday, September 15.

Omicron Delta Epsilon selects its members from amongst those boys and girls between the ages of sixteen and twenty-four who have demonstrated their worthiness by their Christian living and service, particularly in their activity in the young people's organizations, and seeks to impress upon them by its rites the importance of definite study of the teachings of Christ and their application through loyalty to and participation in the work of the Church. Since it is concerned with the spiritual welfare and development of Christian youth to a point of active expression of Christian ideals, Omicron Delta Epsilon is not confined to the local church, but is available to college students wherever they may desire to band themselves together in fraternalism to perpetuate a wholesome Christian influence, provided the surroundings of the college will be conducive to the best interests of such a group. Older persons are eligible for membership, and members of Omicron Delta Epsilon who have demonstrated in practice to a high degree their understanding of the principles of the Order of St. Stephen are eligible for membership in the Golden Rite of Pi Alpha, a higher honorary degree of Omicron Delta Epsilon, which is awarded only to those who have definitely indicated their zeal for the way of the Church and the earnest spread of its message and influence.

It is pointed out that both rites of Omicron Delta Epsilon do not seek to take the place of the Church, but rather seek to band together in a strong bond of fraternalism men and women who are willing to face great sacrifice in order to understand and perpetuate the true spirit of the Church by absolute submission to its teachings as the Body of Christ. Neither is its work designed to conflict with that of the minister, but rather to cooperate with him as leader and pastor. Nor is the social aspect of personality ignored, but rather stimulated and developed in Christian fellowship. The work at St. Luke's is under the direction of T. V. Morrison, who has had wide experience in young people's and fraternal work.

Vitally Active Sunday School.

"Rally Day" and "Home-Coming Sunday" were featured at the Church of Our Saviour, Atlanta, Sunday, September 15. Two new classes have been added to the already fine program of the Church School, one for the boy or girl who is ready for confirmation, and one for the mothers and fathers who bring their children to the kindergarten and wait for them. Plans to make this school one of the most vitally active in the city are under way, according to Mr. Roy Boling, superintendent.

National Sojourners Sponsor Special Service.

The Fort McPherson Chapter, No. 60, of the National Sojourners sponsored a special service Sunday, September 15, at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta, commemorating the anniversary of the signing of the American Constitution.

Memorial Services for Bishop Sumner.

The Rt. Rev. Walter T. Sumner, Bishop of Oregon, who died at Portland September 4, was mourned here by civic and church leaders alike. Bishop Sumner was one of the best known and most beloved of civic leaders during his years of service in Chicago. He was attached to the old Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul and worked largely among the unfortunates of the west side. He was a member of the Chicago School Board and generally active in social welfare work.

Memorial services for Bishop Sumner were held at the Cathedral Shelter on the site where he labored so long, on Sunday, September 8, with Canon David E. Gibson, associate of Bishop Sumner's, officiating.

"By his thoughtfulness and devotion to his work, Bishop Sumner endeared himself to thousands, especially the poor," said Canon Gibson, commenting upon the Bishop's passing.

An interesting sidelight with regard to Bishop Sumner's career came to light with his death. It was the late Jane Addams who was largely responsible for the Bishop's entering the ministry. When the then young Walter Sumner was working in the Western Electric plant on Chicago's southwest side, he offered his services to Miss Addams in the organization of boys' clubs at Hull House. Miss Addams in turn recommended him to the Dean of the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, Luther Pardee. This led to Western Theological Seminary and the priesthood. Later Dean Sumner succeeded Jane Addams on the Board of Education of Chicago.

Five Million Pennies!

Five million pennies or their equivalent have dropped into Bishop's Pence cans, sugar bowls, cups and the like in Church homes of the Diocese of Chicago during the past two years.

This rather amazing accomplishment was reported this week by Sylvester A. Lyman, executive secretary of the Pence plan, as the second anniversary of the Pence approached. On Sunday, September 8, the second full year of the Pence was concluded. Mr. Lyman estimated that when the final reports on this Pence collection are available, it will bring the total contributions past the $50,000 mark. Before the collection the total stood at approximately $47,000.

Approximately 9,000 families or an estimated 27,000 persons have taken part in the Pence plan in the diocese, Mr. Lyman said. In addition to the accomplishments of the plan in this diocese, it has been adopted in a number of other dioceses and in scores of local churches. In fact, it is being used now in virtually every denomination in some form or other, says Mr. Lyman.

Personal Notes

Bishop James E. Freeman, who spent the summer in Maine and who was recently a guest of President Roosevelt at Hyde Park, N. Y., and who on September 8 preached at West Point Military Academy, has returned to Washington and was heard in the services of September 15. He conducted the devotional services this week at a special clergy conference held at Camp Overrall, Va.

Chicago Priest Retires.

Announcement is made of the retirement of the Rev. Arnold Lutton, priest-in-charge of Church of the Annunciation, Chicago, for the past twenty-five years. The Rev. Hugh M. MacWhorter, rector, Christ Church, Ottawa, will succeed Fr. Lutton.

Fr. Lutton is retiring October 1, after more than forty-four years in the ministry. He was ordered deacon in 1891, and priested the following year by the late Bishop Talbot. He began his ministry in Wyoming, serving at St. James' Church, Carbon; Christ Church, Newcastle; St. Luke's Church, Buffalo, and St. Peter's Church, Sheridan. After three years' rectorship of Emmanuel Church, Rapid City, S. D., he came to Chicago in 1904 as assistant at Church of Our Saviour. From 1904 to 1908, he was rector of St. James' Church, Dundee, taking up his duties at the Annunciation the latter year.

Fr. MacWhorter who succeeds Fr. Lutton, has been rector of Christ Church, Ottawa, since 1923. Three years ago he was appointed by Bishop Stewart to be dean of the Southern Convocation of the diocese.

Clerical Changes Announced.

Several clerical changes in the Diocese of Chicago are announced by Bishop Stewart, effective immediately.

The Rev. W. A. Cross, formerly of Pittsburgh, has been named priest-in-charge of St. Clement's Church, Harvey, and St. John's Church, Fossmoor. At Harvey succeeds the Rev. Wayne Garrard, who will devote all his time to St. Aiden's, Blue Island, and City Missions Work.

The Rev. H. B. Ziegler has been appointed to Holy Innocents' Mission, Chicago, succeeding the Rev. Thomas K. Rogers, who becomes assistant at Church of the Holy Spirit, Lake Forest.

The Rev. Shirley G. Sanchez of Tulsa, Okla., has been named to St. Andrew's Church (colored), Chicago, succeeding the Rev. Frank R. Myers. Fr. Sanchez has been pastor of St. Thomas' Church, Tulsa, and formerly was at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Mobile, Ala.; St. Mark's Normal and Industrial School, Birmingham, Ala., and St. Augustine's Church, Fort Smith, Ark.

The Rev. DeVon Ellsworth has resigned the rectorship of St. Peter's Church, Sycamore, his successor not yet having been chosen.

Chinese Priest in Chicago.

The Rev. Benjamin Yen, priest of the Church in Hankow, China, and head of the Boy Scout Movement in the Orient, paid a visit to Chicago this week and was entertained by Chinese consular officials. Dr. Yen is touring this country with a group of Boy Scouts. The Scout Movement is having an important beneficial effect upon the Orient Dr. Yen believes.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

The Christian hope brings the assurance that the human ideals, which take color from the existence of ultimate spiritual values, are not mere day dreams, but are part of the very texture of reality and are eternally realized in God.—Canon Storr.

"There are no neutrals in the Holy War."

The difference between men is not that one is inspired and another is not, but that one yields to the Spirit, another does not.—Forbes Robinson.

On the slab that marks Browning's tomb in the poets' corner of Westminister Abbey are inscribed the words he once said to his friend Sharp:

"Never say of me that I am dead."

If Jesus Christ is everything to me, I know He can be everything to any man, and because I know it, then woe is me if I will not do all that is in my power to get every man who does not know Jesus Christ to share Him with me. There is no escape from this logic. If I love Jesus Christ, which means if I am loyal to Him, which means if I keep His commandments, I am in touch with everybody to tne ends of the earth who needs Him and I cannot wash my hands and say that you must excuse me from the matter."

—Maltbie Babcock.

"'The soul, secure in her existence smiles
At the drawn dagger and defies its pain,
The stars may fade away, the sun himself
Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years;
But she shall flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amid the war of elements.
The wreck of matter, and the crash of worlds."

God is no more the Author of sin than the sun is the cause of ice; but it is in the nature of water to congeal into ice when the sun's influence is suspended to a certain degree. So there is sin enough in the hearts of men to make the earth the very image of hell, and to prove that men are no better than incarnate devils, were He to suspend His influence and restraint.—Newman.

The slogan of the twentieth century must be that little, but tremendous, word, together. It is only together that we can ever hope to solve our tremendous problems and build a world in which the life of each is known to be essential to the fullest life of all—J. H. Randell.

Brother, where two fight, the stronger wins and truth and love are strength.—Anonymous.

Where the vanguard fights today the rearguard should camp tomorrow. This is the glory of going on.

Art thou in pain or sore distress?
He will relieve thy heaviness.
Art thou atray and doing ill?
Turn back; He calls thee, loves thee still.
Where'er thou art, all faithfully
God loveth thee, God loveth thee.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

A Last Wish Before the Throne of Heaven

Mrs. Robert Johnston, Birmingham, Alabama

If we are allowed to choose our place and occupation in Heaven, mine will be to pray for my Children and the little Boys—First, that you may all be saved, and then that your spiritual life may be intensified—that you may never cease to "endure as seeing Him who is invisible."

Prayer has been such an unspeakable comfort in my life, I want you to be men and women of prayer. "God can do in and through a man who prays what He cannot do in and through a man who does not pray. Prayer is one form of co-operation with God by which we give Him the opportunity of doing in us what He longs to do for our good."

I can give my earthly possessions. Alas! I can not will my Faith that has been my anchor, sure and steadfast, in all the storms of life. "I will never leave thee or forsake thee" has been His promise.

My life has been so rich in spiritual blessings that I wish you all to know and understand how good God has been to me, and how gracious. Remember, without His guidance and help my whole life would have been wrecked, for in its beginning I was embittered by my deafness and other disappointments. When I learned to accept every thing as working together for my spiritual good I found the "peace that passeth all understanding." Later I thanked God more for my sorrows than my blessings, for these called forth His compassion and tenderness and drew me with the cords of love to the only source of real happiness and the Surrendered Life.

I pray that in the day when He makes up His jewels not one of my children or grandchildren will be missing.

Do not think or speak of me as dead, but alive as never before, without sin and earth's limitations, a sinner saved by Grace.

When one faces Eternity and sees the world fading away, what a blessing to know in whom you have believed, and to say "No things present, nor things to come, nor heights, nor depths, nor any other creature can separate me from the Love of God which is Christ Jesus."

Hold fast to your Faith, and may the peace of God which passeth all understanding enfold you until you "enter into rest."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Who's the Barbarian?

Mr. Editor:

Mussolini says Ethiopia is a "barbaric nation," unfit for membership in the League of Nations. He demands the privilege of taking his troops in the heathen land to civilize them. But last month when war seemed evident "heathen Ethiopia" remained twenty-four hours in prayer for peace. Today her leaders are praying "may peace reign . . . and God's Kingdom come on earth." While the dusky men of Ethiopia pray, Italy, with her modern war equipment, would invade the heathen land to "civilize the heathen." Christian Italy would carry the merciful and tender weapons of advanced civilization to accomplish her desires. She would bestow the blessing of poison gas, bombs, machine guns, and chemicals to burn the bare-feet of the "barbarians." With her high-powered war planes she would swoop down on the rude, uncivilized savage and baptise him with Christian civilization. Her choice explosives would rip the helpless heathen into bits, destroy his cities, wreck his huts, all in the name of "Christian civilization." Powerful and ugly tanks, all in the name of civilization, would crawl over the "barbaric nation" crushing out the lives of those who stand in the way. Shells would shock, bullets would penetrate, swords would pierce and rip to pieces the dusky barbarian . . . for he could not match modern implements of war. Christian Italy and her gentle and merciful leader, by these lovely and gentle methods, devised by science and government, under the super-intelligence of modern man, would do all in the name and interest of modern civilization. What manner of man can this Mussolini be? In the World War he saw thousands upon thousands butchered on the field of battle. Yet, he would deliberately send millions, mostly young men and boys, to a similar fate.

It is a fine thing that the "barbaric nation" falls to its knees and prays God for peace and safety. There is hope to be found in other nations in the League presenting a "united front" for peace and outlawing any form of war. But it is a pitiful civilization that is helpless when one man or one nation would send millions of innocent young men to the business of murdering on the battle fields.

The world is in very little danger from the barbarism of Ethiopia. It is in much danger from the power of selfish dictators and the glories of modern civilization.

True Culture.

Mr. Editor:

For the past few years, I have been thinking very seriously about this thing commonly known as culture. As a college student, I am met with the problem of artificial culture or real culture. Naturally, it has been my aim for a long time to acquire a real and a natural culture, but often I find myself drifting into that which I call artificial culture. Perhaps my greatest problem has been in making a distinction between the two kinds of culture.

In the first place, one meets so many people who try to "put on the dog" and utterly fail to make any sort of impression on others. These people, as a rule, use outward methods to "put themselves over." People of this type are usually narrow and show their tastes as being rather radical. This class I put into what I term "butterfly society."

On the other hand, there are some people—and a very few there are—whose culture seems to come naturally and without effort. This is the aim of most people; yet some, when they try the hardest, make the greatest failure.

I have been asked by other students for a set of rules which, when closely followed, will lead one into a life filled with happiness and a life which will have that certain something—culture. Far be it from the greatest of scholars to furnish such a set of rules; nevertheless, I feel that there are certain basic principles which, when learned and put into practice, will help us to acquire real culture.

First: God is the sole Creator and Preserver of the universe and all that is therein contained. Without Him, nothing is possible. So many of us make the mistake of thinking of Him as a Spirit. Wouldn't it be better to think of Him as Spirit, leaving out the article? Now, there comes another problem: this Spirit is love, but more than that; this Spirit is light, but more than that; we cannot think of Him in these terms alone. Let us also think of Him as Personality. Now, we are getting somewhere.

Second: Is it possible for one personality to influence another? Certainly! How can this be possible with the Supreme Personality? Answer: through prayer and meditation directly with Him; through the Bible, whose authors were inspired by Him; through the great poets of our age, whose imaginations were stirred by Him; and through personal contacts with other personalities which are moulded by Him.

Third: And how can this lead to true culture? My dear readers, God is all-perfect. The nearer we get to Him, the nearer we come to being perfect. True culture is no more than being as nearly perfect as possible, mentally, morally, and spiritually; so the nearer we come to being perfect in these phases, the nearer we come to having true culture.

Is This the Right Way?

Recently we have noticed a growing tendency to change the time-honored manner of calling a rector to a vacant parish. While we know only too well the troubles that have been manifest in having the wrong men in the parishes, we feel certain that what is rapidly becoming a sanctioned method of finding a new rector is entirely wrong.

The new custom is really an old one. It is the ancient method of "candidating", which for many years has been the practice of the Scotch and to which they have been accustomed, but which our forefathers in this Church long ago discarded as undignified and not in keeping with our best traditions.

It has probably grown with the depression. Vestries hesitated to spend money for committees to travel about and look over men who might be selected and called, and someone has let down the bars, and throwing dignity to the winds allowed himself to be persuaded to accept an "invitation" to preach in a vacant parish in order that he may be looked over. In the last year this gross method has grown until in some parts of our Church it is almost the regular way.

Can we plead with our brethren of the vestries to abolish this horrible method before it ends in the conversion of our clergy to the coarseness that will be sure to come and the detriment that follows? We are not Scotchmen with a long tradition behind us, and while we may have made mistakes, for the most part our clergy have remained gentlemen. If they are forced into a mad scramble for vacant parishes there is no telling what they may become.

The scheme has nothing to recommend it. We even doubt if it is cheap at the moment, for a vacant parish is usually effecting a saving in the sum used as a stipend for a rector and this can be applied to committee work. It is a scheme where the show-off, and there are such, has complete control of the situation. The modest man with real Christianity would be embarrassed even to attempt to show his wares in this pseudo-commercial manner. The brazen man who lacks spirituality can always be at his best. The man's record in his old parish is not examined properly and if he is chosen it is on the basis of an emotional appeal that is not in the long run the appeal that can be continued.

Faulty as the old method has been, it is still better until General Convention can find some more proper method of clergy placement than such cheap and makeshift schemes as the candidate method. If a man is earnest, spiritual and honest in his ministry, he will be known and at the proper time he will receive a call. But let us preserve the dignity which is one of the virtues of Christianity and which our Church has preserved and revered.

The Fall Campaign.

Again we come to that period of the year when we must think of the annual every member canvass. We live in a practical world, where money is needed as a medium of exchange, and the Church must have this medium also. The only efficient and proper way yet devised to obtain the proper sums needed and the proper interest from the giver has been the method of the every member canvass.

Unfortunately, there is a feeling that has grown in the Church that this is a dreary task. In spite of good secretaries and well-written literature, many parishes are looking for an easier way to conduct this necessary piece of work, and we suspect that it is in looking for some other way and neglecting the right method that weariness has come instead of joy. For those rare parishes that really do the work correctly have found that the campaign is the climax of their whole program and that their people with better knowledge and finer interest have come from the campaign with renewed strength and better attitudes towards the Church and the Church's work.

We say it is a campaign for money, and yet it really is not that at all. It is primarily a campaign for people. If they have translated part of their lives in terms of money, we receive the lives in that way. But if it were only their money we were interested in, there would be quicker and easier ways. Lotteries have been resorted to in some countries for carrying on religious work and have proved a simple method. But we reject such things as actually inconsistent with Christianity, and if we reject mere money raising, we must learn that the real object of our every member canvass is educational, and our work must be guided so that every members learns about the Church and learns that he is a part of it.

Mail campaigns and other temporary devices do not carry this educational value. Nothing can take the place of devoted and hard-working Christian men and women paying a personal call in a friendly way.

Modern budgets are the result of studying needs, and the Church's budget is built up the same way. These needs must be interpreted to our people, and begging letters run off on mimeographs do not take the place of the personal call. When properly conducted

Man's Destiny.

Norman S. Meese in Supreme Council Bulletin.

Four hundred years before Christ, Plato said that only three questions had ever been asked which were worthy of the time and work necessary to find their answers. These questions were: (1) Where did we come from? (2) Why are we here? and (3) Where do we go after we leave here? Following his studies with Socrates, Plato's life was a protracted search for their solutions, but he could finally do no more than hint at means of approach, the end unreached. "Faith," said Paul, "is the . . . evidence of things unseen," and upon this alone must rest what answer we find to the first and last, but the answer to the second is immediate and unmistakable: "We are here to help each other. If this be not true, contentment must be found in supreme selfishness, and cruelty is the greatest good.

To live at inward peace in the knowledge that somehow our existence serves to honorably advance a common cause is to live at peace with the rest of the world. When that cause is designed to assist men toward the fulfillment of their destinies in the light of their highest ideals and aspirations, then life can offer no greater assurance of its ultimate purpose. The teachings of the Sages can have little meaning beyond this.

One Scripture the Average Church Member Does not Believe.

Baptist Standard, Dallas, Texas, September 12, 1935.

Does believing a Scripture make it true, or denying it, disregarding it, ridiculing it, scoffing at it make it the less true? People think their attitude affects truth. It affects their participation in the benefits or the blessings of truth, but that is all. Here is the passage they do not believe:

"If thou turn away thy foot from (trampling) the Sabbath; from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable: and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: (as against his) Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father, for the mouth the Lord hath spoken it." Is. 58:13, 14

These are plain, sincere words; but the average citizen of America does not believe them to be true. The average Baptist in Texas utterly disregards them whenever he wishes; and thinks nothing of it. This passage is either true or not. This promise will be fulfilled if the conditions are complied with, or else the promise is false and not from God.

The prosperity of the human race does not depend upon chance but character. It is not accidental, but the result of cause and effect. God who made man teaches definitely that religious education is the basic need of man, in order that he may become in himself the kind of being, possessing the intelligence and character, which as causes will produce the effects: joy and prosperity and honor.

But the average man does not believe it. He thinks that it is the talk of preachers, not to be taken seriously. The real fact is that it is as true as the law of gravitation, no matter how many generations unanimously deny it.

This country is drifting, has drifted, far away from a Sabbath observance that will or can produce the kind and amount of religious education necessary for the fulfillment of that promise. Greed for pleasure and money is eating this country's heart out. In our lust for money we are multiplying pauperism and in our race for pleasure we are multiplying suicides. We had better believe God sincerely and obey His will and not our own. What the people need is a religious education which is impossible when the time to obtain it is given to other things. Reader, what are you personally going to do about it? When are you going to begin?

Uncle Sam's Payroll.

During the past twenty-nine months, 165,000 civil employees have been added to the Federal payroll, making a total of about 730,000. The Army comes in for an increased quota of about 60,000. Then there are over 600,000 in the CCC Camps, 3,000,0000 farmers who are receiving checks, thousands of veterans drawing pensions, and the total of about 3,500,000, who will soon be working for the Federal Government on relief jobs. Shortly, the payroll will be increased by those who will receive old-age pensions under the Social Security Act.

Nearly all of the 165,000 new Federal workers are outside of the Civil Service. These workers were not selected through competitive examination, but through various governmental agencies, usually after the applicants had made satisfactory "political clearance."

By Act of Congress, Civil Service employees of the Federal Government are not subject to political interference, nor are they permitted to be active politically in purse or otherwise. Of these employees, there were about 450,000 at the beginning of the Roosevelt Administration. It is estimated that this number has been increased but very little, under this Administration. "What is the significance?" many are asking. Why should they not all be placed under the Civil Service?

Does Sunday School Attendance Pay?

The Christian Sun, September 5, 1935.

Judge J. L. L. Fawcett, of the Supreme Court of New York, answers this question in unmistakable language. As reported by the North Western Christian Advocate, he says: "More than 4,000 of the 8,000 prisoners sentenced by me were under the age of twenty-one years, and only three were members of the Sunday School at the time of committing their crimes . . . In 1,092 cases of suspended sentence, in each of which a minister, rabbi, or priest became interested, at my request, with the hope of saving the boy to a future life of usefulness and good citizenship, only sixty-two of the boys were brought back for violation of the conditions of their parole. I believe the reform in the other cases, over 1,000, was prompt and permanent. I regard our Sunday Schools and churches as the only effective means to stem the rising tide of vice and crime among youth."

EDITORIALS.

there is always witnessed a new and lively interest and the workers themselves find a joy in service. Let us all this fall go forward with real and tried methods and, following the suggestions of our experts who have studied the problem for years, have a real Every Member Canvass of the whole Church that will restore our missionary work to its proper place and leave in the local parish an enthusiastic and educated laity.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

What God Can Do Through Us

We know pretty well what we can do for God, or what we think we can do, from what our experience has taught us. As a rule this estimate is placed pretty low. But what God can do through us is an entirely different matter. Here the emphasis is placed upon God rather than upon ourselves, which is vastly different. We cannot, of course, measure the possibilities of the divine power working through man, but a good deal of light can be thrown upon the subject by what we know of God and His relations with mankind. For instance, He did not choose the angels to be the means through whom He might reveal His Nature and His Will and purpose to us. Nor did He choose them to carry out His work of redemption. From this we gather that the angelic nature was not suited for the carrying out of so great and wonderful an undertaking.

The Angelic Nature Not Fitted For the Work of Saving Mankind.

Instead of choosing the angelic nature for this purpose, which we might have thought would be more suitable, He chose this human nature of ours, and not only so, but united it with His own by taking it upon Him in the Person of His Son, Jesus Christ, who thus became the Godman. That our human nature was capable of being used by God to manifest His nature and character to men, can be seen from the fact that His Son, Jesus Christ, was able to say to Philip, who had asked for a revelation of the Father:—"Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip; he that hath seen me hath seen the Father, and how sayest thou then shew us the Father?" St. John 14:19. Christ's human body was used by Him as the means by which eternal redemption was wrought out and secured for mankind, by the sacrifice on the Cross.

Christ the Mediator.

Now it is a matter of very great wonder and of vast importance, that this human nature of ours was capable of being used by God to attain such exalted ends as the perfect and supreme revelation of the divine nature, and of securing the Eternal Redemption of mankind. Christ is the Mediator between God and man, because He is not only the Son of God, but also the Son of Man. Man himself could never have attained to such sublime heights, for by himself he had "sinned and come short of the glory of God." It took God Himself, by becoming man in the Person of Jesus Christ, to show what this human nature of ours is capable of at its best. It is perfectly true that Christ was without sin, and that His human will was perfectly responsive to and in harmony with the Will of the Father, for He Himself said, "Father, not my Will, but Thine be done," and "I came down from heaven not to do mine own will but the will of Him that sent me." It may be said, however, that we on the other hand, have a nature corrupted by sin, and therefore not perfect or sinless as He was. But nevertheless God has provided for the cleansing of our souls from sin, and by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, we can be used by Him to carry out His divine purpose through us, for St. Paul says: "God is able to make all Grace abound towards you, that ye having all sufficiency in all things, may abound unto every good work." St. Paul here places the emphasis where it rightly belongs, and that is on God and His ability to enable us "to abound unto every good work."

The Minimum and the Maximum of Usefulness.

This brings us back to the point that our usefulness must not be measured by what we can do or think we can do, for God, but rather by what God can do through us. Our part represents the minimum, God's part the maximum of our possible usefulness. We were created by God for Him to use, and we have seen that He can use us to far better advantage than we can ourselves. He has placed us above the angels by uniting His nature to ours and thus making us partakers with Him in His own divine nature. It is true that we do not know what God's plan with regard to us is, but we do know that His plan for us is far greater and more wonderful than any that we might form for ourselves. By constantly yielding ourselves up to the influence of His Holy Spirit, and humbly submitting our wills to His, we should find ourselves rising to higher and higher levels of attainment as time goes on. We can get a clearer idea of the possibilities of this human nature of ours, by meditating often and deeply upon Christ's human nature, and what He accomplished, and is still accomplishing by using it for man's eternal redemption.

Our Fitness to Be Used by God.

The more closely we can follow Christ's example and enter into the Spirit of His Life here on earth, the more wonderfully shall we become fitted and prepared to be used by God, in ways that we should never have dreamed of, until He reveals to us and to the world, what He can do with those who are willing to make His Will the law of their lives. Christ taught us a great deal about God, but He also taught us that it is possible for us to grow more and more like Him. For did He not say in His Sermon on the Mount, "Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect?" We can compare this saying of His with the words of St. Paul, written to the Corinthian Church:—"But we all with open face, beholding as in a glass, the glory of the Lord are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." (2 Cor. 3:18). Here we have a vision of the possibilities of this human nature of ours even in this present life as wrought out within us, by the Spirit of God. "From glory to glory." This reminds us of the passage in the Book of Proverbs:—"The path of the just is as the shining light, which shineth more and more unto the Perfect Day." But it even goes beyond this, for the glory of God has been manifested to men through our human nature when Christ's Body was transfigured upon the Holy Mount in the presence of chosen witnesses.

O wonderful! O Wonderful!
To share the power divine,
And use it for the sons of men
In glowing deeds that shine
Like stars that glorify the night,
As messengers from realms of light.

Religion In Everyday Life

By A. RICHARD BLISS, JR.,

Dean of the School of Pharmacy of Howard College, Birmingham, Alabama.

AMONG the writings of Kagawa, the Christian Japanese, one finds the statement: "A religion of life is always spiritual." The religion taught by Jesus is a religion of life, and the God of Jesus is the God of Action—the God of Life. Only through the active movement of love, however, can we know our God as the God of Action and of Life. Jesus thought of God as the Father, the Giver of Life. Christ came into the world that we might have life, and have life more abundantly. We may doubt or deny everything, but life still exists. Some think, apparently, that if God is only spirit, He is something vague and unreal; but there is nothing more real and certain than life, and because life is the very power of God, this life cannot be denied.

When life is mentioned, many immediately think of science and scientific research; and, as promptly, of the alleged, traditional "conflict between religion and science." Let us consider for a moment the statement of Doctor Leonard Lockhart made not very long ago before the British Medical Association:

> "The vast machine of modern life is at times a terrifying thing. The pace is fast and it is increasing. There appear to be two outstanding reactions of the mind, fear and the sense of inferiority—fear of mechanism, fear of economic forces, fear of war, and unreasoning fear of losing religion. While science has revolutionized the economic life of man, it has also gravely disturbed his spiritual life. Man has been prodded by theology. Dogma is collapsing, and he finds himself in the dark, a prey to fear and neurosis. Here the Church can help to set him on his feet."

Hear also what Doctor Crile, famous surgeon of Cleveland, Ohio, said in October, 1931, when he addressed the American Medical Association:

> "The emotions, worry, fear, hate, and jealousy, affect every cell in the body. Some organs are stimulated, all are disturbed. Waste products are increased, and foundations of certain characteristic human diseases laid. This is particularly true of those who have made civilization what it is, and who now bear the burden, who have the greatest capacity and urge for work and worry. Man cannot fear, he cannot hate, he cannot worry intellectually—he fears with all of his organs. There is not one group of phenomena for the president of a bank in a financial crash, and another for the criminal who suddenly faces the naked probability of the penitentiary, or for the mother who watches over the child. I feel justified in the prophecy that before many decades the role of the physician will have changed so much that his profession will seem an entirely new one, and, we may add, more closely bound than ever before with true religion."

SO AGAIN, if it be necessary, we have evidence of the fallacy of the religion-science conflict—evidence provided by some of our greatest modern scientific leaders.

As a medical scientist, I do not hesitate to state that science is not to be measured by practical service alone, though it may and does contribute to material prosperity. Science is an intellectual outlook; it is a standard of truth and a gospel of light—an ally, a collaborator of true religion,; an agent for elucidating God's truths and laws. It is true, however, that when scientific work is instituted with the sole object of securing commercial gain, its correlative is selfishness; when it is confined to the path of narrow specialization, it leads to arrogance; and when its purpose is materialistic domination, without regard for the spiritual needs of humanity, it is a social danger, and becomes a potential excuse for learned barbarity. This has been termed by some the enslavement of science by business and industry. Scientific research, however, is rarely inspired by these motives, and one who devotes his life to its pursuit does not necessarily inhibit response to other notes with which a well-balanced mind should be in symphony.

Anyone who desires to do the real thing, to make God a reality in his own life, to make personal response to the Father, finds that religious acts are as indispensable as methods—necessary practical methods—by which one can get in touch and keep in touch with God. If you show real tolerance to all men, set an example of spiritual devotion, and deal fairly and openly with all men, you will send a blessing with everything that goes out from your activities—your business. Take God into business partnership with you. It is inspiring to find many who are doing this today, and promising to note that the number is rapidly increasing.

The principal theme of Hunting's recent book entitled, "Working With God" is that God is law, that law always works—everywhere—anywhere—and now and forever. Hunting says:

> "If you will stop thinking of God as a joke, or as an error, or as a myth, or as a dream, or as something far off and outside everyday life, and will think of Him as the maker of the law of gravitation and of the law of love—one of which is just as important as the other—you'll get somewhere."

Truth is the big thing in Hunting's life, and one is impelled by the desire to make his likewise, for he says: "When we begin working with God, God works with us—and God works miracles." Working with God in our everyday endeavors is life—the Christian life. Life, then, is a joyous realization of oneness with God. Business men, professsional men, all men should take the Sermon on the Mount seriously. The Sermon on the Mount is livable for Jesus Christ practiced everything He preached.

Let us carry the Golden Rule in our daily lives—our business, our occupation. The Golden Rule was proclaimed and announced, taught and followed by the Man of Galilee. It practices the principles of the highest human relations; it is the rediscovered principle of a practice that results in happiness, and contentment and satisfaction. It is an economic law, a divine principle governing all human relationships, the only worthwhile, workable industrial and economical law of the universe today.

No life is built into nobility that thinks only of self. The most successful man of today is the man of service. The supreme task of life is not to make a living, but a life; not to win fortunes, but character; not to own vast areas, but high ideals; not to write your name on granite or stone, but on human hearts.

OUR Christian faith should mean zeal in our daily work, honesty of purpose and righteousness in word and deed, and recognition of the fellowship of all men in the love of God. Our duty towards God embraces also our duty towards man. Our words and our actions are an accurate index of our thoughts, and consequently of our lives.

Let us try to put into our attitude toward our work or occupation the quality of looking upon work as a part of our life in God, as something with which God has had to do, and that is mixed with our destiny. If the values we perceive in Christ actually govern our lives, the proper uses of the inventions of science and the engines of industry are ready to put into our hands, and we shall then devote our efforts toward mobilization of the forces of good will, and insuring that the elementary needs of all men will be met by a sharing of the gifts of God among all classes and peoples.

Too many, it seems, attempt to organize their daily lives into sharply divided portions, viz,: domestic, social, business and religious. One cannot successfully eliminate or isolate his religious life from his other endeavors and activities; it must be a part of them. Religion should permeate, yes, saturate all human activities. Religion cannot be scheduled as a Sunday pastime to be forgotten and dropped between Sundays. One's salvation will not be found by such a plan, or for that matter by any plan other than actually working out one's own salvation. No man can work out another's salvation for him. He must work it out himself; he must save himself by his own efforts. "Jesus Saves" is true in so far as the influence of His example and life show the way, and His divine teaching, assistance and guidance help the individual to save himself. Some apparently think that salvation may be obsorbed by sitting regularly in the Church pew. Jesus proved by His own life on earth, that man can and will work out his own salvation.

Some one has said that spiritual insight comes from spiritual living. We can see as Christ saw and know as He knew only as we live as He lived. "Man's true self is Christ Himself" and this Christ may be realized only through the unfoldment of the enfolded Word.

THE big war caused by the collapse of national character. National character is the sum total of individual character. Our newspaper want-ad columns are filled with a great variety of material things wanted. "Money," "Job," "Car," "Houses," "Apartment," "Diamonds"; wanted everything—but Christsian Character. And yet what we need most is men who will keep their contracts, though they go to the county farm; men who will not stand up the first day of the week and profess, and then melt and run down into a puddle the second day. Along with all of the more or less needed ones, there is a real need for a Code of Character, a code that keeps a man human—Christian, snug to his Christian ideals, a code for Christian service, not profit. Wanted a renaissance of Christian character; not less cotton, nor fewer hogs, but more outstanding, upstanding Christian men.

To paraphrase Doctor McCaslin: Business, industry, the professions, all lines of human activity need Men. Men with vision and heart; men with honesty and pride; men with courage and conviction. Men who are not for sale. Men upon whom no price can be placed, who hold principle above position. Such men will dare to stand for right when the rest of the world turns back, and such are the men who are honest in thought, and true to the heart's core.

Men with conscience; who still can feel the urge of the still small voice, and who will not sacrifice for money's sake. Men, over whose door post is the everlasting sign "right for right's sake, let it cost what it may." Such men are the hope of humanity. Men who will dare to tell the truth, though the very heavens totter and the earth reels, yet who will look the world in the face and speak the whole truth. Such men are the salt of the earth, and heralds of right.

Such is the need of the world today. Above all greatness or wealth; beyond all power and strength it needs this type of men, both in business and society, in religion and politics and in every department of life, where men live and work. Men in whom the everlasting life runs deep and strong and still. The world needs men like this—Christian men to build its life; to create impressions; to mold public sentiment; to run its industries, business and government; to fight its battles; and to save its soul.

THE EMPTY TOMB.

By Upton H. Gibbs.

The celebration of Easter is the celebration of the discovery of an empty tomb, in which once a dead body was laid. But why all the rejoicing that marks the festival? If a body had been placed in it, and afterwards it was discovered that the tomb was empty, with only the grave clothes remaining, the supposition would naturally be, that the body had been taken away.

This explanatio nwas offered at the time, and it is periodically revived and reiterated, but it has proved insufficient. In the first place, such an attempt had been anticipated by those who had great interest in preventing such an action, and they had taken particular pains to guard against such a possibility. The entrance had been hermetically sealed and a military guard provided. Those, if any, who might have made such an attempt, were utterly unable to cope against this guard, for they were few and insignificant.

This explanation has failed to explain. On the other hand, the explanation that has won out, is that the opening of the tomb was the act of God. An earthquake shook the tomb and caused the entrance stone to fall flat. The dead body suddenly became alive, and slipping through its cerecloths without disarranging them, issued from the tomb a living person.

"What bunk," sneer some intellectuals. Yet this bunk so impressed itself as true, that each first day of the week has been set apart as a solemn reminder of the event among thousands of millions who profess and call themselves Christian.

And He Who lay dead in that tomb and came forth alive, is regarded by them as victor over death, and the source of life and immortality to them.

Moreover, absurd or not, this belief has proved the most revolutionary and beneficial of any. It has shed light in the darkness of death, brought hope and comfort to the despairing, comfort to the bereaved, established righteousness, and given human life a new meaning, purpose, sanction and goal.

THAT IS THE TIME TO PRAY.

In the soft blush of morning.
When song-birds greet the day,
After long hours of darkness:
That is the time to pray!

In the bright glow of midday,
When thoughts are all astray
With the rush and whirl of living:
That is the time to pray!

In the sweet hush of twilight,
As daylight slips away,
And everything stands in shadow:
That is the time to pray!

'Ere we close our eyes in slumber,
Tired with work and play ,
For our busy day is over:
That is the time to pray!

Church's Responsibility for Under-Privileged People

By W. E. GARNETT,

Rural Sociologist, Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

ONE of the most complex questions confronting Virginia today is its problem of an excessively large percentage of marginal people.

It is conservatively estimated that over half of the state's white population fall within this group. In the rural districts this means over half a million whites and over one-third of a million Negroes.

This estimate is supported by the results of a recent study of twelve communities distributed over eleven counties, including some of the best sections of the state, which showed 59 per cent of the 2,828 families in these communities to be of a marginal status. Three families out of eight had so little property they were not even listed on the tax books, while one family in four had so little real estate and personal property that their tax assessments were less than one dollar. Another phase of the problem is indicated by a study of 159 completed families of the marginal type in one community which showed an average of 6.4 children as compared to an average of 1.7 children of 130 families of higher living standards.

Changing conditions make the problem more serious in many ways. Hence the state must be thinking more seriously of long-time corrective measures as well as temporary relief activities. For instance, a recent report showed one county with more than half of its population made of marginal families as having 1,595 men registered with the re-employment office as wanting work. This was 25.4 per cent of the number gainfully employed in this county in 1930, and 561 more than were thus seeking work the last of May. Yet, the local furniture factories which ordinarily employ about 500 men, are working full time, farm crops are unusually good, and a good number are employed on road work. A short time ago word was circulated that some college students who had been working at the furniture factory during the summer were giving up their work, thus leaving some vacancies. There were 164 men in the line of applicants for these vacancies and only one was given work. According to the latest report there were over 650 relief cases in this county. Relief workers and others with good judgment say that under the relief program the morale of many families is becoming demoralized. Some years ago a large percentage of these families made their living from lumber work. the timber of the area is practically exhausted.

A recent study of several communities in this county showed many families with a cash income of less than $100 a year, and their standards of living are what would be expected with such a limited income. There are more people in this area than can make a decent living there, yet the rate of increase is 81 per cent above the number necessary to maintain a stationary population.

The conditions in this county could be duplicated over and over again in various parts of the state.

A recent study of one community of another county showed 27 per cent of the families with no member having any church affiliations. Of this group 47.9 per cent were classed as having a C to E standard of living as compared to 11.8 per cent of the families with a high living standard with no church affiliations. In this community there was one church to every 317 people. Such conditions are all too common. The churches, the schools, the agricultural and home extension service, and various types of voluntary organizations have generally failed to measure up to their obligations to the marginal group. The relief organization and the resettlement administration are doing some good work in this connection, but so far only touching the fringes of the problem. There must be more coordinated effort by all agencies. At best it will take several generations to make marked progress in dealing with this question. In many ways the Church has the key to this whole problem. Will it more fully awake to its obligations and use it?

The Church's responsibility for the problem of marginal people and ways of meeting it will be the chief concern of the conference on October 3. Bishop F. D. Goodwin will be in charge. Results of some research studies of the Rural Sociology Department of the Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station will furnish a factual basis for the discussions. H. H. Gordon, Acting State Rehabilitation Director, will tell of the government's program for helping the group in question. Any one interested in the problem is invited to attend the conference and take part in the discussions. It is hoped that many ministers will be present.

The meeting will be held at the Parish House of St. Paul's Church, Richmond. The morning session will begin at ten o'clock and the afternoon session at 1:30 o'clock.

AVENUES TO GOD: By the Rev. Richard R. Beasley. Bristol, 1935. The King Printing Company. Ppp. 86. Price, $1.00.

It is a brave thing for a young man to write a book on religion. But in the face of possible criticism, we must say that it is important to know what the younger clergy are thinking and preaching. The particular emphases Christianity will have in the future depend upon this. It is, therefore, refreshing to find that Mr. Beasley's book is as vitally alive to the complete dependence of religion on Jesus as it is.

Avenues to God is written for the layman and, as its title suggests, is only a suggestive introduction. To reach laymen, Mr. Beasley has seen fit to leave out technical material, historical, critical or philosophical, and to adopt a fluent style of rapid prose. The statements are simple, and repetitious, and the pages abound with similes and metaphors. There is no effort to prove a thesis or theses. It is a straightforward exposition of what a young clergyman feels to be the vital elementary standpoints of religion and constitutes an appeal to follow the Christ in the fellowship of the Church.

It is to be hoped that lay people will read this book. There is a bright enthusiasm here which reveals the continued vitality of Christianity and its adaptability to modern language and life. It is to be recommended, especially to young people, as an introduction which will encourage them to seek that teaching of the Church which Mr. Beasley feels is its greatest function.

The chapters are built around three on Jesus, the other four dealing with The Bible, Prayer, The Church, and Immortality. They suffer from over-generalization, but "the forgotten man in religion" to whom the author addresses himself can find here the tone of the religion expressed in the younger pulpits of Virginia.

The volume is attractively bound and may be obtained for only a dollar from The King Printing Company of Bristol, Virginia, or through the Mayo Memorial House, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Virginia.

THE SUPREME TEST, Complied by Alfred L. Murray, 169 pages, price $1.00. Published by Wm B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., Grand Rapids, Michigan.

This book contains twelve sermons by twelve able preachers and was compiled into a book form by one of the group. In the list we have such preachers as James I. Vance, Robert G. Lee, A. Z. Conrad, Clarence E. Macartney and others. The sermons are of different points of view but the theme is common to all, that is that the world's problems are not Head problems, but Heart problems and the Love of God in Jesus Christ only can solve them. Dr. Vance's sermon on "The New Day In A Changing World," is one of the best discussions on modern conditions and their solution we have seen lately. It is a true picture. "Woe unto the reformer who is not himself a creature of the reformation." "We are afraid change may hurt us, may injure our interest. . . ." This is a stirring sermon.

A Hard Journey

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,
Bishop of Washington.

DURING the more recent years, multitudes of our people have found the journey of life increasingly hard and difficult. Probably not in the history of this country have the trials been more exacting or severe. Where hitherto we were ignorant of how the other half lives, now it has become impossible to know how a majority of our fellow citizens have carried on in the face of insuperable difficulties. It may be that this situation has made us all more sensitive and genuinely sympathetic. It is certainly true that all of us have found that dependence upon material things, important as they are, does not meet all the demands and desires of life. At times and in days of general prosperity we may have thought that all that was necessary to insure happiness and satisfaction was the "full dinner pail," with a sufficient reserve for recreations and amusements. This illusion has been shattered by five years of privation and suffering. We are beginning to realize the force of the ancient word: "Man shall not live by bread alone." We have had ample proof of the incapacity of prosperity to make people strong and stable morally and to satisfy the yearnings of their finer natures.

An incident in one of the Old Testament books, contained in the nineteenth chapter of 1 Kings, is quite descriptive of a state of mind that is altogether common to many of us. A great leader and prophet, Elijah by name, who had worked zealously for the good of the people, found himself facing a situation that was so threatening and disastrous in its prospects, that despite his courage he fled from it in utter hopelessness and despair. Everything he had built seemed lost, his own followers had ceased to be loyal; the forces of evil were in power and there seemed nothing of hope and promise ahead. Flying before the storm, Elijah sought the silences of the wilderness, and there in despair "he requested for himself that he might die, and said, "It is enough; now O Lord, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers." In expectation that the end was at hand and that all his high hopes had turned to ashes, he awaited death. In this critical situation a voice came to him out of the silences, saying, "Arise and eat, because the journey is too great for thee." This was followed with a word of assurance and the promise that, presently, there should come better days, when the forces that were against him should be destroyed and the people return to normal and happier conditions. In his despair, the leader had forgotten to reckon with forces that were stronger and mightier than those that had threatened his defeat. He had signally failed in the day of his adversity, but henceforth he was to be invested with a power that in his anguish of mind he had neglected and forgotten.

While the story is an old one, it has elements that are common to our modern life. We show a brave front when all things are favorable to us; our confidence is unimpaired when every condition is to our liking; we break under a long severe strain and display weaknesses that betray our want of trust in God. It has been made evident to us these past five years that we have relied solely upon our own strength and prowess; we were sufficient unto ourselves for any eventuality. All this asurance has been tragically shaken, and some are of the mind of Elijah—there is nothing that can be done about it, and there is little light on the shadowy road that lies ahead. When we reach the stage where we assume this attitude, we are doomed to further trials and disappointments.

The situation that confronts us is not an insuperable one nor are its problems insoluble. To many, these years have been sobering ones, they have driven us to deeper reflection, and the future that lies before us will bring either increasing miseries or increasing happiness just in proportion as we read and apprehend the lessons our trials have sought to make clear to us. We have passed through other periods that tested our patience and our moral worth and we have survived them; we can do so again, but we will do it the sooner and the more effectively if we heed the summons to rise and eat because the journey is too great for us; which literally means recognizing anew our dependence upon Him in whose hand are the issues of life. When America abandons her conceits and undue self-confidence and turns with deepened devotion to God and obeys more completely His will, she will be on the road to better and happier days. That was a great word spoken of old: "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom; let not the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord."

PROHIBITION FACTS. Compiled by W. G. Calderwood. Art paper. Pp. 96. Published by Prohibition Facts Service, 986 Fifteenth Avenue, Minneapolis, Minnesota. Price, 10 cents.

Now that repeal has had one year of life, we are able to assemble cold and perhaps startling statistics and observed conditions. We have not delivered our coast from rum-runners; drinking has not decreased; the open saloon has refused to keep out; the deaths through drunken drivers, if we may depend upon figures, have not decreased, but in some states have alarmingly augmented. There is now the old problem of protecting the prohibition states from the corruption of neighboring states where the open sale is prevalent. In short, we miss all the high-sounding assurances of the political leaders that we should have temperance, instead of enforced total abstinence, a happy people no longer bound by the shackles of a law they both despised and openly flaunted, a new generation having high ideals of sobriety and a regime of popular unity, the financial proceeds of which incidentally would relieve our tax burdens. This little book will give us the pros and cons of this burning problem. And it will answer as well the many prohibition questions.

DECISIVE DAYS IN SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS PROGRESS: By Bishop Adna Wright Leonard (M. E. Church). Cloth. Pp. 154. The Abingdon Press, New York City, N. Y. Price, $1.50.

The good Bishop has strong words to say as to Prohibition in his chapter, "A Nation Betrayed." He has a virile message on Christ-Centered Religious Education. Christian Missions come to the fore in a well-treated discussion of the effects of the present indifference to the needs of the unreached pagans of the world. Not an adaptation of Christianity to the prevailing religions in the mission fields, but an outright presentation of our Lord Jesus as the salvation of men. His quotations of Stanley Jones and Kagawa of Japan are sufficient to insure our hearty commendation. Said Dr. Jones, some years ago, "Christ is not a good way, a better way, the best way. He is THE way." And Kagawa is stirring Japan, and will the entire Christian world by his fervent appeal for individual devotion to, and affection for, a crucified, risen and ascended Lord.

The opening chapter on The War Menace and The Answer, written ere the crisis the world is now facing, may well stir our minds and hearts with a sense of the terror which may await us. The virile Bishop has sounded a tocsin to thinking men, who are willing to listen to sound words, and act according to wise counsel. Get the book. It is worthwhile.

MISSION STATIONS SEND IN BLUE BOX OFFERINGS.

National Council Treasurer Announces Several Interesting Receipts from Various Sources.

Among recent offerings received by the National Council Treasurer are these:

From the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Paul's Church, Rome, Italy, $69.26 for the United Thank Offering.

From Holy Innocents' Curch, a mission of twelve communicants at Trenton, Tennessee, $70 for the Challenge. This is extra, the mission having already paid its diocesan and general missionary quota for 1935 of the same amount.

From Canon A. H. Beer, of San Pedro de Macoris, Dominican Republic, a total of $61.35.

Apologizing for the delay in sending the offering the Canon wrote: "We have been waiting until the sugar crop had finished in the hope that we might increase the offerings a little from such small sums as our people could manage to give. When you realize that the ordinary laborer must cut 2,000 pounds of sugar cane for eighteen cents, and is lucky if he can cut two tons per day, especially if he has a family to support, he must sacrifice if he gives anything at all.

From another source came $10 "which was for a permanent wave that I am not having."

SOUTH AFRICAN MISSION CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARY.

The mission at Qanqu, in the parish of Qumbu, South Africa, has just celebrated its fiftieth anniversary by completing an addition to the church.

Everybody at the mission, from the chief and the oldest grandmother down to the children, helped to make bricks and to bring timber and iron from thirty miles away, and sand from the river five miles away. Seventeen hundred people attended the opening service, seven hundred of whom were communicants.

The regular offering, including many special gifts, was presented to the Bishop, including seven oxen, many sheep, 400 pounds of potatoes, 200 pounds of sugar, and several pounds of tea.

The Bishop gracefully returned all these gifts to the people, and they had a great feast.

The Bishop confirmed nearly 300 candidates, presented by the Rev. Hugh J. Pringle, who is priest in charge. The Diocese is aided by the Scottish Episcopal Church and the S. P. G.

The new Bishop of Bloemfontein, South Africa, Dr. Howe-Browne, succeeding Bishop Carey, had three confirmations during the summer when nearly 1,400 were confirmed.

Eighty-one children, nearly all of whose parents are Buddhist or non-Christian, are attending our mission school at Mauna, Hawaii.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

Prayer for the Missionary District of Arizona.

Almighty and most merciful God, we humbly beseech Thee, for the merits of Thy Dear Son, to pour out Thy Holy Spirit upon Bishop Mtichell and all of our missionaries in Arizona, and to crown their labors with success in the gathering of souls into Thy Kngdom, to the honor and praise of Thy glorious name, who art Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. NEW CHAPEL IN NEVADA TO BE COMPLETED SOON.

Building Made Possible by Gifts from the Woman's Auxiliary and the Church Building Fund.

A new chapel, named St. Alban's, at Yernington, Nevada, is nearing completion, and is expected to be ready for use early in October. The Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Thomas Jenkins, D. D., supervised the construction, and did much actual labor in the desert sun with the other workmen.

The building when completed will have a chapel at one end, a social hall in the center which can be thrown into the chapel when necessary, and a four-room apartment at the other end for the resident deaconess.

The chapel was made possible by gifts from the Woman's Auxiliary, from the American Church Building Fund, and from individuals.

Deaconess Elizabeth C. Fracker, who opened the work at Wells, has been appointed to inaugurate the work in this field. The Rev. Syd Temple, Jr., now a deacon, will be the visiting clergyman, with oversight by the Bishop, until such time as Mr. Temple is advanced to the priesthood.

Yenington is the county seat of Lyon County, and is one of the more permanent farming areas of the state. There are now about forty parishes and missions in the district of Nevada, covering an area of 109,740 square miles.

THE REV. J. LAMB DOTY VISITS LEPER STATION.

Reports Value of Chapel Built by the Superintendent and Her Many Friends in Honolulu.

The Rev. J. Lamb Doty, missionary at large in the District of Honolulu, following a recent visit to the Kalihi Receiving Station for Lepers, reports a marked improvement in the mental and spiritual attitude of the patients as a result of regular religious services made possible by the erection of a chapel.

The superintendent, a Mrs. Clinton, seeing the need of such a chapel, set to work to provide one, and, through her own gifts and the gifts of some of her friends, the building was finally erected. It is a churchly edifice, well furnished, and accommodates about one hundred people.

This receiving station is known throughout the world in connection with the treatment of leprosy, and is one of the many institutions visited by Mr. Doty and Bishop Littell.

Lepers are treated at the Kalihi Station, and eventually discharged or sent to the colony on Molokai.

This is another instance of the Church's work along a line considered an essential for missionary work today.

In the Territory of Hawaii our Church maintains no fewer than twelve other institutions of various kinds, and thirty parishes and missions, manned by twenty-five priests and other workers.

OLDEST CHURCH WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

When a parish west of the Mississippi River celebrates its hundredth anniversary, as Christ Church, Boonville, in West Missouri, has just done, it is really an ancient parish in this young country of ours, where, as Oscar Wilde said, our youth is our oldest tradition.

In 1835, when Bishop Kemper became our first missionary Bishop and went out to his vast jurisdiction, he found one church in Missouri, Christ Church, St. Louis.

The Rev. F. F. Peake, head of a small girls' school, was holding occasional services in Boonville, where for several years there had been a nucleus of a church. There shortly developed what is said to be the oldest Episcopal Parish west of St. Louis.

The chalice used at the recent celebration is one that Bishop Kemper presented to the parish nearly a century ago.

The Boonville Daily Times issued a Christ Church Centennial Edition, and devoted the entire second section to the parish history and the diocesan convention. The Rev. Jesse Roy Gregg is rector.

The Diocese of West Missouri was organized in 1889, and today has thirty priests and more than forty parishes and missions. Annual contributions amount to about $200,000.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

NATIONAL COUNCIL MEETING SEPTEMBER 18-20.

The National Council, at its meeting on September 18-20 in New York, asked the whole Church to concentrate on a program of three objectives, in terms of Christian Discipleship, Christian Stewardship, and Christian Partnership. Following a new procedure, all department matters were dealt with as far as possible on the first day and evening, leaving a clear day and a half for discussion of the Council's work as a whole in its relation to the Church. The outcome of this long conference is embodied in the following statement adopted for presentation to the people of the Church:

The Church's life since General Convention, has been marked by an increase in interest and support. It is plain that the faith and spirit of the Church are responding to the program of inspiration and education inaugurated by the Commission on the Forward Movement.

The reports submitted to the Council indicate that as yet the improvement has not proceeded far enough to provide for the degree of restoration in parochial, diocesan and general Church work which the General Convention set as a goal for this Triennium.

It was clearly the intention of General Convention that the Church should regard the $2,700,000 Annual Budget as the base for a program of restoration, similarly that it should regard the Emergency Schedule of $2,313,118 as a "stand still" program, and anything less as a Budget of disaster.

Even the minimum program called for an increase of 25 per cent over the actual contributions from the dioceses for the Church's General work in 1934. Some dioceses reached or exceeded this mark, yet the sum of the expectations eventually reported an advance of only nine per cent. Happily the amount needed to insure the advance of 25 per cent was secured from individual gifts. Thus the "stand still" program was anchored, and the payments on Expectations to September 1, would indicate that there will be no deficit in the administration of the General Church Program in 1935.

The Council has given preliminary consideration to the Operating Budget for 1936. The officers of the Council have complied with the instructions of General Convention to secure from each diocese the acceptance of an objective for 1936, based upon shown capacity to pay and a willingness to accept a generous share of $2,700,000.

The results of this inquiry are frankly disappointing, if not discouraging. In spite of the improvement in the spirit and faith of the Church and in spite of the fact that the present year has brought a marked recovery in general conditions throughout the United States, which is signalized by increased spending in all directions, the sum of the Objectives which the dioceses have been willing to accept is still below the amount needed to provide for the "stand still" program.

We are confident that the results of the Annual Canvass will exceed the amounts represented by the Objectives tentatively assumed and that the Church can and will by its gifts for missions in 1936 advance toward the goal of restoration. However, the Council feels that the Church should know that the estimated sum to be realized from these Objectives is at present $200,000 less than the amount needed to continue the present operating budget and $600,000 less than the amount needed to provide for the $2,700,000 Budget of Restoration.

The Council proposes to each diocese and parish as the guide for its corporate effort and to every Church member as the rule of his personal endeavor this threefold program:

First, in terms of Christian Discipleship.

The adoption and the realization of the aims of the Forward Movement; recognizing that at the bottom of all the weakness in our organized Christianity is the feebleness of our apprehension of Christ the Saviour and the limitations of our acceptance of the demands He makes upon us.

Second, in terms of Christian Stewardship.

The application and the prosecution of the Annual Every Member Canvass, not as a mere financial campaign, but as an annual event in a sustained program of education in Christian living and Christian Missions.

Third, in terms of Christian Partnership.

A resolution to share whatever increase of life and wealth the new day brings. The sincere practice of this simple rule by individuals, parishes and dioceses would work a miracle for us and do as much as anything to banish all necessity for quotas and apportionments and lead us into the joy and satisfaction of a great partnership of recovery.

Departmental Affairs.

On the Bishop of Chicago's motion, the Council asked the Field Department to present to the December meeting an outline program for expanded promotion. The Council also asked the President to request the judgment and advice of the House of Bishops, bearing on this question, at their approaching annual meeting in Houston on November 5. The House has a committee, consisting of Bishop Ingley, Maxon, Davis, Mitchell and Larned, appointed by the Presiding Bishop to study the responsibility of the Bishops for promotion in their dioceses and report to November meeting of the House.

Among the departmental affairs dealt with by the Council, the work and policies of the Department of Religious Education were presented in a comprehensive statement by the department's executive, the Rev. Dr. D. A. McGregor. The Council members greeted his report with enthusiasm. The department's aims, methods, and plans in regard to college work, young people's work, missionary education, work among the isolated, and especially the problems of Church schools—in short, the whole process of religious education and the basis on which it rests, were outlined with clarity and precision. The Council ordered copies of this report sent to all Bishops for their information before the meeting of the House in November; also the similar statement concerning the Social Service Department made by the executive, the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, at the April meeting of the Council.

Foreign Mission Questions.

Among the important foreign mission questions before the Council was the present acute difficulty of St. Luke's and St. Elizabeth's Hospitals, Shanghai, caused by the closing of four American-owned banking institutions, known as the Raven group, in Shanghai. The amount involved for the hospitals is some $400,000 United States currency, and the disaster also affects a number of the Church's other institutions in China. It has meant the complete cessation of the hospital building program which had already begun. At the urgent cabled request of Bishop Graves and the mission treasurer, Mr. M. P. Walker, the National Council's treasurer, Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, leaves immediately for Shanghai and will also take advantage of the opportunity to confer with Bishops in the Orient on financial and other missionary problems. On motion of Mr. William R. Castle, the Council expressed its appreciation of Dr. Franklin's long-continued services and wished him every success on his approaching difficult mission.

Two New Missionaries at No Cost.

As at the last Council meeting, the Foreign Missions Department asked the appointment of two missionaries who will go out at no cost to the Council. Mr. Brinkley Snowden of Knoxville, Tennessee, a trained agriculturalist, a young man of unusual ability and devotion, has been eager to work in the South India Diocese of Dornakal; those who know the field believe that agricultural work is of great importance there; and Bishop Azariah of Dornakal has requested Mr. Snowden's appointment. The Council has no funds available for such an appointment, but Mr. Snowden is able and willing to finance himself and the Council was delighted to give him an official appointment. Mr. Snowden was presented to the Council and expressed his keen appreciation of the appointment which enabled him to go out as a representative of his Church. He sailed from New York on September 19.

The other appointment above mentioned is that of a woman physician, Dr. Janet Anderson of Grace Church, Mt. Airy, Philadelphia, who will relieve Dr. Hawkins K. Jenkins of Sagada, Philippine Islands, when he goes on a much needed furlough. The Sagada Hospital, though small, is carrying a crowded schedule of work, with some 25,000 treatments a year. It would be exceedingly unfortunate to let the work lapse during a furlough, but the Council is unable to finance the appointment of a substitute, nor is it easy to secure a qualified volunteer for a temporary service. Not only has a volunteer appeared for the term, but a gift has been received to cover salary, outfit and travel. Dr. Anderson is chief surgeon in the Philadelphia Woman's Hospital.

The Budget.

The budget for 1936, for the total approved by General Convention, $2,700,000, was adopted. This budget is, of course, subject to revision next February, when reports from the dioceses are in hand; and the Council voted that such revision should be upon the principles established by General Convention as contained in the report of its Committee on Budget and Program.

The treasurer reported legacies received since the April meeting of the Council, including $1,000 designated for domestic missions, $3,000 for foreign missions, nearly $6,000 undesignated, and over $41,000 for investment.

General Convention directed that one-half the amount of undesignated legacies received by the Council should be appropriated to the Forward Movement Commission. Half the amount so far received, $7,000, has been paid and in addition the Council voted to advance a sum not to exceed $20,000 in 1935. The Forward Movement Commission has voted to reimburse the Council for any sums advanced in excess of the Commission's share.

The Council learned with gratification that a trust fund has been established by a friend which will give the Council an income of $2,000 a year.

Since the death of Dr. Rudolf B. Tuesler, former director of St. Luke's Medical Center, Tokyo, the Rt. Rev. Norman S. Binsted, Bishop of the Tohoku, has been acting director. Bishop Binsted, addressing the Council at an evening session, brought an impressive first-hand account of the enormous activity carried on by the Medical Center, its high standard of work, and the increasingly important place the Center holds in Japan.

A scholarship was voted by the Council for Dr. Tuesler's son, Rudolf B. Teusler, who is now preparing himself to follow his father's profession.

Since the last meeting of the Council, Bishop Matthews of New Jersey had returned from a journey around the world during which he visited a number of the missions. He brought to the Council his enthusiastic impressions of the fine quality of the mission staffs as he met them and of the work he saw, offset by deplorable restrictions of income and inadequate equipment. He also expressed his desire that some further help might be given toward the education of the children of missionaries. The Council referred the matter to the Foreign Missions Department, asking that steps be taken to learn where additional scholarships may be available in American schools.

BISHOP PERRY SENDS OUT A CALL FOR PRAYER.

Responding to the gravity of news from the Mediterranean area, the Presiding Bishop on September 20, addressed to the Bishops a brief letter asking that opportunity be given for constant intercession that the nations seek with one accord the reign of peace on earth.

Commenting on the situation, the Bishop said, "The spirit of war will be overcome by no power other than the Spirit of Christ in the hearts of the people. The citizenship of a nation whose minds are bent on peace cannot be embroiled against their wills. We shall pray that a fellowship found in Christ may supersede all bounds of nationality and race and destroy the frictions which cause conflict. Certainly Christian people remembering the horrors of the World War will unite in a universal cry to God out of sincere hearts that upon this earth His Will be done and that His Kingdom of love and righteousness and peace be established among us."

The Bishop's Letter.

My dear Bishop:

At the request of many I had prepared a call asking for the observance of Armistice Day as a time of prayer for peace.

In view of the present international crisis, I am sending instead a call for special supplication at the present time. Will you please use it as you think best, and if you wish, issue it to your clergy with such suggestion and request as you will offer.

With my earnest hope that our people generally may be led to unite in public and private prayers for the peace of the world, I am

Faithfully yours,
James DeWolf Perry,
Presiding Bishop.

September 20, 1935.

Presiding Bishop's Call to Prayer For Peace.

At a moment when the menace of War is threatening the world the Church of Christ should be found in prayer for Peace. I address this message to the dioceses of our Church, asking that opportunity be given for constant intercession.

In Cathedrals, Parish Churches and Missions, let prayers for universal peace be offered in the Eucharist, in Litanies, and in periods of silent petition. Let our people lift up their hearts in supplication to Almighty God that hostilities be averted, that the spirit of aggression yield to the spirit of counsel and understanding, and that the Nations seek with one accord the reign of peace on earth.

James DeWolf Perry,
Presiding Bishop.

BROADCAST SERVICE OF INTERCESSION FROM WESTMINSSTER ABBEY.

There is reason to be grateful to the Dean and Chapter of Westminster Abbey for arranging a special service of Intercession in the Abbey on the eve of the meeting of the Council of the League of Nations. To the B.B.C. thanks are also due for rearranging their program so that the service might be broadcast.

A very large congregation assembled in the Abbey and the service, which was conducted by the Dean, Dr. Foxley Norris, was joined in by the whole company.

When the clergy and choir had taken their place we were bidden to—

Remember the Presence of God.

And this is the message that we have heard from Him and declare unto you, that God is light and in Him is no darkness at all; if we walk in light as He is light, we have fellowship with one another.

God is Love, and everyone that loveth is born of God and knoweth God.

God is Power, and they that wait upon Him shall renew their strength.

God is Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. Amen.

Beautifully the choir sang Bishop Heber's plea—

O, most merciful!
O, most bountiful!
God the Father Almighty!
By the Redeemer's
Sweet intercession.
Hear us, help us, when we cry.

Great Shrine of Our Race.

The Dean, with the congregation still standing, said:

"Brethren, we are here met together in this great shrine of our race to lay before God the Father of all mankind the cause of peace and concord among men; and especially to implore His strength and wisdom for the Council of the League of Nations, for our statesmen and representatives, and for all who bear responsibility for the leadership and government of mankind; that, by the illumination of His Spirit, they may order all things in peace and righteousness to the glory of God and the welfare of His people. In the faith and name of our Saviour Christ, let us lift up our hearts in hope and trust to Him in Whose will is our peace, the Sovereign Ruler of the world, Creator, Redeemer and Sanctifier; to whom be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen."

We next sang, "O God, our help in ages past." This was followed by an appropriate Lesson taken from Revelation 21 and 22.

Then came the hymns, "I vow to thee, my country." Intercessions followed for the King, Ministers of the Crown, Council of the League, "that the nations may be free from fear, suspicion and antagonism." Other hymns included "To thee, our God, we fly" and "City of God how broad and far."

Go Forth in Peace.

The Dean, standing at the high altar, pronounced the Blessing—

Go forth into the world in peace; be of good courage; hold fast that which is good; render to no man evil for evil; strengthen the faint hearted; support the weak; help the afflicted; honour all men; love and serve the Lord, rejoicing in the power of the Holy Spirit. And the Blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be upon you, and remain with you always. Amen.

It was an inspiring experience which those who were actually present in the Abbey and the hundreds of thousands who listened are not likely to forget.

THE BIBLE IN A NEW SETTING.

The General Synod of the Anglican Church in New Zealand has passed a resolution calling for the printing of the Bible in a form which, though not new, has never been common. I once had a "Paragraph Bible" printed, I think, by Bagster, but it was worn out long ago. Here are some of the New Zealand proposals:—

"That indentations, etc., for chapters and verses should be abolished and chapter and verse be relegated to the margin for reference purposes,

"That poetry be printed as poetry and dialogue as dialogue,

"That quotation marks be used."

With these suggestions I entirely concur. Quotations from the Old Testament in the New would be best indicated by the use of a special type, as they are in the Bible Society's Greek Testament. The parallelisms of the Psalms would be brought out by being printed as lines of poetry. Another New Zealand suggestion is:—

"That the double columns be abolished and the type allowed to run right across the page."

The value of this depends on the proportion of the size of the type to the breadth of the page. Small type on a broad page makes wearisome reading. The eye should be able to take in the whole line of type at once. I myself should like to have the subjects of sections printed as cross headings. These would help in finding any particular passage. The New Zealanders make other proposals which are more debatable, but the above would help to make the Bible more attractive to new readers. Older ones, of course, will prefer the setting with which they are familiar.

MISSIONARIES IN ABYSSINIA.

Letters were received in London last week from missionaries in Abyssinia, but in no case is there any suggestion that they intend to leave the country. Mr. T. B. Bevan, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, writes that he and his wife have "no anxieties whatever." The Rev. A. F. Matthew, Chaplain to the Embassy at Addis Ababa, writes reporting on Church matters, services held, etc., but makes no reference to the political situation. Mr. Alfred Buxton writes to the Bible Churchmen's Missionary Society, foreseeing that things may become difficult, but that he and his fellow missionaries hope to be allowed to stay at their posts. "The decision has been left to him," said an official of the Society to a reporter. "He is a man of experience and wisdom, and will best know what to do as the situation changes." The Sudan Interior Mission, which early in the crisis cabled its missionaries a recommendation that they should remain at their posts at the same time promising facilities to any who decided to leave, has so far received no application for such facilities. Of the twenty British reported at present to be in Addis Ababa, ten are attached to the Embassy, and the other ten are believed to be misisonaries.

THE ETHIOPIAN MINISTER IN LONDON.
A Personal Sketch.

By Dr. H. M. Weitbrecht Stanton, in Church of England Newspaper.

Friends who have responded to the appeal of Dr. Charles Martin for prayers on his behalf may like to hear further particulars of his varied career.

When the fortress of Magdala was taken by Sir Charles Napier in April, 1868, the Emperor Theodore and his party fled in terror to the castle, but suffered no harm; only a little child, Warqneh Eshetu by name, strayed away in the confusion. He was picked up by a kindly British officer who took him with his returning regiment to India. There he was adopted by another benefactor, a Colonel Martin, who gave him his name and put him under the care of a notable missionary lady, Mrs. Robert Clark, of Amritsar. By her he was sent to the Baring High School of the C.M.S. at Batala Panjab. There he was confirmed, and after matriculation passed through the Medical College, Lahore. After two years' service as sub-assistant Surgeon his friends felt that he should have a full degree, and in 1891 he qualified at Edinburgh and Glasgow. Thence he entered the Burma Medical Service, in which he worked till 1920.

During periods of leave Dr. Martin was able to visit Ethiopia repeatedly, twice taking part in expeditions to Somaliland, once acting as surgeon to the British Legation at Addis Ababa, and on another occasion attending the Emperor Menelek. Meanwhile he was able to establish contact with his family. At first they refused to regard this English-looking gentleman as a true Abyssinian, but in a family council he was identified by his grandmother through a birth-mark and received into the clan. In 1910, he was married to an Ethiopian lady who has given him a family of twelve children, mostly educated in England. On his retirement from service in Burma, Dr. Martin settled in Abyssinia, and in 1923 he entered the Imperial Service, in which he was employed as Minister of Education, of Health, and of Public Works. He accompanied Ras Tafari (then Crown Prince of Ethiopia) to England in 1924, and in 1927 he went on a special mission to U.S.A. in connection with the Tsana Dam. Since 1930, Dr. Martin has been Governor of the Provinces of Charachar and Dankali. Among other things he has been working to improve the revenue administration on the basis of his Indian experience and to encourage missionary effort by school and hospital. This year has come the call to set on foot an Ethiopian Legation in London.

THE ORDER OF THE SANGREAL.
Arch From Arthur's Castle Dedicated.

For heroic service to God and humanity through the Church, the Cross of Honor of the Order of the Sangreal was awarded to Mary Helena Cornwall Legh, of Kusatsu, Japan, by the Grand Chapter of the Order at St. Stephen's Church, Chicago, September 15.

The citation reads:

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY OFFICERS ELECTED.

The National Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, in session over the week-end of September 21, elected new officers for the coming year: Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce of New York City, chairman; Mrs. Julius E. Kinney of Denver, vice-chairman; Miss Mary L. Pardee of New Haven, Conn., secretary.

MARY HELENA CORNWALL LEGH of Kusatsu, Japan, Diocese of North Tokyo; because she went alone into a colony of lepers, outcast and hopeless, bearing to them faith, comfort and healing; saving them from bitterness and despair; protecting their children from taint of body, mind and soul. For them and for their salvation she descended into hell, bringing them forth redeemed in body and in soul, in the name and by the power of the Son of God.

"This cross will be forwarded to her bishop, to be presented by him in the name of the Order of the Sangreal, acting for the Church Universal.

"Irwin St. John Tucker, Grand Master."

The ceremony at which the award was announced and confirmed was signalized further by the dedication of the Arch of Arthur, containing a block of porphyry from the ruins of the castle at Tintagel, Cornwall, where King Arthur was born. In a deep niche above the block of porphyry is a large wooden torch, sent by the Fellowship of Loyal Knights of King Arthur from their magnificent Hall at Tintagel. Beside the niche is a block of limestone in which are carved the words, "For God, Country and Home," the American form of the Arthurian oath. Embedded in the top of the arch is a head of King Arthur carved in stone and a grapevine clambers upon the arch.

The British Consul in Chicago, Hon. Robert Ross, delivered a striking address on the meaning of the Arthurian legend today. The Rev. Thomas Anderson, who has just returned from Palestine, told of his taking a stone from the bed of the Jordan River, just at the spot where Christ was traditionally baptized, and bringing it to present it to St. Stephen's Church. The stone has been imbedded in the baptismal font, with the words written on it in Hebrew, "Stone from the midst of the Jordan."

Besides these gifts, a cross made of rose-colored granite from ruins of a castle near Teheran, Persia, and sent by the British Consul Simmons, in Teheran, and an ikon from a ruined Russian Church, were dedicated. The ikon was the gift of the Rev. Rowland F. Nye.

After the addresses, the consecrated chalice was brought from the small altar and placed upon the high altar by the grand master. In its presence he proclaimed the choice of the Grand Council for the Cross of Honor, which was solemnly confirmed by the assembly. Then the whole gathering assembled in front of the arch of Arthur, and when it had been dedicated and opened, went through it one by one, each person touching the porphyry block, the words of the oath, and his own breast.

They followed the Cross, Flag and Lights through the Garden of memory to the state altar in the garden shrine. There they repeated the oath of allegiance to Faith, Flag and Family, the latter symbolized by the mingling of the flame of the Sangreal torches by two persons, and man and woman, not previously known to one another.

The arch was built, together with the Friendly fountain dedicated during the summer by the Girls' Friendly chapters of Chicago, by a generous gift of Mrs. Anna B. Gregory of Chicago.

The House of Bishops will meet in Houston, Texas, on November 5 and 7 to consider the resignation of three Bishops, one of which is Bishop Woodcock, and also to attend to such business as may rightfully come before that august body.

Bishop Woodcock says, "After long and prayerful consideration I have notified the Standing Committee of the Diocese of my resignation."

The Canon Law of the Church requires that a Bishop must give sixty days' notice of intention to resign. It was necessary, therefore, that Bishop Woodcock should act immediately in order that the House of Bishops at its coming meeting might give it attention now, whereas, if it were delayed it would have to be held over until the meeting in the fall of 1936 and the Diocese would not be able to choose his successor until 1937. The Bishop adds, "It seems wisest to take the step I have and it has not been painless."

This news has not been unexpected. On account of advancing years, and the Bishop is now past eighty years of age, it has been known for some time that such action has been contemplated but, nevertheless, it is a shock to most of the citizens of Kentucky who knew him so well and revered him with sincere devotion. He came to the Kentucky Diocese in January, 1905, shortly after he had been consecrated on January 25.

The Bishop was born in New Britain, Conn. His first charge upon entering the ministry was Church of the Ascension, New Haven, then Christ Church, Ansonia, Conn., then rector of St. John's Church, Detroit, and was the rector there when chosen Bishop of Kentucky. In his first public address he said, "I have not come here to take the place of Bishop Dudley, I have come to make a place for myself." After serving his people for more than thirty years there is no dissent from the opinion that he has succeeded in making a most wonderful place for himself. Not only in his church but in the civil life of the community. No citizen of Louisville is better known than the Bishop and there is seldom any civic movement or gathering without his being a part of it.

Under the direction of Bishop Woodcock the new John N. Norton Memorial Infirmary and Nurses Home were erected, also the Orphanage of the Good Shepherd for Boys.

Bishop Woodcock is one of the outstanding Bishops of the American Church. For many years he has been sought after as a forceful speaker and in the East has been much sought after when strcng men have been needed for important undertakings. He was the Lenten Noon Day speaker at Garrick Theatre, Philadelphia, for twenty-nine years of the time he has been Bishop, having missed last Lent on account of illness and that is the first one he has missed.

Bishop Woodcock has long taken an active interest in the University of Louisville, being the founder of the Woodcock Society of that institution.

There are already many expressions of sorrow at his retirement from active control of the Diocese, but there are more expressions of affection and well wishes for peace and comfort in his remaining years.

Heart-Stirring Conference—Just What is the Forward Movement?

Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio, chairman of the Forward Movement Commission, and Clifford P. Morehouse, editor of The Living Church, also a member of the Commission, in two diocesan conferences, one for clergy and the other for laymen, at St. George's School, Newport, answered the Church-wide question, "Just What is the Forward Movement?" And they sent forty priests and seventy laymen home with the conviction that the Episcopal Church will move forward as soon as they and their fellow communicants begin to live a Christ-centered life. Such a heart-stirring conference has not been held in this diocese in many a day.

In his very first session with the clergy, the Bishop, in outlining the reason for the Forward Movement—its scope, general principles and plan—placed the responsibility for its success upon the individual. He said it was no campaign, nor drive. The Commission wasn't looking around for the largest auditoriums in the great cities to present eloquent preachers. But it was asking everyone in the Church to inquire of himself, "What is my part in God's great forward movement in this confused age?"

In brief, Bishop Hobson's challenge is this:

"Christ requires of us that we follow Him and learn of Him, and make sacrifices to service Him. It is our duty to discover the truth and proclaim it. The duty is summed up in Education and Enlistment—Learning and Dedication.

"There are these seven steps in enlistment or dedication: Turn, Follow, Learn, Pray, Serve, Worship, Share. They represent the things the Lord and the Church have held essential from the beginning. The most important spiritual leaders have been those who have woven them into a rule of life and lived according to it. Discipleship makes this demand upon us, a demand all the more impressive if we remember that we are always in the presence of Christ, who knows what we are and how faithful we are to our obligations.

"Christianity is not a subscription to any faith—not a view—but a life. Your part is, first of all, to live it. It will help us if we set aside a definite time every day for a check-up. The time must be adequate to allow us to turn our minds away from the things that confuse. Reading some of the psalms will help. I set down on a sheet of paper a list of the more important things I set out to do the day before and then check myself up. So far as possible I rate myself in terms of the seven steps, and see what progress, if any, I have made in them. There is always something to be changed, to be improved. It is best, I think, to take one fault or problem at a time and attack it day after day until it is conquered. Some days I find my grade as low as 61, and once it rose as high as 93, but that was a rare experience. In taking the first and great positive step of following the Master, we clergy are apt to forget the joy of His life. We are too dismal. 'Joy is the flag we fly from the staff of our lives when the King is in residence.'

"We fall far short in our third step—learn. We fail to stretch our minds to take in new truths. In our daily check-up we should put down what intellectual tasks we have had before us, what books, for example, we intend to read.

"Pray. No progress can be made in Christian life without prayer. It has meant so little to us because we give so little time to it. We don't go through the agony our Lord went through when he prayed. There will be dry times, of course, but our trouble is the dryness threatens to be perpetual.

"Serve. A ministry of go-giving is better than of go-getting. We clergy are given to thinking that we are leading pretty decent lives because, as we say, we are giving our lives for others. Real service must actually cost us something.

"Worship. We should convince ourselves and our people of the need of daily worship. Corporate worship is essential to the life of the Church.

"Share. The supreme example of sharing is the Master on the Cross. Perhaps the loyal Christian who is sharing all he has with others wonders at times if they are worth it. In that way comes the temptation to turn our backs on people. There is a tradition that the devil climbed up on the Cross and whispered to the Saviour, 'They ain't worth it. They ain't worth it'. We must keep our faith in the divine nature of man. I try to find some way by which I can share with someone between whom and me there is a barrier.

"A life of discipleship brings joy because of the sense of companionship with One who understands and guides me. There will be no Forward Movement until a new life comes to you and me. We sometimes think the Church can easily go forward without any effort on our part. But that is impossible. Kagawa, when asked what Japan needed most, replied: 'A million men with a flame in their hearts.' Our Church will go forward when we have one hundred thousand men with flames in their hearts."

On Friday morning the Bishop discussed "The Forward Movement in the Parish and Community"; in the afternoon "The Forward Movement and the Diocese"; in the evening "The Forward Movement and the Whole Church".

The vast amount of Bible reading and praying that the Church is now doing, judged by the hundreds of thousands of discipleship leaflets that are being ordered from the Commission, was referred to again and again in the conference. In the discussions the clergy took up almost every phase of their work for examination and suggestion. The result was they all went back to their parishes with enough ideas and enthusiasm to put their forces well up in the front of the Forward Movement.

Mr. Morehouse disclaimed any purpose of preaching to the clergy, but in a friendly and good-natured way he did state his convictions on preaching, discipleship, pastoral relationships and the Forward Movement in general.

"What we need," he said, "both clergy and laity, is a new and a deepened sense of loyalty—loyalty to faith, Bible, Church, Christ and the nation. And that loyalty should be expressed not through a code of morals, but through united service of the Master.

"We should be sincere not only in our religious life, but in all our spheres of activity. We should let people know exactly what we do believe." Mr. Morehouse quoted the recent condemnation of a certain type of "liberal" clergyman by the author of "Magic Art", who said that he had more respect for the black priest in Africa practicing the rites of Voodoo, in which he believes, than the frock-coated minister in a Fifth Avenue pulpit watering down his religion so as not to offend his people with such doctrines as the Virgin Birth.

"Another of our sins is that of unreality," Mr. Morehouse declared. "We do not relate our religion to everyday life. But Christianity by nature must be free to be at work in the world, or it isn't Christianity. It should mean so much to us we should be ready to fight for it."

Fifty-eighth Anniversary Celebration on St. Michael and All Angels' Day.

Using the proceeds of a legacy left to the Church of St. Michael and All Angels in Baltimore by Miss Florence Hutson, the rector and vestry have completely redecorated and renovated the parish buildings.

The roof of the church has been put in good repair, the stone-work repainted and cleaned, and the windows renovated and made tight. The walls of the church building have been refinished in buff and cream caenstone, relieved with a border of blue and buff crosses, the rosettes at the base of the window arches being touched with gold, as are the carved stone crosses at the base of the ceiling arches. The great arch over the rude screen is decorated with rosettes of dull gold, the background a deep blue. The chancel arches are beautified with lines of mosaic in dull red and cream, relieved by touches of gold, while the arch immediately over the altar is finished with squares, in which are gold crosses, backed by light blue.

The lighting arrangements in the nave of the church have been completely redone, consisting of eight small wrought-iron fixtures, touched with gold, which contain large cream-tinted glass capsules, hung on wrought-iron chains. The great central fixture contains two smaller lights, with the addition of eight reflectors, directing the light through the larger circle. The pews, the rude screen and the lower wall panelling have been finished in walnut, the panelled wooden ceiling and arches conforming thereto.

In addition to this work, certain alterations have been made in the mechanical operation of the organ, which greatly improve its tone, and many minor repairs have been completed.

The work was done at an approximate cost of $7,500.00. The parish will celebrate the completion of the work on its fifty-eighth anniversary, St. Michael and All Angels' Day, the Right Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D., Bishop of Harrisburg, one of the former rectors of the parish, will preach at the main service on that day, and a parish dinner will be held on Monday, September 30, at which Bishop and Mrs. Edward T. Helfenstein will be the honor guests.

A year ago a completely new heating plant was put in the parish property, at a cost of $1,400.00.

The Rev. Harvey Peter Knudsen, a recent graduate of Nashotah House, has lately been appointed senior curate of the parish, and the Rev. Robert Cuthbert Kell, who graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary in June, has been appointed junior curate. The Church of St. Michael and All Angels, save for one year, has an unbroken record also of having met its missionary apportionment in full each year.

The Rev. Don Frank Fenn, D. D., is rector.

WEST TEXAS.
Rt. Rev. W. T. Capers, D. D., Bishop.

The Rector of St. Mark's, San Antonio, Declines Call.

The Rev. Arthur R. McKinstry, rector of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, Texas, has declined the call of All Saints' Parish, Pasedena, California, on the grounds that his work is not yet completed in San Antonio. The Rev. Mr. McKinstry has been rector of St. Mark's since 1931. Under his leadership the parish has gone forward. At a recent celebration of the eighty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the parish and the sixtieth anniversary of the opening of the present church structure, a fund of $60,000 was raised in the parish to commemorate these events. This fund will wipe out all parish indebtedness.

The rector of St. Mark's has taken an active interest in the civic affairs of the city. As chairman of the Health Committe of the Chamber of Commerce, he has conducted a survey of the health and vice conditions of the city, and has helped to formulate the program for the elimination of conditions detrimental to the health of the city, and he also has been active in diocesan affairs.

Women of the Diocese Hold Conference.

The fifth Annual Conference of Women of the Diocese of Michigan was held at Holiday House, Pine Lake, September 19 and 20. Some ninety women, representing parishes from eastern Michigan, were present to discuss the subject, "Building a Parish Utopia".

Mrs. Charles S. Williamson, of Chicago, Ill., president of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Province of the Midwest, was the leader of the Conference, and addresses were made by Archdeacon Leonard P. Hagger, the Rev. Warner L. Forsythe, of Birmingham, and Mrs. Ned Henry, of Detroit. Professor Altenberg, of the University of Michigan, gave an illustrated talk on South America. Mrs. Charles H. Brodt, of Detroit, furnished a program of piano music. Mrs. Ned Henry was general chairman of arrangements.

Progress in Spite of the Depression.

The parish report recently issued by St. Andrew's Church, Fort Pierce, reveals the progress made there since the beginning of the depression in 1929. There was at that time a debt of $10,000, and a communicant strength of only ninety-two. The debt has been reduced to one thousand dollars, and the number of communicants has grown to 315. This progress has been made in spite of the fact that in 1933 the church and rectory were seriously damaged by a storm necessitating another heavy expense. Last year, at the cost of $2,500, an addition was made to the church, which doubled the seating capacity. Recently new pews and other equipment have been installed. Four beautiful memorial windows have been added, completely finishing the church with memorial windows. The congregation is now planning to enlarge the sanctuary, and to build a small chapel in the church for weddings, baptisms and other special services.

One of the best things about this congregation is that it has paid in full its missionary apportionment every year during the depression.

In addition to the work at St. Andrews, the rector, the Rev. J. Mitchell Taylor, cares for the missionary work at Vero Beach. Here a new church has been erected at a cost of $10,000, and is completely paid for. It is considered one of the most beautiful small churches in Southern Florida. The rector is also interested in diocesan community welfare work. He is chairman of the Diocesan Field Board Department, and serves on a number of diocesan committees in Fort Pierce. He is director of the Oakland Park Hospital and a member of the St. Lucie County Welfare Association. It is interesting to note that 90 per cent of the total population of Fort Pierce are now Episcopalian. This is the highest percentage of any city of the diocese.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

New Rector at Church of the Good Shepherd.

After a vacancy of almost a year, the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, is to have the Rev. Malcolm W. Lockhart, D. D., of Baton Rouge, La., as its rector after the first of October.

The Rev. Dr. Lockhart in accepting the call to this, the largest parish in the Diocese of Florida, is entering upon a ministry of exceptional opportunity and challenge. As a graduate of the University of the South, both in its Academic and Seminary departments, he is already well known in Florida, where so many of the clergy and laity have also secured their higher education in this institution.

Dr. Lockhart will succeed the Rev. Thomas E. Dudney, who resigned last January on account of ill health. He will bring to Jacksonville with him his wife and mother and two young sons of high school age. One daughter, Mrs. Bruce Campbell, resides in Durham, South Africa, and a second daughter is now a junior in the medical school of Louisiana State University.

The new rector received his Bachelor of Arts degree and his Bachelor of Divinity degree from Sewanee and was ordained by the late Bishop C. K. Nelson, of Atlanta, twenty-five years ago. For several years after his ordination Dr. Lockhart served mission stations in North Georgia and Mississippi. In 1913 he became rector of St. Paul's Church, Batesville, Arkansas, but resigned this charge to become a Chaplain in the United States Army during the World War.

He served overseas during the war as chaplain of the Fifty-third Pioneer Infantry of the First Army Corps and was in the two main offensive drives of St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne, and returned at the close of the war to Camp Dix, New Jersey.

At Camp Dix, Dr. Lockhart received his discharge and then accepted the rectorship of St. John's Church, Fort Smith, Arkansas, where he remained until accepting the call to St. James' Church, Baton Rouge, in 1924.

He has been an active participant in many civic enterprises while in Baton Rouge. He has been Chaplain of the Baton Rouge American Legion Post for a number of years.

In 1932 Dr. Lockhart received his Master's degree in English from Louisiana State University and in 1933 he was awarded the Doctor of Divinity degree by the University of the South.

He is now serving on the Board of Regents of the University of the South, a small governing board of fifteen members. He has been a member of this board for the past four years.

Dr. Lockhart and his household will come to Jacksonville on October 1, and it is expected that he will be a great addition to the clerical forces of the diocese.

Property Damage at Cedar Keys.

The Bishop of Florida has just returned from a visit to Cedar Keys, a small fishing village on an island in the Gulf of Mexico, some 150 miles from Jacksonville.

This little fishing village was the only point in the Diocese of Florida that felt any serious results from the tropical hurricane which so recently visited the State.

Bishop Juhan reports that no lives were lost in the hurricane and that property damage to Christ Church consisted in a partial removal of the roof only. This, he has been assured, will be replaced by the F. E. R. A. Howard Mueller, a candidate for Holy Orders, who has spent the summer months in Cedar Keys, rendered heroic service to the entire population during the night of terror and desolation.

A number of old buildings in the town were blown down, but the greatest discomfort to the people came from soaked mattresses and bedding and the general fear due to the high winds and rain.

Howard Mueller has now returned to Sewanee to pursue his studies in the Seminary, and the Rev. Fred G. Yerkes, recently ordained to the diaconate, has taken up his residence in this small outpost of the diocese.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. Henry J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Returned Missionary to Speak.

Miss Louise Schilling, who has just returned from two years of volunteer missionary work in China, will speak to the Woman's Auxiliary of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Decatur, October 1.

She served in St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai, relieving a member of the office force, who was on furlough. She visited in Japan, and on her way home stopped in Manila, where she saw our mission work there. Her boat called at Singapore, Siam, Ceylon, Port Said. She also visited Cairo and Jerusalem. In her talk she will tell of the Church's work in the Far East.

A member of St. James' Church, Marietta, Miss Schilling has served the Diocesan Auxiliary as chairman of the Rural Work, and has attended many conferences held relative to this problem.

The Woman's Auxiliary of Holy Trinity is comprised of every woman of the church, and is a very active branch of the diocesan group.

"Family Worship" Sunday will be featured at the Cathedral of St. Philip every fourth Sunday in the month. The parents will be guests of the children, families will sit together and the Very Rev. Raimundo de Ovies, dean, will preach sermons for the children.

Dean de Ovies teaches the entire junior department (children from nine through twelve), in the Cathedral Church School. He trains the children thoroughly for the three years prior to their confirmation, knows and loves them all.

Chicago Churches Plan Joint Program.

What is declared to be one of the largest welfare, educational and recreational projects in the history of Chicago, involving an annual expediture of $5,000,000 from federal grants, will be launched shortly. Cooperating agencies include the Chicago recreation committee, central sponsor of the plan; the Catholic Youth Organization; the Chicago Church Federation, and the Chicago Rabbinical Association.

If the plan is put into force, it is said 4,400 athletic directors, teachers and recreation leaders will be employed. Social center activities will be established in some 400 non-Roman Catholic churches of the city; in 254 of the larger Roman Catholic churches and in 151 synagogues. It is estimated the plan will reach some two million youth and adults.

The program has resulted, according to E. L. Burchard, Secretary of the Chicago Recreation Committee, from a realization on the part of public officials that much of the equipment provided by churches for recreational and community work is unused today, because of lack of funds. It is estimated that there is at least forty million dollars invested in such unused equipment in the city. The plan is made possible through a broadening of the WPA projects to include church programs.

Student Leaders to Meet.

Leaders in Student University Work of the Middle West will assemble at Brent House, Chicago, October 4, 5 and 6, to consider common problems. Bishop Stewart will be the leader of the conference.

Others scheduled to be present and participate include: the Rev. Henry K. Lewis, University of Michigan; the Rev. Alden Kelley, University of Wisconsin; the Rev. John Heuss, Northwestern University, Evanston, and the Rev. Edward S. White, rector, Church of the Redeemer, Chicago, and director of the Church's work at the University of Chicago.

The two general themes for the session will be: "The Churchman in the World Today," and "The Churchman on the Campus Today."

Department of Religious Education Education.

"Enterprises in Learning," prepared as a supplement to the Christian Nurture Series and intended to make the work of the Church School more interesting and more vital to the child, were presented to the Church for the first time at the week-end conference of clergy and Church School workers here, September 7 and 8. The conference was sponsored by the Diocesan Department of Religious Education and was attended by approximately 300 clergy, superintendents and teachers.

"Enterprises in Learning" are contained in two booklets prepared by a special committee of the Diocese of Chicago and were presented to the conference by Miss Vera L. Gardner, diocesan supervisor. They were enthusiastically received as marking a new advancement in the Church's educational program.

The supplement, according to Miss Gardner, is intended for use by clergy and superintendents, enabling them to explain easily the objectives and themes of a given course in the Church School. It seeks to make the facts of the Church and religion more vivid to the various age groups. Back of the whole work is the idea that the children "learn by doing" in their various classes.

U. T. O. Worker in Middle West.

Miss Esther Brown, field secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council in charge of colored work, arrived in Chicago this week and will spend three weeks working in the Province of the Midwest. Miss Brown will confer with leaders in various localities in colored work with the aim of offering suggestions for improving such and obtaining first-hand information on the whole colored problem in the Church.

In Chicago Miss Brown will work under the Diocesan Commission on Colored Work and will appear before various groups in the diocese. She will address the South Side Church School Institute at the Church of the Mediator, Morgan Park, September 24. Later she will address the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary and various local groups.

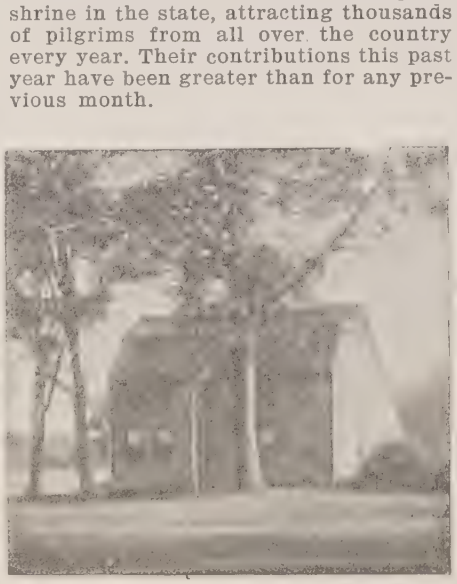
Churchwoman Celebrates.

Miss Alice J. Comstock, one of Evanston's oldest citizens and perhaps the only living member present at the founding of St. Mark's Church, Evanston, celebrated her ninetieth birthday this week and was honored on the occasion by the Altar Guild of the parish.

Miss Comstock was present in the old chapel at Northwestern University in 1864 when St. Mark's was founded and she has throughout her life been attached to St. Mark's. Her chief activity in the parish has been in the Altar Guild, members of which gathered together on Miss Comstock's birthday and paid her tribute.

Hale Sermon, October 16.

The Rev. James A. Montgomery, D. D., Ph. D., of the University of Pennsylvania, will deliver the annual Hale sermon on the subject, "The Historical Element in the Old Testament", Wednesday, October 16, at 9 P. M., in Anderson Memorial Chapel, Evanston, according to announcement by the Rev. Dr. Frederick O. Grant President.



CONNECTICUT.

Rt. Rev. F. G. Budlong, D. D., S. T. D.,

Connecticut's Tercentenary.

October 5 and 6 have been set aside for the religious observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the State of Connecicut.

The Glebe House is the chief religious shrine in the state, attracting thousands of pilgrims from all over the country every year. Their contributions this past year have been greater than for any previous month.

The Old Glebe House, Woodbury, Conn.

The Rev. John Rutgers Marshall, Missionary at Woodbury, 1771-1789, lived there and summoned the clergy of the State to meet in his study March 25, 1783, the very month that word came that our independence would be recognized. The importance of that meting was great, because of the decision that the Church must survive as a nation-wide institution, that the people of this new nation must have the full Apostolic heritage handed down to our English-speaking race from Christ and His Apostles; that the compromises suggested in Philadelphia were detestable and in no wise to be accepted; and that the organization of the new National Church was to be complete and efficient, as the colonial Church had never been, when dependent upon authority across the sea. Of course, they elected a bishop who became the first bishop of our race consecrated for work outside the British Isles. It is to be noted that John Rutgers Marshall was the devoted disciple of the Rev. Samuel Johnson of Stratford, the most noted figure in the Colonial Church, founder of King's College, New York, where Marshall had studied under him. Johnson had nominated Marshall as the first resident Missionary for the Woodbury Parish, which he had founded. The influence of the Glebe House meeting was not confined to the Church. When the Constitutional Convention, which gave us the Constitution of the United States, met in Philadelphia in 1787, the son of the Rev. Samuel Johnson represented Connecticut, solved the most difficult problem before that convention, and drew up the final wording which was adopted. As the majority of the members of that convention were trained members of the Church of England, they were aware, not only of the action taken at the Glebe House, but of the success of the national movement begun there. It is not too much to say that here was repeated the work and influence of Theodore, the Greek Archbishop of Canterbury, who in the seventh century gave unity to the people and Church of England, and so prepared and made possible the English government and nation.

In 1785, the Glebe House was sold to make possible the building of the present St. Paul's Church, erected as a mark of the faith of those who believed in the permanence of the Mother Church, organized in this new country. We have just celebrated 150 years of continuous use of this church, now the oldest building in continuous use by the Church in Connecticut.

CENTRAL NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. H. Coley, D. D., Suffragan

In Honor of Bishop Fnske's Consecration Anniversary.

Every Parish and Mission in the Diocese of Central New York will honor their Diocesan on Sunday, September 29, St. Michael and All Angels' Day, the twentieth anniversary of his consecration. The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske was consecrated a Bishop in the Church of St. Michael and all Angels, Baltimore, Maryland, of which he was rector, on the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels, 1915. The Rev. Patriarch of the Church, the Rt. Rev. Daniel Sylvester Tuttle, Bishop of Missouri, who was in his seventy-ninth year, was the consecrator. The Rt. Rev. Reginald W. Weller, Bishop of Fond du Lac; the Rt. Rev. Charles Tyler Olmsted, Bishop of Central New York; the Rt. Rev. Sheldon M. Griswold, Bishop of Salina; the Rt. Rev. James H. Darlington, Bishop of Harrisburg; the Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, Bishop of Washington, D. C., and the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, Bishop of Maryland, and later Presiding Bishop of the Church, were all co-consecrators. Bishop Fiske became the coadjutor to the Rt. Rev. Charles Tyler Olmsted. In 1924, after the death of Bishop Olmsted, Bishop Fiske became the third Bishop of the Diocese.

There will be corporate communion in all churches of the Diocese and all the faithful communicants of the Church will receive the Blessed Sacrament and ask that God's blessing may rest on their beloved Shepherd of Souls. The clergy will emphasize the Forward Movement of the Church, stressing the need of consecrated lives.

Bishop Fiske has asked that all church work in the parishes and diocese be under way on his anniversary. There will be special services of this occasion in all the churches in Syracuse.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Fourth District will hold their autumn meeting in Christ Church, Jordan, on Thursday, October 3, in honor of Bishop Fiske who will be their speaker and guest. The Bishop will speak on Diocesan Missions. The special offering on that day will go to the work designated by the Bishop. Brief talks will also be given by the Rev. Warren E. Mace, who will speak on the flood desolation at Marathon; the Rev. Henry B. Lee will discuss the work among colored people; the Rev. Charles D. Newkirk will speak on the work at the Onondega Indian Reservation and the Rev. Henry Harrison Hadley will tell about the work of the Church Mission of Help.

The Dean of the Fourth District, the Very Rev. Claude H. Leyfield, rector of Trinity Parish, Syracuse, has called a meeting of convocation in honor of the Bishop, also to be held in Christ Church, Jordan, on October 3. The convocation is composed of the clergy and laymen from each parish.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Rev. B. M. Boyd Accepts Call to Church of Grace and Holy Trinity, Richmond.

The Rev. Beverley Munford Boyd, at present rector of St. Paul's Church, Winston-Salem, N. C., has accepted the call to the rectorship of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, J. Jordan Leake, senior warden, announced at the Sunday morning's service.

The Rev. Mr. Boyd will take charge November 1. He was born May 29, 1895, at Roanoke, a son of the late Jas. William Boyd and Mrs. Emma Tayloe Munford Boyd. He is a grandson of the late General Thomas T. Munford, C. S. A., of Lynchburg.

Succeeds Classmate.

After attending the public schools in Roanoke, Mr. Boyd studied at Washington and Lee University and at the University of Virginia, pursuing his theological studies later at the Virginia Theological Seminary near Alexandria, where he was graduated in 1924.

Mr. Boyd succeeds here one of his seminary classmates, the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, who resigned here several months ago to become rector of St. Paul's Church in Chattanooga, Tenn. After leaving the seminary, Mr. Boyd supplied in the pulpits of Episcopal churches at Abingdon and at Martinsville, and then became rector of St. David's Church, Austin, Texas. More recently he has served the Winston-Salem Church.

Mr. Boyd married June 7, 1924, Miss Sara Louise Kemper of Alexandria. Mr. and Mrs. Boyd have four children.

According to a dispatch from Winston-Salem, the rector's announcement was a surprise to most of the people there. Mr. Boyd had come to St. Paul's in April, 1934, to succeed the Rt. Rev. Robert E. Gribbon, who left the parish to become Bishop of Western North Carolina.

Mr. Boyd is a brother of T. Munford Boyd, Charlottesville attorney and Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court Judge.

The new rector also is related to the Munford family in Richmond and is a cousin of the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Virginia.

Members of the vestry of St. Paul's said Mr. Boyd's work in Winston-Salem had been especially effective among young people.

St. Paul's is the only Episcopal Church in Winston-Salem and is the largest in the North Carolina Diocese. The church itself was constructed in the early twenties, after the design of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York.

The Rev. Cary Montague Will Celebrate Twentieth Anniversary.

The congregation of Holy Comforter Church, Richmond, is planning to build a stone altar in the church yard to be used in the open-air services which are conducted there yearly during the summer months. The altar is a tribute to the Rev. Cary Montague, rector, whose twentieth anniversary in the ministry will be celebrated this month. The committee in charge has sent a letter to the many friends of Mr. Montague.

Mr. Clem Leaves the Diocese.

The Rev. Walter W. Clem, rector of St. John's Church at Waynesboro, and the Church of the Good Shepherd at Folly Mills, in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, has announced his acceptance of a call to the rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Macon, Georgia, in the Diocese of Atlanta, and epects to assume his new duties October 1. He will leave many friends in Southwestern Virginia, who will wish him all health, happiness and success in his new charge.

Good Work at Marion.

Mr. Edgar T. Ferrell, Jr., of Lynchburg, who is a student at Virginia Seminary, recently completed a very effective engagement at Christ Church, Marion, Va., having been appointed by Bishop Jett to serve there for the months of June, July and August. During this period Mr. Ferrell was very active in making contacts among the people at Marion and in other ways promoted their interest in Christ Church. During these summer months Mr. Ferrell relieved the Rev. Richard R. Beasley, who for some time past has been driving all the way from Bristol to give two services a month at Marion.

With much regret there is noted in this connection the death of Mrs. Thos. S. Ewald, which occurred on September 13. Mrs. Ewald had been one of the most interested and loyal members of Christ Church, and especially active in the work of the Sunday School. She will be sadly missed from the life of the congregation.

Grace Church School to Open.

Grace Church School, at Broadway and Tenth Street, etsablished in 1894, opens its 1935-1936 term on Monday, September 16. An increase of about 25 per cent in enrollment is expected, which would bring the total number of students to over forty. This increase is in line with the plan established a year ago when the boarding plan for the choir school was dropped and the school was opened to the community as a boys' preparatory day school. The response to this plan has been gratifying and numerous civic bodies and leaders in the community have given their cooperation.

Several improvements are being made at present in the material equipment of the school, most important of which are the addition of another classroom and the complete reconstruction of the recreation grounds. Provision is made for such outdoor activities as baseball, football, volley ball, badminton and handball. Gymnastics are taught in the recreation room in the school building.

Dr. W. Russell Bowie, rector of Grace Church, which maintains the school in its parish buildings, has also announced the appointment of Frank D. Ford as Headmaster of the school to succeed Harry N. Russell, who is retiring. Mr. Ford has for the past year served in the school as master. He was educated in California and received the A. B. degree from the University of Redlands, California, in 1927. Following graduation, Mr. Ford took up private school work and for several years taught at the Clark School in Hanover, New Hampshire. He then went abroad to complete his studies in the Universities of Grenoble, Bonn and London.

COLLECT FOR THE FIFTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Keep, we beseech Thee, O Lord, Thy Church with Thy perpetual mercy; and, because the frailty of man without Thee cannot but fall, keep us ever by Thy help from all things hurtful, and lead us to all things profitable to our salvaton; through Jesus Chrst our Lord. Amen.

THEIR FIRST DAYS.
(A Prayer.)

Their first day at school, dear Lord,
They are so small—
Gude the one to whose care they go
To see that all
Cannot be eager, or as brave
And quick to learn—
Forgive, if from strange word and ways
Their thoughts may turn.

To those familiar things of home—
A little cake
They meant to eat and then
Forgot to take.
Grant patience to their teacher, Lord,
Vision to know
The plants that yield most fragrance take
Their time to grow.

I sent them off to school today,
Proud of the start—
Oh, give the one who guides them, Lord,
An understanding heart!

The Spiritual Body.

We ourselves are spirits, but our spirits are incarnate in matter—they operate through a material organism, imperfectly. We are not bodies carrying a little "vital spark" of a soul somewhere about us; but we are essentially spirits carrying and using a body which is our temporary means of expression—it is the mechanism we use. But there is another kind of mechanism, the "spiritual body" of which St. Paul spoke; and it is that which will be our means of expression in another plane: it is as real, as substantial, as the gross matter which is our present environment. Those who have passed into the other plane (the dead as we mistakenly call them) have still some measure of communication with us which is, however hampered by the gross matter which we in this world normally need for intercourse. Such fellowship is called in the Creeds the Communion of Saints. Highly critical investigation is leading many scientists to infer that some knowledge is obtainable, and is being obtained, about the conditions of life on the other side of death; and the materialism which not long ago caused many to think that the spirit perished with the body is not holding its own in our day. There are many accounts like that of Shackelton, in his book "South," of men experiencing the help of an unseen presence; and I believe that some such instances will be increasingly verified by careful and critical enquiry.

It may be that good men when they die continue to do work for God and to help their fellow-men in the next world, and also in this. Indeed, it would be difficult to suppose that they do not. Most of us believe that there is an order also of beings who have never lived in the flesh; and there are many reasons for holding this belief to be true also. For why should we assume that man is the highest form of being that can exist? I have not time to go into the reasons today; but I wish to suggest to you, as a first step at least, that if we are certain, as I am, and as thinking men increasingly are, of the fact of a blessed immortality, then the spirits of those who have gone before can in a very real sense be called angels. We do not know except vaguely as yet how they are occupied—our Lord in His wisdom said very little; though He did say that after death we become as the angels in heaven—but this much seems certain: the spirits of good men can and do serve God, and help one another and us; and whether we call them "angels," or "messengers" (which is the meaning of the word), or simply "spirits" or "men," can matter little. There is another world about us, more permanent and real, though perhaps not more wonderfully contrived, than this world of matter; and in that world are vast multitudes for whom any human word is but a failing guess and an imperfectly metaphor. We are surrounded by them; they love us and help us, and perhaps the strange and merciful things that happen to us so often are due to their intervention under God. We do well to think about them and to give thanks for them. Let us think of them more, and have a closer and more intelligent communion with them. For we, too, will soon become discarnate spirits as they are; and we, too, in however humble way, would hope to be made one day perfect in God, that we may serve Him with the saints and angels above.—The Rev. Percy Dearmer.

The Ministry of Angels.

On the twenty-ninth of this month we celebrate the glorious Festival of the Holy Angels. The Church is called the Kingdom of Heaven because it includes Angels and men and the Angels are the more numerous, the mightier and the more glorious part of the Kingdom. It is no fanciful association but a very real and vital union. The Son of God was always the King of Angels; by being made Man He, became also the King of men. He made one the things that be in Heaven and the things that be in Earth. However much we forget all about the Angel part of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Angels are drawn to us with the most real and intimate sympathy and interest. Jesus tells us that there is great joy among them at the tears and the penitence of the most degraded of sinners, and fierce indignation against those who lightly offend the little ones.

The Book of Revelations shews us that Angels have a very real part in the history of the World. Professor Wallace, who was the co-discoverer with Darwin of the theory of Evolution, and once was fully persuaded that everything in nature was automatic, tells us in "The World of Life" that he had been led to recognize that the great Forces of the World were guided and controlled by Angels. We really, he says, have no experience of matter moving itself. Mind and Will are the real agents of all activity and where the Human Mind and Will cannot reach, he is now persuaded that other unseen minds operate, probably in infinite gradations.—Exchange.

BENEDICTION.

The Lord be with thee in the flush of morn,
When life springs new, and holiest thoughts are born,
When earth would draw thee, may the heavenly way
Shine more and more unto the perfect day.

The Lord be with thee in the heights of noon,
When hours of action vanish all too soon.
Through all the heat, the burden and strife,
The Lord refresh thee with eternal life.

The Lord be with thee, in the twilight dim,
The sweet home-coming, and the evening hymn;
His dews upon thy thirsty soul descend,
His peace abide with thee unto the end.
The Lord be with thee through the silent night,
His arms thy refuge, and His face thy light.
When foes arise, the Lord thy keeper be
Until the day dawn, and the shadows flee.

One Secret of Success.

Some years ago my eyes fell on the record of a wonderful work of grace in connection with one of the stations of the China Inland Mission, where both the number and spiritual character of the converts had been far greater than at other stations where the consecration of the missionaries had been just as great as at the more fruitful place.

This rich harvest of souls remained a mystery, until Hudson Taylor, on a visit to England, discovered the secret. At the close of one of his addresses a gentleman came forward to make his acquaintance. In the conversation which followed, Mr. Taylor was surprised at the accurate knowledge the man had of the field in which he worked, and of the results of his labor. Asked how this came about, the man said, "I pray for you every day."—Selected.

Prayer and Sacrifice.

As men who are undertaking a great thing have to prepare themselves and summon all their powers to their aid, so Christians need to prepare themselves to pray, "with their whole heart and strength". This is the law of the Kingdom. Prayer needs sacrifice of ease, of time, of self. The secret of powerful prayer is sacrifice. It was thus with Christ Jesus, the great Intercessor. It is written of Him, "When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, He shall see His seed". "He shall see of the travail of His soul." "He shall divide the spoil with the strong, because he hath poured out this soul unto death." In Gethsemane "He offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears." Prayer is sacrifice. David said: "Let my prayer be set forth before me as incense; and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice."

Prayer is sacrifice. Our prayer has its worth alone from being rooted in the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. As He gave up everything in His prayer: "Thy will be done," our posture and disposition must ever be the offering of everything to God and His service.

A pious Welsh miner had a relative whom the doctor ordered to Madeira. But there was no money. The miner resolved to take the little money that he had, and ventured to use it all. He procured a comfortable lodging at $3 per day for the invalid. He was content with an out-room for himself, and lived on ten-pence a day. He spent much time in prayer until he got the assurance that the invalid would recover. On the last day of the month the sick one was well. When the miner reached home he said that he had now learned more than ever that the secret law and the hidden power of prayer lay in self-sacrifice.

Need we wonder at the lack of power in our prayer where there is so much reluctance to make the needful sacrifice in waiting upon God. Christ, the Christ we trust in, the Christ that lives in us, offered Himself a sacrifice to God. It is as this spirit lives and rules in us, that we shall receive power from Him as intercessors to pray the effectual prayer that availeth much.—Andrew Murray.

FATHER, ARE YOU THERE?

By Dinnie McDole Hayes.

A little child lay in the dark:
The room was strange, he saw nowhere;
He was afraid; but then he called,
'O Father, are you there?"

He felt a hand, so strong and warm,
Close clasping his; then, calm and clear,
He heard his father's tender voice,
"Yes, laddie, I am here."

Like that small child, we sometimes feel
That we are in the dark of care;
In terror of some harm, we call,
"O Father, are you there?"

We reach our hand to Him, and find
A blessed answer to our fear;
His hand holds ours; we hear His voice,
"Fear not, for I am here."

So though we tremble in the dark;
In need of strength and help and cheer,
We have a tender Father's word.
"Fear not, for I am here."

Not Ready for the Answer.

There is an old picture that represents an Oriental beggar by a city gate with box or bag held out for dole, but while he waits for alms he falls asleep. He does not see the coin that kindly hands bestow, he does not see when a greedy hand filches away the gift, and he awakes later empty-handed and disappointed. That is the story of many an unanswered prayer; it holds the reason of many an ungranted petition. The angel with the gift, whatever it may have been, came and found us unready. —Forward.

EXAMPLE.

Georgia B. Gierasch.

"Traveler, we know that you are weary;
Marvelling, we hear that wander-song,
Passing on through the mist and darkness
Lighten us, the road is very long.

Here the rising dust obscures our vision:
Like a distant star your lantern-ray;
Traveler, we bless the voice that, singing,
Rifts the Night to guide us into day.

A Swarm of Words.

The Frenchman was disgusted with the English language. "For example," he remarked, "take the word 'crowd'. This means a lot of people. That is easily learned. But a crowd of ships is termed a fleet, while a fleet of sheep is called a flock; on the other hand, a flock of girls is called a bevy, and a bevy of wolves is called a pack. A pack of thieves is called a gang, while a gang of fish is called a shoal. A shoal of bullocks or buffalo is called a herd; a herd of soldiers is called a troop; a troop of partridges is called a covey; a covey of beauties is called a galaxy, and a galaxy of ruffians is called a horde. A horde of logs is called a heap; a heap of oxen is called a drove; a drove of blackguards is called a mob; a mob of robbers is called a band, and a band of bees is called a swarm!"

A swarm of words must be an essay. —Exchange.

GUARD WELL YOU RHEART.

Guard well your heart
With all your heart
Each moment of the day;
And there pluck out
Each weedy sprout
That comes without delay:
For let alone
It soon is grown
Too great to cast away.
So guard the heart
With all your heart
And unrelenting care,
A petty sin
Once entered in
Will spread its poison there.

The Hunchback.

There was a story told by Louise Heilgers many years ago that deserves revival. There lived at Venice a hunchback named Antonlo, a seller of marble statues. His stall was situated near the great door of St. Mark's Cathedral, because the worshippers were his best customers.

There still exists in Italy a great superstition that to touch the hump of a hunchback will bring good luck or banish misfortunes. Thus poor Antonio's hump was often touched by passersby and children. This made Antonio bitter and surly. For "well" people to profit by his misforthune he esteemer an insult, and did not fail to tell them so. His big mop of black hair, his long arms and unshapely body often begat a sorry merriment against him, hence his horrid disposition.

One day a very pretty girl of aobut sixteen stood and smiled at him. "Well, what do you want?" snarled Antonio. "PUlease, may I touch you?" asked the girl. "What for " urged Antonio. "Because I am in great trouble, and I only know you and God to help me. God is inside the Cathedral somewhere, but He is too great for me to speak to, so I came to you." 'All right," said Antonio, "touch me if you like." The idea tickled Antonio. "Only me and God," and he laughed aloud.

Some weeks passed before the girl returned. She stood before Antonio's stall with such a lovely smile on her face that Antonio could not help smiling back—a rare thing with him—but he just remembered. "Only you and God."

"Well! What do you want now?" he said. "Nothing," she replied, 'only to thank you and tell you that all my trouble is gone"—and then added—"it must be wonderful for you to have something that only God has. You brought me good fortune just as I thought you would." And she laid her little soft hand on poor Antonio's big, hard, stained hand, and he never forgot that touch. "I wonder if you feel as happy about driving away my trouble as God would?" she asked, and with that she went.

O glory of the lighted mind!
How dead I'd been, how dumb, how blind!
The station brook, to my new eyes,
Was babbling out of Paradise,
The waters rushing from the rain
Were singing Christ has risen again.
I thought all early creatures knelt
From rapture of the joy I felt.

—John Masefield.

"Oh, we're sunk enough here, God knows,
But not quite so sunk that moments,
Sure though seldom, are denied us,
When the spirit's true endowments
Stand out plainly from its false ones,
And appraise it if pursuing
Or the right way or the wrong way,
To its triumph or undoing."

Covet to get alone with God. If we neglect it, we not only rob ourselves, but others, too, of blessing, since when we are blessed we are able to pass on blessing to others. It may mean less outside work; it must mean more depth and power, and the consequence, too, will be "they saw no man save Jesus only."—Selected.

"Prayer is a privilege—like friendship, and family love, and laughter, great books, great music, and great art. It is one of life's opportunities to be grasped thankfully and used gladly. The man who misses the deep meaning of prayer has not so much refused an obligation—he has robbed himself of life's supreme privilege—friendship with God."

—Fosdick.

Dear Lord, I bring my little life to thee.
For Thou canst make it what it ought to be.
The "little" that I am, oh, make it much—
Turn water into wine; stones into bread—
At thy dear touch!

—Mary Willingham.

If men dealt less in stocks and lands, and more in bonds and deeds fraternal,
If love's work had more willing hands, to link this work to the Supernal,
If men stored up love's oil and wine, and on bruised human hearts would pour it,
If yours and mine would once combine, the world would be the better for it.

Twice every day the invisible energies of the moon lift a great plateau of the ocean several feet above the level of the surrounding water, and as the earth revolves, that great plateau of water bursts up in our shores, creeks, inlets and makes our tide an irresistible energy if we only knew how to use it. Energies of a greater sort break through human life and the real business of being a Christian is discovering energies.—W. H. Denison.

FOR THE CHILDREN

WILD THINGS.

I took a pleasant ride today;
Adown a country lane
There flashed a golden pheasant by
In quest of ripened grain;

A flock of wild geese swung above
A lake of azure blue;
I watched with eager, wistful eyes
As they streamed out of view;

I heard a rustle in the brush—
In wonder-muted fright
A rabbit scampered through the grass
And scurried out of sight;

Wild things above, around me, stirred;
In kindness born anew
My heart goes out to all wild things,
For it's a wild thing, too!

Yo Su and Yo Wing.

Trudging along in the dust of the road were two children, Yo Su, and her little brother, Yo Wing. To see them walking along one would not have thought them blind, but neither had ever been able to see. They were used to finding their way alone, but Yo Su kept hold of the hand of her little brother all the time, that he should not go astray. She was able to keep in the road by feeling the dust under her bare feet.

"I'm so tired of walking, Su," said the small boy. "When will we get there?"

"Not for a long time, I'm afraid," answered the older child. "You know you promised not to fuss if we went to the white lady doctor's to have 'our eyes opened'."

"Do you really think she will?" asked the brother.

"I'm sure she will if she can," answered Su. "She made Ka Z'in to see. Z'in says it depends upon what is the matter with your eyes."

When Wing's footsteps again began to lag, his sister said, "Let's listen and see if we hear a cart coming. Perhaps someone would give us a lift."

"That would be fine," answered the boy. "I think I hear one now."

The two listened and felt sure the distant rumble must be made by a cart coming, but after a little the sound grew fainter, and then they could no longer hear it, so they knew that it had turned off another way. Later, however, they heard a creaking sound which came nearer and nearer. When Su, judging by the sound, decided the cart was nearly up to them, she pulled her little brother to one side and looked longingly to where she heard the cart. The man driving asked if they wanted a ride, and getting down helped them in.

As the cart rumbled on again, Su told the driver that she and her brother had always been blind. A blind neighbor had received her sight at the mission hospital and had finally persuaded Yo Ki, Su's father, to let the older sister and her little brother make the long journey to the "Foreigner's Missions," as she called it, to see if they could be cured.

The driver was a kind-hearted man and said that it would not be very much out of his way to take them to the hospital established by the missionaries from the United States.

When they reached the mission the man helped the two to the ground, rang the bell at the gate in the high wall, and drove on. Su felt as if she had lost a kind friend and was very much alone. She was rather frightened for some of her people often told horrible stories about the "white foreigners." She tried to forget these and to think of what she had been told by the friend who had been made to see.

"What can I do for you?" asked a kind voice, and Su was gently led inside the high wall.

"Oh, if you could 'open our eyes,' my brother's anyway," answered Su.

"Are you both blind?" asked the gentle voice. "Come with me and rest and have something to eat. You look tired and warm."

The two were fed and later tucked into two little beds, side by side, as Yo Wing would not leave his sister. The nurse found that neither Su nor Wing had had sufficient food, although Wing was better nourished than his sister, who had often shared with him a portion of her meal. The nurse knew that the children's health must be built up before anything could be done for their eyes. While thus waiting, they went to school with the other mission children, and played with them. Su was so happy that she almost felt as if it would not matter if she could never see, if only she could stay and go to the mission school.

At last the doctor said that Wing was ready for an operation. The boy knew nothing of what was done. The first thing he realized he was lying in bed with a bandage over his eyes. Su often sat by his side, holding his hand, and telling him all she had been doing. Often a nurse sat by him and told him stories of a wonderful man she called Jesus. Wing had never heard anything like the lovely stories she told him. He hardly minded lying quietly in bed, every one was so good to him.

Then one day the doctor took off the bandage and asked him, "Is everything all dark now?"

"Oh, no," answered Wing. "There are big squares of light. I can't tell you all there is. It must be I can see!"

It was true Wing's operation had been successful. At first the things he saw were blurred and the bandage could be off for only a few minutes at a time. But each day the nurse left it off a little longer time and Wing could see more clearly. Near his bed was a picture of a boy and Wing loved to look at it. When the bandage had to be put on again he lay and thought of that face. The nurse told him that it was a picture of the boy Jesus, of whom she had told so many stories.

At last Wing could have the bandage off all the time could see as well as any one and went to school with the others and played with them. His only trouble was for fear Su could not have her "eyes opened."

When Su was strong enough for the operation, she found herself in bed with a bandage on her eyes just as Wing had had. In the end, she, too, was able to see and to enter into all the work and play with the others.

The two Yo children were now very happy. They could see all the lovely things about them! the sun, the clouds in the sky, the trees and flowers, the other children and each other and the kind ladies at the mission. Even when they could not see they were happier at the mission than ever before. Now they began to fear that they must go home and stay. They begged to be allowed to remain and go to school at the mission, but were told that their father would have to decide. "Oh, please let us live here," begged Wing. "I want to hear more stories of Jesus and to learn to be like Him and you kind folks."

Then one of the missionaries drove the two children to their home and showed them to their parents, who rejoiced that they were now able to see. The missionary told Yo Ki how anxious the children were to stay at the mission and go to school. At first the father was unwilling, but Wing teased and Su looked so wistful that he hesitated. "I want to go to school and study and study," said Wing, "and learn all I can there, then go to a higher school and get to be a doctor and make folks well."

It took much persuasion, but finally Yo Ki agreed that Wing should go back, but he said, "Su must stay at home. A girl does not need to go to school." Then Wing declared that he would not go without her. After a long time, Yo Ki agreed that both children might go and they returned with the missionary.

It was a very different trip from the time they had trudged wearily along in the dust, seeing nothing and fearful of what might happen to them when they did reach the mission. Now they rode with the missionary, they saw the birds and flowers as they passed, and they knew how very happy they should be every hour of every day. They were so grateful to the missionaries that they both were anxious to help others as they had been helped.—Exchange.

The Famous Race.

(Taken from the book called "Mickie Monkey's Story." It is told by Mickie Monkey himself.)

It wasn't many weeks before we were taken prisoners that Mumbo Monkey, a friend of mine, said he knew an animal who could run faster than any I would be able to pick up in that neighborhood, and challenged me to a race. I wasn't very anxious for that kind of sport; but he made so much talk among all our acquaintances, getting them excited about it, that I finally told him I was willing to give him a chance to show what he could do.

Then I went to Mr. Giraffe, and he knew the whole story. What was more, he declared that he had heard who the animal was that Mumbo intended to ride. It was old Mr. Camel, who had been across the desert four or five times, and thought he was the swiftest thing on legs.

"I'll give you the privilege of riding me," Mr. Giraffe said, "and we'll beat Mr. Camel out of sight."

As I said before, all the animals were a good deal excited about the race, and Mr. Lion offered to act as judge, so when the time came for us to start, a big crowd had gathered, and out rode Mumbo Monkey on his camel.

It seemed to please him terribly when he saw Mr. Giraffe and me, and he cried out, so as to make everybody laugh:

"I'm bound to win this race, Mickie, because Mr. Giraffe will have all he can do to carry his long neck straight, without thinking of going very fast. Besides, I have heard that to win a race one must hump himself, and my camel is just the animal for that, because he has got two humps."

I didn't say anything, because it was no use to make talk before the race began, and besides, just then Mr. Lion gave the word for us to go.

The course was two miles in a circle, and Mumbo with Mr. Camel started off in great style, going so fast that I began to be afraid Mr. Giraffe and I were beaten, because he didn't seem to be able to get along as swiftly as he could have done, if it hadn't been for trying to dodge the branches. I thought then that Mumbo was right about his neck being too long.

Well, I'm bound to say that Mr. Giraffe did the very best he knew, and to my surprise he managed to get well up with Mr. Camel before we turned into the home-stretch; but then, dear me, how he was puffing!

"Can you beat him?" I whispered, and Mr. Giraffe wiggled his ears as much as to say that I should hold my tongue.

When we came down in front of the judges' stand, Mr. Camel was as much as a yard ahead of us, and I said to myself that now was the chance for Mumbo to crow over me; but the thought hadn't more than come into my mind before Mr. Giraffe stretched his long neck straight out, and, bless you, in that way we won by a head.

Mumbo claimed it was the body that should count; but Mr. Lion gave as his decision that whichever head showed first belonged to the winner of the race, and so we carried off the prize, which wasn't a prize at all; but only the credit of having beaten Mumbo and Mr. Camel.

The Most Wonderful Plant.

Leslie and Alice were talking about plants. Leslie insisted one plant was the most wonderful and Alice argued for her favorite.

"I'll tell you how to settle this discussion," interrupted Uncle David, who was trying to read. "Tomorrow both of you go out to the woods and bring home what you consider the most wonderful plant. And to make it more interesting, here is a dollar for the one who wins."

Little Bobbie sleepily listened to the dicussion, and murmured, "Wonderful plant," as he was being carried off to bed.

Bright and early the next morning, Alice and Leslie went in search of wonderful plants. Alice picked ever so many wild flowers, and then threw them away. Each plant she examined was more wonderful than the other. She thought the bluebell the most wonderful; then the tiger lily attracted her. Finally she found a pink lady's slipper. She had never seen one of any other color but yellow, so she was sure that this must be a wonderful plant. She was far from home, and was very tired when she returned with her plant.

"I have been home ever and ever so long. I knew just where to find the most wonderful plant, and went right after it," boasted Leslie.

"I should say that a gorgeous pink lady's slipper, such as this, rare more than wonderful," said Uncle David, when Alice presented her plant. "It is no more odd in shape than the more common yellow ones. There are several different kinds of lady's slippers, and they all belong to the Orchids family, just as you and Leslie and Bobbie all belong to the Brandt family. The Indians used to call them Moccasin flowers."

"Here is a member of the Arum family," said Uncle David when Leslie presented his wonderful plant. "We call it Jack-in-the-pulpit, and it is not at all rare, for in most moist woods you will find Jack looking at you from his green pulpit. In the fall when the leaves and pulpit wither away, Jack is covered with red berries. The root of the plant is very sharp but the Indians enjoyed it as a relish the same as we do horse radish. It was known by the name of Indian turnip."

Before Uncle David could say more, Bobbie held up his hand: "I have a wonderful plant, too."

"Bobbie has you both beaten," laughed Uncle David. "He has the most wonderful plant in the world."

"Why, that's only common grass!" objected Leslie.

"It's being common is just the reason we overlook how wonderful it is. Grass makes the world beautiful, and it holds it together, too. If it were not for the matted roots of grass much of the soil would wash away into the rivers and seas. Grass is not afraid of work; it climbs mountain-sides and reaches out into lonely deserts. It is kind and patient; you can romp and play on it and it never minds at all. It has courage, too. It may become all brown with thirst, but as soon as a refreshing rain falls it comes up again, green and smiling. Grass is useful: large pastures of it feed the cows who furnish you with milk and butter. And some of it goes into the making of your clothes, for it feeds the sheep, whose wool overcoats are taken off their backs to make into overcoats to keep little boys warm. Grass is a good fighter, too, and has many a battle with dandelions and other weeds that try to choke it out in the lawns and meadows."

"Does Bobbie win?" Uncle David held up a bright silver dollar.

"The most wonderful plant grew right under my feet, and I didn't know it," sighed Leslie.

"Anyway, I'm glad I hunted for a wonderful plant, because I saw so many lovely things in the woods," said Alice. "Besides, I have learned so much about plants."—Jane V. Roach, in The Sentinel.

A PLEA TO PICNICKERS.

There's such a pleasant forest nook,
Where dancing shadows play,
And where a jolly little brook
Goes singing on its way.
The ferns seem like the loveliest lace,
The breezes stray around it,
But—why won't people leave a place
As pretty as they found it?

For egg-shells 'mid the ferns, alas,
Their loveliness are robbing,
And choked by tins and broken glass,
The little brook goes sobbing.
The violets wreathed a rock with grace,
Now pea-nut shells surround it,
Oh—why won't people leave a place
As pretty as they found it?

How to Keep a White Rose.

A long time ago, a gentleman took a white rose to a man who was laid up by an accident. It is pretty hard to be kept in the house week after week during the bright spring days, suffering pain from broken bones! That was what the gentleman thought when he carried the flower. And he thought, too, that it might be pleasant for the sick man to see a friend, to have a cheery word and get a sniff of the fragrance. So he carried the rose.

That was a good many months ago. The gentleman had almost forgotten. If any one had asked him about it he would have said, "Oh, that white rose of long ago? Yes, I did take one over there." But he would not think it worth remembering.

This very week, however, the gentleman had a letter from the sick man, in which he said: "The white rose you brought me last spring is still fragrant in my memory." A rose that kept for six months, and is fragrant still! That is a secret worth learning, is it not? If the gentleman had kept the rose himself, wearing it in his buttonhole, or putting it in a vase on his table, he would have had to throw it away within a few days. It would have faded. The petals would have drooped and fallen; the rose would be worse than useless. But he had only to carry it to the sick man to make it last six months! Indeed, I am sure it will last much longer. For the sick man wrote, it is "fragrant in my memory still." So it will be fragrant as long as his memory lasts. And memory lasts a long time.

This art of preserving things that are sweet and keeping them beautiful a long, long time, is one of the best I know. You can use it for so many things besides flowers, too—things that will soon fade and be gone if we keep them for ourselves, but which will be fragrant always if we carry them on some errand of love.—"Little Ten Minutes."

THE FOOL'S PRAYER.

Edward Rowland Sill.

The royal feast was done; the King
Sought some new sport to banish care,
And to his jester cried: "Sir Fool,
Kneel now, and make for us a prayer!"

The jester doffed his cap and bells
And stood the mocking court before;
They could not see the bitter smile
Behind the painted grin he wore.

He bowed his head, and bent his knee
Upon the monarch's silken stool;
His pleading voice arose: "O Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!"

"No pity, Lord, could change the heart
From red with wrong to white as wool;
The rod must heal the sin: but, Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!

"'Tis not by guilt the onward sweep
Of truth and right, O Lord, we stay;
'Tis by our follies that so long
We hold the earth from heaven away.

"These clumsy feet, still in the mire,
Go crushing blossoms without end;
These hard, well-meaning hands we thrust
Among the heart-strings of a friend.

"The ill-timed truth we might have kept—
Who knows how sharp it pierced and stung?
The word we had not sense to say—
Who knows how grandly it had rung?

"Our faults no tenderness should ask,
The chastening stripes must cleanse them all;
But for our blunders—oh, in shame
Before the eyes of heaven we fall.

"Earth bears no balsam for mistakes;
Men crown the knave, and scourge the tool
That did his will; but Thou, O Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!"

The room was hushed; in silence rose
The King, and sought his gardens cool
And walked apart, and murmured low,
"Be merciful to me, a fool!"

The Master's Brush.

A young Italian boy knocked at the door of an artist's studio in Rome, and when it was opened, exclaimed, "Please, Madam, will you give me the master's brush?"

The painter was dead, and the boy, inflamed with a longing to be an artist, wished for the great master's brush.

The lady gave him the brush. With earnestness he tried, but found he could paint no better than with his own. The lady then said, "You cannot paint like the master unless you have his spirit."

Time to Act.

Dr. Abbott tells of a small boy who asked his ten-year-old sister just as the sermon concluded, "Now is it all done?" "No," she whispered back, "It's just all said, and we must go and do it."—Exchange.

Diocesan Treasurer.

Mr. Lesley McCreath, secretary of the diocese, was elected acting treasurer of the diocese, filling the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Richard M. H. Wharton, at a special meeting of the Standing Committee.

Endowment Fund for the Church of the Transfiguration.

Creation of an endowment fund for the Church of the Transfiguration, Blue Ridge Summit, was made possible recently when Mrs. C. Irwin Dunn, of Baltimore, donated $1,000 for this purpose in memory of her husband. Mrs. Dunn's son, Mr. Edward K. Dunn, announced the gift at a special meeting of the vestry last month. By September 1 the fund had grown to $1,360 through contributions from Miss Lisette Lamping, Miss L. K. Dunn and Mrs. Helen McCullough, of Baltimore, and Miss Mary C. Wilcoxon and Miss Edith R. Trapier, of Washington, D. C., together with pledges from Bishop and Mrs. Wyatt Brown, the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Joseph P. McComas and Miss Henrietta S. Dickey.

Endowments of the Late Richard M. H. Wharton.

Three endowment funds, totaling $15,000, were created by the late Richard M. H. Wharton through insurance policies for the benefit of his church. The first two, one each for St. Stephen's Cathedral, Harrisburg, and the diocese, were disclosed at the time of the filing of the will. The third, making a bequest to St. Paul's, Harrisburg, was found among Mr. Wharton's effects several weeks later. Each endowment is for $5,000.

Oldest Native Resident Passes.

Mr. G. Irvin Beatty, ninety-five, Harrisburg's oldest native resident, and a lifelong member of St. Stephen's Cathedral, died August 30. Mr. Beatty served as vestryman, secretary of the vestry and senior warden before being elected an honorary life member of the vestry.

He was a distinguished Free Mason, having been one of the first initiates admitted to the Robert Burns Lodge, F. & A. M., after it was constituted in 1870.

Mr. Beatty, the son of the late George and Catherine Shrom Beatty, was born May 11, 1840. After attending the Harrisburg Academy and the Lawrenceville School, he was admitted to the Dauphin county bar. He married Miss Eliza Watson Anderson, of Bedford, Pa.

The burial service was conducted by Dean J. Thomas Heistand at the late residence September 2. Burial was in the Harrisburg Cemetery.

Mr. Beatty left $1,000 to St. Stephen's Cathedral as an endowment fund.

NEW MEXICO

Rt. Rev F. B. Howden, D. D., Bishop

St. Andrew's Mission in Las Cruces and St. Luke's Mission in La Union.

The Rev. Mr. Richard Taylor took charge of the work in Las Cruces the first week in June. He came direct from Nashotah, after his graduation and ordination to the diaconate.

Since he came, a new parish house has been erected, and will be formally opened.

The Rev. Wm. Dunne Pollock had every thing in line for him before he left to take up work in Raton, N. M. He preceded Mr. Tyalor and did an excellent work in the two years or more he was here.

The Rev. Hunter Lewis has charge of all the work in the counties of Dona Ana, Sierra, Socorra and Cotron, embracing fourteen missions.

Confirmations.

On May 26 Bishop Howdon visited St. James' Mission and confirmed nine and one was received from the Roman Catholic Church. The same day he visited St. Mary's-at-Hill and St. Peter's at Ricon, and in Grace Church, Hatch, he confirmed three candidates. On June 25 the Bishop visited Epiphany Mission, Socorro confirming four; St. Aban's Mission in Croton County, confirming three.

The next day seven were confirmed at St. Paul's Mission, Hot Springs. The Bishop made the trip in his automobile, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Margaret, driving 450 miles.

Special mention must be made of the work in Hot Springs, Sierra County. Friar Willis Wills of the Order of St. Philip, has been conducting services under the Rev. Hunter Lewis, who is the Rural Dean of this section of New Mexico. A remarkable work has been done by him, a beautiful building site has been given by the people, and a church will be erected as soon as funds can be available. St. Paul's has twenty communicants and a very encouraging Church School. The Friar holds three services each Sunday. His services are free. The only thing he asks is room and board.

Thirtieth Anniversary Observed.

The Rev. Hunter Lewis observed his thirtieth anniversary in the work here on Sunday, September 15. When he came here in 1905, there was only one mission in Dona Ana County; now there are seven missions, and at each mission an attractive little chapel. Regular services are being held in each mission.

The St. James' Mission is a college work. The State College of New Mexico is here, with an attendance of some 500 students each year.

Since 1905 the St. James' register shows 500 baptisms, 415 confirmations and 193 weddings and 136 funerals.

In honor of the thirtieth anniversary a new roof is being put on St. James' Church, given largely by those baptized, confirmed and married.

Hunter Lewis.

ARKANSAS

Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Edward T. Demby, D. D., Suffragan Bishop.

Mission Work Among River People.

The. Rev. Edward W. Mellichampe is making a trip up the White River on his Mission Boat, "Mother of the River." This work of Mr. Mellichampe has gone forward in a most encouraging way. He is carrying the Gospel to the river people along the Mississippi river and its southern tributaries. The need of mission work here in the South is as great as it is in China, or Africa, or Alaska, or any other place.

In a conference with Bishop Saphore, Dean John Williamson and Archdeacon C. C. Burke, the Rev. Wm. T. Holt will undertake evangelical work throughout the Diocese in an effort to revive the Missions, and the parishes that have no rectors. This work will be undertaken as a part of the Forward Movement in this Diocese of which the Very Rev. John Williamson is Diocesan Chairman. The plans for the Forward Movement in the Diocese include a period of fellowship, inspiration and planning for the clergy, a Diocesan Service in the Cathedral in the first week of Advent, planning for a Conference of adults and one for the young people next summer, aid to parishes conducted by the Rev. Bradner J. Moore, assisted by Messrs. Crawford M. Noble and E. Ross Kincade, laymen, as a Committee of the Executive Council.

New life is beginning to energize the Diocese of Arkansas and, with the confirmation of Bishop Saphore's election as Diocesan, great progress toward recovery will be made.

NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. Ernest V. Shayler, D. D., Bishop.

Prominent Churchman Dies.

The Right Rev. Bishop E. V. Shayler officiated at the burial of Mr. Henry O. Wilkinson, of Omaha, yesterday. The deceased was a prominent churchman, who by a strange coincidence has been associated with Bishop Shayler in three parishes. Mr. Wilkinson was an official in Grace Church, Oak Park, and in St. Mark's, Seattle, during the Bishop's rectorships, and has for the last 15 years been a member of Trinity Cathedral. He was the son of a clergyman well known in a previous generation, the Rev. John W. Wilkinson, who held charges in Illinois, Wisconsin and Missour, and who is remembered as the one time rector of St. James', Milwaukee. Mr. Wilkinson was 74 years of age and the service was read in Omaha, the remains being taken to Milwaukee after cremation.

Bishop Casady, of Oklahoma, a former erctor of Al Saints', Omaha, was a recent visitor to Omaha.

Wm. J. H. Petter.

MISSOURI

Rt. Rev. William Scarlett, Bishop.

"The Key" has been designated by Bishop Scarlett as the official diocesan paper for the Diocese of Missouri, being the only publication of its kind in this diocese. Mr. T. Carter Johnson of St. Louis is the Editor. The first issue appeared in March of this year and the second issue in June. It is planning to enlarge the staff and has appointed the Rev. Dr. Robert Kevin, rector of Grace Church, Kirkwood, Mo., as Diocesan Editor.

MISSIONARY DISTRICT OF SALINA.

Rt. Rev. Robert H. Mize, D. D., Missionary Bishop.

The Rev. Frederick W. Golden-Howes has resigned the Deanship of Christ Cathedral, Salina. Dean Golden-Howes served at the Cathedral less than one year, coming to Salina from the Cathedral at Mexico City. He has recently been on a three months' leave of absence, preaching at St. George's Church, New York City. His successor has not yet been named. Two new clergy, both of them recent graduates of the General Theological Seminary, started their work in the District September 1. They are the Rev. Gale Webb, stationed at Cimarron and Garden City, and the Rev. Richard Kent Nale, stationed at Hays as a member of the GTS Associate Mission. Nale replaces the Rev. George Wyatt, who becomes the resident priest-in-charge of missions at Kinsley, Larned and Pratt.

Personal Notes

Dr. William Way, rector of Grace Church, Charleston, S. C., returned from England, September 21. Dr. Way attended the courses offered at The University of Cambridge, during the summer.

Calls Accepted.

The Rev. Merritt F. Williams, student Chaplain at the University of Florida, ministering to the young men of the two Florida Dioceses since January, 1933, has announced his acceptance of a call to become rector of historic St. Philip's Parish, in Charleston, S. C., and will assume charge of his new work on October 1. Mr. Williams will be greatly missed throughout the state, for he has traveled widely, and spoken many times throughout the past three years in the interest of the student's right to the Church's influence and ministrations during their college years.

The Rev. Walter W. Clem, rector of St. John's Church, Waynesboro, Va., has accepted a call to become rector of St. Paul's Church, Macon, Ga. He will resign his present pastorate October 1, and will assume charge of his new duties during the month. Mr. Clem attended the University of Virginia, the Virginia Theological Seminary and was ordained priest by Bishop Jett on St. James' Day of this year.

To Retire.

After forty-four years in the ministry, the Rev. Arnold Lutton, rector, Church of the Annunciation, Chicago, will preach his final sermon at the church where he has served for twenty-five years on Sunday, September 29. He is retiring on October 1. A parish reception was given in honor of Fr. Lutton September 27.

The Rev. Hugh M. MacWhorter, rector of Christ Church, Ottawa, has been appointed by the Bishop to succeed Fr. Lutton.

The Rev. M. A. Barber, S. T. D., after a rectorship of twenty-eight years at Christ Church, Raleigh, N. C., has retired from the active ministry on account of impaired health. Mr. Barber's new address is Box 66, Park Road, Charlotte, N. C.

The Rev. Louis D. Jacobs, minister-in-charge of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Binghampton, N. Y., and Miss Marie Mountain of New York City, were married in the Church of the Transfiguration on Monday, September 2.

Deaths.

The death of the Rev. Frank Poole Johnson occurred in Washington, D. C., on August 5, 1935, of a heart disease.

Funeral services were held in Woburn, Mass., August 9, from the Tripp Memorial Home (the Church being closed and without a rector), with the Rev. L. L. Weller, rector of Christ Church, Somerville, and former rector of Trinity Church, Woburn, officiating. Burial was in the family lot in Woodbrook Cemetery, Woburn.

The Rev. Mr. Johnson was on a visit to Washington when he became ill and was carried to the New Casualty Hospital, where he died the next day. He was born in Woburn, Mass., November 30, 1870, the son of the late Caroline Poole and Charles H. Johnson. He was a graduate of Amherst, Union Theological College, and was at one time professor of elocution in New York College. Later he was ordained to the priesthood and served in New Orleans, New England, and as rector of All Saints' Church, New York City.

He went to Georgia about 1929 or 1930, and was priest-in-charge of Grace Church, Waycross, Ga., and priest-in-charge of St. Paul's, Savannah, for a year in 1930-31.

The Rev. Arthur Quincy Davis, retired, age 87, a priest of the Church for more than fifty-three years, died in Clayton, N. Y., Thursday, September 26. Mr. Davis served for seven years as rector of Christ Church, Clayton.

The Rev. Francis Curtis Smith, former secretary of the Diocese of Central New York, died in Memorial Hospital, Utica, N. Y., August 4. Mr. Smith had served as rector of Trinity Church, Boonville, 1903-14; St. Luke's Church, Utica, 1914-20. He resigned as secretary of the diocese in November, 1934. He is survived by his wife, Maud Elizabeth Doig Smith; a daughter, Helen, and two sons, Walter and Reed.

The Rev. Charles W. F. Smith, who has been serving as assistant rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Va., has left for his new charge in Exeter, N. H. His new address is: Christ Church Rectory, Elliot St., Exeter, N. H.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

He is no fool who parts with what he cannot keep, and so obtains what he will not lose.

Missions is the people of the Gospel giving that Gospel to the people without it, no matter who they are or where they are.

The Kingdom of God can never be established by "raising money," but it cannot be extended without sharing money.

It is my own conviction that every human being has a direct intuition of God and an immediate contact with Him in the inmost recesses of the soul, so that when we discuss the existence and the nature of God we are really talking about what in a sense we know already." —Dean Matthews.

Joy is like the Atlantic cable, not affected by the storms overhead. So Paul could say when he wrote to the Philippians, to people who were enduring persecution and suffering privation, "Rejoice in the Lord alway, and again, I say, rejoice."—H. W. Hinde.

The love of Christ is the highest incentive for Christian service. Some, indeed, may serve from a sense of duty, or obligation, or even compulsion, and much good will follow from their labors. But the service most worthy of the name "Christian" is prompted and constrained by love, from which alone the highest good will come.—Selected.

The religion of Protestants is personal devotion to Christ, the acceptance of standards revealed by Him, and the type of "mystical" piety of which the Quakers are prominent witnesses.
—Dean Inge.

Do not look forward to what may happen tomorrow. The same everlasting Father who cares for you today will take care of you tomorrow, and every day. Either He will shield you from suffering, or He will give you unfailing strength to bear it. Be at peace, then, put aside all anxious thoughts and imaginations. —Frances deSales.

The house is not for me. It is for Him.
His royal thoughts require many a stair,
Many a tower, many an outlook fair,
Of which I have no thought, and need no care
Where I am most perplexed, it may be there
Thou mak'st a secret chamber, holy, dim,
Where Thou wilt come to help my deepest prayer.
—George MacDonald.

If the sign of the present time is change, then the only way for us to heed tomorrow's future time is to assume the leadership that will make that change constructive instead of destructive. —C. M. Muir.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

Joining Ethiopia in Prayer.

Mr. Editor:

Recently the Queen of Ethiopia made a public appeal to the women of the world to join her in prayer that war might be averted and so far we have been unable to learn that any one in any country publicly agreed to join with her in such prayer.

Was it because there was no Phillip, or one with the spirit of Phillip, who was willing to help the Ethiopians spiritually

When Lydia, "one who worshipped God," cried to Paul to come over into Macedonia, Paul responded gladly and thus Christianity was established in Europe by the response of a Christian to the call of Christian women in that continent.

America was Christianized because of the call of Lydia to Paul and his response. Yet when the Christians of Ethiopia call for united prayer, America has given no response.

To such an appeal the Christian Church in America in its self-sufficiency is deaf and in effect replies, "We have our religion, our lands, and our crops so large that we destroy part of them, as we cannot use all of them, all of which God gave us, and we cannot bother with other lands and people and the peace of the world."

Besides, Jehovah might ask the Christians of this nation why they destroyed the abundance of crops He gave them when so many millions of humans were hungry and living on charity; He might bring the dollar mark into the discussion and that would embarrass the Christians.

Perhaps maybe the failure of the American people, in this appeal from the Queen of Ethiopia to join in united world-wide prayers that war may be prevented is because in war time Christians put patriotism before God and in peace time they put money and government before God.

If the American people would publicly unite in prayer in public gatherings or broadcasting so that it could reach the whole world, and they were sincere, as was King Asa, then Jehovah would stop or destroy the Italian multitude as well as the Ethiopian multitude, without the two meeting and He could and would teach the hearts of the home people in the two countries so that they would be led by His spirit to stop their dictators.

But no, the American people are too indifferent and have no time for united public prayer.

Raymond M. Hudson.

Pacificism and Self-Defense.

Mr. Editor:

I wonder if a person may be allowed to think out loud in the pages of a Church paper.

A hundred and sixty years ago this country was being deluged with propaganda pro and con on a subject one side called "Loyalty" and the other "Liberty". The Revolutionary War was fought. Later another flood of propaganda was let loose, "Liberty and France" and "No entangling alliances" was the question. No war. Next "Slavery" was the topic on which men lost their heads. No war on this, but "States Rights" and "The Union" did bring a war.

A few decades passed and "Votes for Woman" and "A Woman's Place is in the Home" were the cries. No war. Prohibition next swept people off their feet, until "Demon Rum" and "Personal Liberty" had a grand propaganda fight. In between times people have tried to get us to go daffy on the "Anti-tobacco Crusade" and "Fundamentalism". Today Pacifism has the floor. No war has yet been fought on this topic, though quite a number of personal conflicts have probably occurred. For people have waxed just as earnest on this as they have on any other topic on which they have lost their sanity.

For if we run back over the years the same marks of the fanatic have been shown by all those behind these avalanches of propaganda, and by those who have been their victims, for first of all each of them considers that anyone who differs from him has committed the unforgivable sin, and second the fanatic always considers that if only his point is gained that it will bring in the millennium. For his idea, whether tobacco, whiskey, liberty or what not is invariably the panacea that will heal all our woes.

Thus though it is quite possible that many will wish to see me hung, drawn and quartered for the suggestion, it comes up inescapably that we have a remarkable capacity for making ourselves ridiculous by our earnestness.

War is a horrible thing. So is Death. But I would personally much prefer death to a number of other things I could name. I would also prefer it for those I love in preference to these things. I feel the same way about War. Yet unless the whole world is much mistaken, within a few weeks we will witness a major European power tramping through a tiny country with no purpose save pillage, and our Pacifist friends will be holding up their hands in horror at the wickedness of Abyssinia in going to war to protect itself. If those in paradise did not leave their sense of humor on earth may we not see them getting a tremendous kick out of this latest fad of ours.

Things New and Old.

There is an unfortunate attitude on the part of some older members of the Church that is manifest when plans for efficiency in church management are discussed. This attitude assumes that if new and well thought out plans of administration are suggested, the old faith of our fathers will suffer.

It is probably due to this attitude that the Church as a whole suffers from inefficiency in administration. There is not a business that in its business methods has not materially changed in the past fifty years, but many church people would seem to be content that the church continue as its organization was set up fifty years ago. And this in spite of the fact that many members are indifferent and the older methods, good in their day, seem to fail to attract people in a more modern age.

As a matter of fact, the methods suggested by the National Council are not concerned with the faith of our fathers except to help present them in a clearer way.

Our Lord lived in an age when many of our terms were not used, but the terms then in vogue could be and should be translated into our terminology. He spoke of eyes that might see, and we speak of surveys. He spoke of gathering people in from highways, while we speak of "participation". Surely were He with us today He would be a modern, as He was a modern in His own day.

We sometimes wonder if the main opposition to more efficient methods in the Church is not really a lazy attitude that implies that all of the real work of the Church should be done by the clergy. So we have looked for easier methods and actually they have been harder methods. Instead of taking time to use publicity and other means of educating people to the task of the Church, we have, at best, depended upon emotional appeal, and that is usually only effective with the type of person who is already interested in the work of the Church and understands the emotion. If we really wish to bring men in, we must find more methodical ways. We must understand the problems that we face and the conditions under which our people live.

Only the survey methods will give us a picture of the problems. Only a real visitation campaign will really touch people. Letters, no matter how well written, will not reach the unused, and if we want to do the task to which the Church has been called we must find methods that will work in an age of automobiles and scattered communicants.

The old faith remains the vital faith given us through the ages from the Master. The method must meet the age in which we live, and if it calls for new and scientific ways of expression, we must remember that the only thing that is "secular" is sin.

The President and Clerical Advisors.

The reaction to the letter of the President addressed to the clergy of the nation has been interesting. Of course, there were those who only saw a political trick and a bid for votes. Others, just as extreme, felt that the President had at last come to the right place for real information.

Unfortunately, the ministry, in all churches, has a number of poor souls who consider themselves economic experts, and such an invitation as the President gave to write out their views was the opportunity for which they had been waiting for years. We fear the President's secretaries will have many tomes to read over about inflation, social credit, socialism and a thousand and one other subjects.

What is the minister's best knowledge of his community and what is the point of view from which he should write that really might be of help at the present time?

We have, for long, had in the history of Christianity a good example of the bad and the good testimony. There have been those who considered themselves in a theoretical way the saviors of Christianity. But their ideas has been theoretical. They have preached and written from the theoretical standpoint and generally have had some thesis which was not the result of experience, but was something that they must prove at any cost. Such testimony has never converted men nor has it added much to the progress of Christianity.

Then there were those others who spoke, wrote and taught from real personal experience. Their sermons were not theory, but actual experience retold, forcibly in the light of actual knowledge. Such testimony was the kind used by the original disciples of Our Lord who told what they knew, for it was what they had experienced.

Today we must have many ministers, not necessarily students of economics, who know from personal experience how their people live. They must know the men and women who look forward with fear and trembling to old age without security. They also must know those members who, through ignorance, oppose any social legislation as dangerous and "socialistic". If in their contacts ministers feel that Christianity can be of help and has been of help in changing the point of view of men towards a better understanding of

The League to Abolish Poverty.
Dean Johnson of Canterbury Explains His System.

The Canadian Churchman, September 26, 1935.

The Very Rev. Hewlett Johnson, Dean of Canterbury, is visiting Canada in the interests of the League to Abolish Poverty. He spoke to a crowded house in Ottawa, and in Massey Hall, Toronto. "Social credit is a matter above party politics. It is a matter for the Christian Church as a whole," he says: "We Social Credit people ask three things: we want the people to regain sovereign control of money; we want industry to be accommodated at all stages by finance as the servant, not the master; and we want sufficient money put in the pockets of people to buy as consumers what they have made as producers," and, added the Dean, "it can all be done so simply by means of Social Credit."

"Machinery, Dr. Johnson stated, was a gift from God. With the multiplication of power brought on by it, there should not be the words poverty and economy, or any talk of stint. The community should be leisured, resting on an army of machinery. Unemployment, he declared, was not a sign of disease—it was a sign of health. Every person was entitled to be paid something apart from what he received for working. This dividend should be paid from the date of birth until the date of death, he said.

"The industrial machine is capable of turning out anything, but we don't use it. We are dotty because we have this machine, and we are using it like a man who has a Rolls Royce and runs it at twenty miles an hour all the time," he said.

"You can rest upon the basis of the machine, and instead of having one section of the community leisured you can have the whole community leisured. If a little bit of leisure could give a wonderful output of creative energy, what will the leisure of a whole community give?

"That is the possibility. My word! How I would like to speak to you, not for an hour, but for two hours on that. What would it mean? What would it mean to those families of the unemployed? And to you and to others? What would it mean if you thought you could get your securities without having to try to grab as much as you can get together and put into the banks or invest, and be always looking at stocks and shares to see whether they are safe, and just adding on a little bit to your wealth in order to be quite sure. When I go among my little boys and girls and find one of them who has a wonderful talent for music, I say: 'My dear child, what are you going to be? God has given you a great gift. Are you going to be a musician?' She would say: 'I should love to.' 'Then why are you not?' The answer would be: 'There is no money in it.'

"It is true, too. You ask the musicians in this town. Think what it would be if that child had not to think about that, but could go on developing that gift. Think what it would mean if my friend the great scientist, with his team of young people around him at his university, did not lose them just on the verge of great discoveries, which are made by team-work. The young people are so keen, but the end of the four years comes and they have to go in order to try to make money—as often as not, by shorthand and typewriting—and you do not make much by that either. So the team breaks up.

"Ah, I can just visualize what it will be in the future if all those boys and girls from my school are able to develop just the thing that God has given it.

"I believe, and I speak before God, that everything I have been saying now is the kind of truth that God wants us to listen to today. God is speaking to us through science, speaking to us through the brains of great organizers, possible only in Christendom, a great ordered society; scientists arising only in Christendom, because of that love of truth that Christianity has implanted deep in the hearts of men. Here is the thing that God is giving back again to us, in response for seeking first His Kingdom—those simple souls who made Christendom, those scientists who follow the line of truth. God is pouring His riches upon us. Let us not destroy them. Let us use them."

A few of the many striking utterances of the Dean of Canterbury follow:—

"All over the world there are echoes of this thing Douglas discovered."

"We are in the ridiculous position that in the midst of an unparalleled plenty we are poor."

"There must be sufficient money in the pockets of the people, as consumers, for them to be able to buy that which, as producers, they have made. And that is just what they cannot do today."

"Industry has to cut its coat to suit the interests of finance instead of finance being made to cut its cast to suit the interest of industry."

"One of the biggest discoveries with regard to money was that you could make it out of nothing and get interest upon it. It was a great discovery!"

"We ought not to farm out to a private monopoly that thing, the power to make money, which His Holiness the Pope says is the very life-blood of industry."

Kagawa.

Christian Index.

Kagawa is probably the world's first Christian. He never despairs of men. He says:

"I am fond of men. The worst, most fear-inspiring, demonized murderer somewhere in his make-up has that which is irresistible. Plagued by them, I flee. Often I left the slums of Shinkawa for a season because bullies made life a torture for me. Yet I did not abandon those rogues of the slums.

"Nature is fascinating, but the children of the slums also abound in interest. If I am privileged to play with them I will not say that nature surpasses them in attractiveness.

"Sin makes men base. If there was no liquor and no syphilis the worst of rogues would inspire no fear. The rogue himself is not to be feared, but loaded with liquor he creates terror.

"I cannot say that a man minus a nose because of the inroads of self-inflicted disease, or the stooped and broken courtesan, is more beautiful than a flower, but I cannot abandon hope regarding either of them. I cling to men. I love them. I can't help loving them. Even though I am cornered and forced to flee from men whom the demon of drink transforms into beasts yet I speedily seek them out again when they return to a sober state."

Kagawa has recently been in Australia. The Australian Baptist, telling of his visit there, has this to say of the man:

"In all the annals of foreign mission work nothing that we have read of has been so wonderful and so manifestly blessed of God as has the service of Toyohiko Kagawa. He is a Jap. He has seen Christ through Oriental eyes. He has found in the Cross of his

The Reign of Christ

St. Paul says in the passage familiar to so many, as part of the Burial Service: "He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet." This of course refers to Christ, and to the universal dominion which will be His in time. The reason why He does not use His Almighty power to crush out all rebellion against and disobedience to His Will and authority is that He chose to use moral force instead of physical to extend His dominion. He had no desire to rule over a Kingdom of slaves, men who served Him because they had to do so. The Kingdom of Heaven could not be built up in that way. There would be too many loose stones in the wall of the New Jerusalem if the loyalty of His subjects could not be depended upon.

The Power of the Cross.

Christ Himself said:—"I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." By this He implied that He counted upon the sacrifice of Himself upon the Cross, out of love to men, to be the means by which He would gradually win the allegiance and devotion of mankind. Love is the most powerful of all the motives which influence the lives of men and Christ knew that, if only His Love could reach the hearts of men, it would serve as a magnet to draw them to Him. St. Paul felt the power of that love when he said:—"The love of Christ constraineth us," that is, he realized that it was the motive power which was drawing out all that was best in him, and inspiring him to sacrifice himself in furthering the Cause of his Master.

On Preaching Christ Crucified.

This, too, was probably the reason why in writing to the Corinthians, he said:—"I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." The love of Christ for him, as manifested by His Death upon the Cross, had won him, and so he said:—"He loved me, He gave Himself for me." This had worked so powerfully on him that he felt sure that if others could be brought to see and feel that love in the same way that he did, they would be won, too. For love owes its supreme place among the motives, not only because it is the greatest and highest of those which govern and influence men, but because it is divine. For Christ Himself has taught us that "God is Love," and that His own life and death were to be understood by us as manifestations of this truth. "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

God's Love Revealed in Christ.

The revelation of the Love of God to man was the purpose for which Christ came into the world, culminating in His Death upon the Cross for the sin of mankind. It must, therefore, be our part to make that love known as widely as possible. If men can be brought to realize that God loves them, and this love penetrates into their hearts, then they will be drawn to Him. And it is the dying love of Christ which is the most convincing proof of the Divine Love, and it is, therefore, through Him that we are brought home to our heavenly Father. It is the duty of the Church to seek to extend the dominion of Christ throughout the world, and we know of no better and surer way to accomplish this than to make Him known to all men as the Son of God who came into the world to make known the love of the Father to mankind. There are many who do not believe in Foreign Missions, but that is because they do not understand God's purpose in sending His Son into the world, nor what His purpose is with regard to the future. Thus we read in St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians:—"Having made known unto us the mystery of His Will, according to His good pleasure, which He hath purposed in Himself; that in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in Him."

All Men Must Know the Love of God.

The love of God must be known to all men. This is the Divine Purpose of Redemption, and since it is known to us through the coming of Christ, and by His Death upon the Cross, so must we make it known to our fellowmen throughout the world. His Kingdom cannot come till that is done, for Christ Himself said, with regard to His Second Coming, that, "the Gospel must first be preached to all nations." We all pray:—"Thy Kingdom come," but we must do our part in bringing it about. To spread the knowledge of the Love of God, as revealed in Jesus Christ, is like giving sunlight to the Arctic regions during the long winter, with no sun to cheer them. But it is more than that, for the Love of God is the sunshine of the soul, giving light and cheer and comfort, when out outward surroundings are most gloomy and depressing. For the Love of God brings with it joy and peace, which together make up a glorious contribution to the happiness and blessedness of human life, which adds to it a value that cannot be estimated.

The Great Opportunity.

To extend Christ's reign over the hearts of men, is the greatest opportunity which God has placed within our reach, and to neglect such an opportunity shows that we have never realized the inestimable value of the treasure which has been entrusted to us. The greatest need of the world is Christ, as He is the only one who really understands what the world needs, and is able to supply that need. As Christians we ought to realize this in our own lives. And if we do realize that He and His Love are what we most need and cannot do without, then we must see that what we need the world also needs.

Then love shall like the sun bless all the earth,
And give to all mankind a second birth,
And yield to life its richest noblest worth.

Christ waits serene till we awake and see
His vision of the earth as it would be
If He could always count on you and me.

The Seminoles of South Florida

By G. W. GASQUE,

Rector of The Church of The Incarnation, Atlanta.

"DEACONESS BEDELL knows her Indians, and her Indians know her," is the enthusiastic declaration of Mr. George W. Peace, business man of Miami, senior warden and teacher of the Adult Bible Class of the Church of the Holy Cross, and a loyal friend of the Glade Cross Mission at Everglades.

We had spent the day fishing among the Thousand Islands on the West Coast, and when we started home late in the afternoon, we stopped at the Mission, begun a little more than two years ago by Deaconess Harriet Bedell. We knocked at the door of the little frame building which serves as meeting house, social hall, work rooms, and living quarters—but there was no response.

"She's out somewhere making calls," commented Mr. Peace. "You seldom find her at home."

On our eighty miles drive to Miami he related some interesting facts concerning the Seminoles in general and of Deaconess Bedell and the Glade Cross Mission in particular.

He estimates that there are between three and four hundred Seminoles in the Diocese of South Florida, a people who have been exhibited and exploited so long and to such a degree that they have little or no confidence in their white neighbors.

As a matter of fact, it is more than a lack of confidence; it is almost if not entirely a state of hatred, a disgust, a racial enmity, which has been in the blood of the Seminoles for centuries. According to their appraisal of the white man, he cannot be trusted. They have no dealing with him; they show no interest in his affairs; they stand aloof from him.

From the beginning the Seminoles have been ultra-independent. Because of their unwillingness to surrender certain "rights," they seceded early in the eighteenth century from the Creek Confederacy; hence their name, "Simanoli, "runaway". The long Seminole War, perhaps the hardest fought of all the Indian wars, which cost thousands of lives and millions of dollars, was due, under the influence and leadership of their chief, to the tribe's refusal to cede their lands and remove to Arkansas, in accordance with the treaty of Payne's Landing in 1832.

OSCEOLA, the son of William Powell, an Englishman, was the greatest chief that the Seminoles ever had, brave, cunning and deceitful. He married the daughter of a Negro slave, who some years later was taken from him and returned to her owner, and when Osceola protested, he was humiliated by being thrown into chains. These and other experiences caused him to hate the whites with an intensity hardly equaled in Indian history. The present generation of Seminoles in South Florida are the children and grandchildren of Osceola's day, and they have not forgotten the suffering, chagrin, and mortification, due, according to their interpretation, to the dishonest and unjust dealing of the whites a hundred years ago.

So, when Deaconess Bedell went as a United Thank Offering missionary to the Seminoles in 1933, she found herself in the midst of a hostile people. I here may not have been any violent animosity or active opposition to her personally, but the spirit of bitterness and antagonism was no less real.

Here is a typical story of her early experience as told in her own words: "I stopped to speak to some Indians who had come out of the swamps and were camping on the Tamiami Trail. I told them that I had come to be their friend, but they refused to shake hands with me. When I placed my hand on the shoulder of one of the women, she disdainfully repulsed the advance. When I saw that I was gaining no ground, I told them that some day they would know me better and left them. On returning to my car I remembered that I had some jelly, and, thinking that it would please them, I returned with a jar, but the leading man came up and said, 'Indian no want 'em'."

In less than two years from that afternoon the Deaconess has won her way into their complete confidence. She is now welcome not only in their homes and villages, but they visit her daily at the Mission, and often send for her in cases of sickness and other needs. Even the medicine man will permit her to visit his patients.

One night word came to the Mission that a little boy was sick and that she was needed at once. It was nine o'clock, very dark, and raining. Going to an Indian village near Everglades, she asked if some one would drive her car. Three men volunteered immediately, and they were soon off on the twenty-seven mile trip. Driving through the swamps at night is deceiving and dangerous. When the water reaches the running-board, and the trail is too soft, the driver says, "We walk now," which means that the Deaconess must remove her shoes and stockings and wade; or if the water is deep enough, she makes the remainder of the journey by canoe. The rattlesnakes which infest the swamps do not deter this brave and apparently indefatigable woman from answering any call when she thinks that she can be of service.

A FEW MONTHS ago the Deaconess spent the night in one of their villages, and after the evening meal was finished, she sang some hymns and read Evening Prayer, and when she was ready to retire, two young women came into the house, and without saying anything, prepared their bed in one corner of the room "so you not be lonesome."

The Seminoles would like to know how to read, and, although they refuse to be "taught," they are quite willing that Deaconess Bedell should "show" them, and this fall she has a class of young men industriously studying their lessons and making satisfactory progress.

At the present time there is not a single baptized Christian among the Seminoles, but five families are being prepared for baptism, one of the men being on the Indian Council. Having no chief, all tribal affairs are transacted by a group of men called the Council.

The Seminoles being very poor, the Deaconess has established an industrial work which is developing rapidly. They are making baskets, bracelets, plaques, bookends, dolls, and Indian busts carved in wood. These and other articles are brought to the Mission, and the Deaconess has undertaken to find a market for all their wares.

What is the secret of her remarkable success? She is a missionary at heart, she is always on the job, she loves her work, she spends an hour every day in prayer, and she has unbounded faith in God.

Church Union Summer School of Sociology

By H. MARTIN P. DAVIDSON,

A Correspondent in England.

THIS "School", or as we should say, "conference", was held for three days in Keble College, Oxford, July 29-August 1. For ten years now the "School" has been held here. Always the interest and discussion has been in social reform and social systems, for example, last year the subject was "Communism and Its Challenge to Christianity." But the leaders have been brought to a feeling that Christian social thinkers needed to examine the basis of their thinking, that is their Christian beliefs, and this year the subject was to be theological. Three papers were written beforehand and printed in "Christendom"—that "Journal of Christian Sociology," to give its subtitle, which is so ably edited by Mr. Maurice B. Reckitt, Miss Ruth Kenyon, J. P. and the Reverends V. A. Demant and P. E. T. Widdrington. Miss Vida Scudder of Wellesley, Mass., and the Reverends Frank Gavin and Charles Fielding of General Seminary are American associate editors. The magazine is a quarterly, which deserves to be widely read for its cogent articles on current social problems. (Morehouse Publishing Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., is the agent in America). This editorial group and others associated with them are of the so-called Oxford Movement Succession, and it is interesting to note that the American theologian, John Bennett, in his book, "Social Salvation" (published by Scribners last spring) referred to them as the most socially-minded group in the Anglican Communion. Perhaps it is not to be wondered at that they should turn or be turned to theology and yet there were prophets in plenty to predict that a so far very encouraging venture was about to be killed, because no one would come to a "school of sociology" turned theologist. When the "school" opened it could be announced that the registration was the highest yet! Which thing is a parable perhaps of the desire on the part of Christian people to get the foundations of their faith laid before they build on it a program of action. "God, Man and the World" was the subject of study. As the syllabus, issued to those who enrolled amplified it, "dogmas have been too often proclaimed in vacuo, and in such a way that the faith in them to which men have been urged remains unrelated to the needs and frustrations which they actually feel and experience. This not only in men's personal lives but in the whole atmosphere of the social life in which they are caught up. . . . There is a compelling need for the Church to present its doctrines as an answer to the problems we actually have. What we have got to establish, not by precept, but by a new interpretation of contemporary experience, is that God, sin, redemption, and grace are not pious hypotheses, to which men have somehow to persuade themselves, but a faith without recognition of which our personal and corporate lives cannot begin to make sense." "Christendom" expressed it thus in its leading editorial, "it is unrealistic to talk of 'Christianizing the social order.' It is necessary first to Christianize the mind and will of Christians themselves, that they may understand the world in which we are living, and where its purposes and assumptions are at variance with the revelation of God. And for this it is essential that we return to theology."

THE SET-UP of the conference may be of interest. The three papers, "The Doctrine of Creation," by the Dean of Exeter, S. S. Carpenter; "The Doctrine of Man," by Rev. H. Blamforth, and "The Doctrine of the World," by Canon A. L. Lieley of Hereford, were to be read beforehand. So also was the syllabus, with its pointings toward the very real contemporary problems of Marxian Communism as a denial of God in the World Process, the deification of the state as in Germany with its confining of God to history and its considering man as significant solely as an element in history. The conference was broken up into six groups, each one of which was to spend the mornings discussing one question (out of a list of six that had been prepared by the committee), which grew out of the original paper. In the late afternoon each group reported its findings to the whole conference and the findings were discussed. At night the writer of the original paper first tried to correct any misconceptions or give more leading and then led a general discussion.

It would be impossible in a small space to report the discussions and findings. A few points from each must suffice. The Dean of Exeter pointed out in his paper that "the Christian doctrine of Creation . . . is a Biblical doctrine . . . a part of Semetic theism which Christianity has taken over from the Old Testament," but "it was not taken over unbaptized . . . the Fourth Evangelist with his 'In the beginning was the Word' deliberately picks up the 'In the beginning' of Genesis 1:1." And he quoted Archbishop Temple's remark, "The essence of the doctrine of Creation is not that God inaugurated the existence of the world at a particular moment of time, but that it owes its existence—not only its beginning—to his volitional activity." Then the Dean added, "Christians are concerned to assert 'the primacy of the spiritual' . . . in the sense of the Psalter, 'the Lord sitteth above the water-flood; the Lord remaineth a King forever' . . . You can say what you like about the essential dignity of man, if you have first formulated your idea of the Creator—God—before Whom man must be on his knee to worship. The two doctrines of Creation and Redemption . . . are integral and harmonious parts of the Catholic Faith. . . That is what the Lambeth bishops meant in 1930, when they spoke of 'God in His majesty as Creator and His still greater majesty as Redeemer.' Thus the real purpose of creation is perceived. The planless progressives run around and around in circles and achieve nothing. Even those who are intelligent and purposeful will lose contact with the real Purpose unless their hopes are harnessed to eternity." This was the point at which Christianity was in conflict with the purely materialistic purpose of Marxist thinking and action, but it was acknowledged in the general discussion that this Marxist thinking was producing a dynamic in Russia that was in fact religious, and that rather put the Christians to shame. Can its this-worldly purpose continue to inspire devotion and sacrifice?

THE REV. H. BALMFORTH ably presented the Christian teaching about the Incarnation and its place in God's redemptive purpose. "It is the conviction of Christians that man . . . finds his explanation in the light of the Act of God which we call the Incarnation. . . . Man is meant for God. But he is meant for God as a psycho-physical being, not as pure spirit; he is the meeting place of nature and supernature, and his life pattern will, therefore, be incarnated and sacramental . . . again man is meant for God not as an isolated individual . . . but as a member, first of the human race, and then of the . . . redeemed family of mankind, the Kingdom of God. . . . Actually man has not followed the straight road to the fulfilment of his destiny. . . . His life is a tension, not a harmony; strain and conflict are written large over the whole of human history. . . . If man was to be restored to his supernatural state, it

Russian Communism and Christianity

By Frederick Ward Kates,

Theological Seminary Student, Rochester, New York.

THE RUSSIA of today is one of the most interesting phenomena in recent centuries. Here is a vast nation, of approximately 165,000,000 people, comprising within its borders more than eight million square miles, dominated by a dictatorial political party of about one million members, which is attempting to erect a social, economic and political order based solely on economic and material considerations. Russia's materialistic philosophers find only economics determining the course of human history. Other factors are conscientiously ignored or not seen.

This amazing new order, rising out of the chaos and, to us, unbelievably low standard of living of the Russia of 1917, cannot long endure nor can it ever attain the goal it sets for itself. It is being built on a false foundation, upon a philosophy which is not scientifically in accord with the facts. Material factors have not, it so happens, solely determined the course of the human race's destiny to the present day. And because the directors of modern Russia do not take into account all the factors—spiritual as well as material—their brave experiment is foredoomed to fail.

Russian Communism may succeed in getting for many Russians a higher level of material well-being before many more years have passed, but, in achieving this very thing, it will write its own death warrant. For when Russia's millions have been educated, even a very little bit, their eyes will open to the deficiencies and the errors in the Russian interpretation of history and of life; and then the Russia which the Communists are trying to transform into a materialist Utopia, which they believe will be the true representative of Heaven, will quickly go. Educated Russians will see then, as many are seeing already, that life without God is a barren life indeed, if it may be described at all as life such as a human being should live; that a man is more than a cog in a great industrial machine; that a despotic regime by a proletarian clique tyrannically ruling the minds and hearts and wills of all men alike is no paradise.

Russian Communism cannot succeed ultimately, for it carries within itself the seeds of its own decay and ruin. Not its vicious bureaucracy and the injustice it works to men of good will will cause its downfall, as that it will break upon the simple fundamental facts of life as men have discovered them.

Man as an individual, as a bearer of eternal values, is an unknown conception in Communism. An abstraction, the proletariat, has been put in place of man as a man. Communism has no respect for personality; all men are alike to it, and this any intelligent person knows is not according to the facts. Christianity is the one religion in the world which is in line with all the facts, and it recognizes as basic that each man, though each is of differing gifts and capacities, is as infinitely valuable to God as every other man.

"If a man die, shall he live again," asked Job thousands of years ago. Christianity answers, "Yes"; Christ has given us full reason to believe that death does not mean the end of our lives. Men in all ages have put this same query, and men in all ages demand an answer. Communism will break on this rock, for it has no answer to make.

Life is all economics and material values to the Communist; it has no interest in nor any answers for the eternal questions of mankind and nothing whatsoever with which to meet mankind's spiritual needs. Christianity regards men as heirs of God and of eternity, not just creatures of the moment. The permanent values of Communism are material; of Christianity, spiritual, for it knows man is pre-eminently a spiritual being, not an economic unit and slave to this world. The Christian forces of the world will be vitally augmented some years hence when masses of young Communist-bred Russians come to Christianity, with its interpretation of human life and destiny in line with the facts, for the satisfying answer to their spirits' need.

Christianity holds that man is a moral being of freedom, whose actions must be held accountable to God. Communism is a moral; economic necessity is the only law it knows.

It is on the matter of belief in God that Christianity, Judaism and all theistic religious faiths split with Commnunism. God and God alone is the source of all Christianity's ideas and standards. Basic to the Communist is the denial of the existence of God.

Communism is against all religion and Christianity in particular as the most vital of them all, because religion represents a way of life directly antitheistical to that which it advocates.

Communism will lose in the long run, because it isn't based on the facts. Christianity will triumph, for it is in line with the highest knowledge men possess and with the truth.

CHURCH UNION SUMMER SCHOOL OF SOCIOLOGY.

must be by the redemptive action of God. . . . In Christ . . . humanity recovers its supernatural status." The Incarnation implies that "human nature was still capable of response to the purposes of God" and "Everything in human life on earth turns on a new seriousness. Social relationships and their expression in the just ordering of society . . . every department of the life of man is related to eternal life." "The charter of a Christian supernaturalism is also that of "a Christian humanism." In the discussions this eternal value in man was contrasted with the Nazi ethics in which 'there are no transcendent values" but only the necessities of the moment. The basis for a Christian Sociology seems likely to lie in Christian theology. Mr. Balmforth summed it up in the evening, "The doctrine of Redemption is the basis in theology for a Christian sociology. The cross was but a moment in a process which the Church must carry forward, else as in Israel of old failure will mean suffering for the world, even for God Himself. Christ and His Christians are one Christ now. In no area of human life can we turn Christ out, no area can go unredeemed. He is the Mediator of all salvation—this is the word at the center of the Gospels and hence the sociological emphasis is inevitable."

Canon Lieley's paper was full of learned references to theological works of modern Germans, the official opinions of St. Thomas Aquinas, and to Augustine, Calvin and numerous others. Perhaps his own summary will best show the import of it. "The question to which I have tried to find an answer is this: Does Christian theology, or at any rate the main current of Christian theology, represent the Christian religion as a world-offering or world-denying? . . . out of such knowledge as I have gained I would answer the question somehow thus: Christian theology has in its main current kept true to the unhesitating world-affirmation of the Old Testament. . . . It has believed in history as the gesta Dei."

Discussion brought out several noteworthy remarks. "Christians had heretofore been not nearly enough 'body-conscious'," which was in line Charles Kingsley's lament that bishops were not interested in sanitation as well as salvation. A cogent reply to a business man who complained that the Church was interfering with his business was suggested, "You also are interfering with ours." "A Christian Fascism is a contradiction in terms, a Christian Communism may not be." No one seemed anxious to equate the Church and the Kingdom of God, rather the Church which is made up of those who consciously acknowledge "the Rule of God" was "the organ and nucleus of the Kingdom." Those who have sat at the feet of Cosby Bell will hear him saying much the same thing in his more picturesque way, "The Church is like an agricultural machine that prepares the field for the Kingdom." "How nearly of one mind was the Liberal Evangelical to these Liberal Catholics," one graduate of the Virginia Seminary at the "School" remarked to another! The laity, men and women, at this conference were the marvel of the American visitors, Sir Henry Slesser, Miss Ruth Kenyon, Mr. Maurice Reckitt, to name a few. They knew more theology and philosophy and sociology than the clergy oftentimes. One thing was impressive, the devotional life of the "School." Holy Communion was celebrated every morning, Evensong was said in the afternoon, and compline in chapel after the evening sessions, and it was obvious that prayer was no formality. Surely a Christian sociology, built on theology and held together by prayer is in a position to make a contribution to the present world.

CHURCH AND WORLD PROBLEMS.

Lord the secret of the universe. He has lived love. He has poured out the rich red wine of youth. He has interpreted the Christ of the Mount and the Christ of the Cross to hundreds of thousands of his countrymen. He has also lifted their social status. He has championed the oppressed. He bears in his body the marks of Jesus.

"He comes to the Dominion in poverty to share his experience with us. He travels steerage. He is so full of love that when a missionary lady on the ship that brought him here was robbed of her purse he immediately offered her half of his. Men like Kagawa, of the brotherhood of St. John, are a class apart. Who bothers because Francis of Assisi was a Catholic? He is the whole world's saint. Who bothers because John Woolman was a Quaker and never in his life partook of the Lord's Supper? He is a supreme Protestant saint. We may not agree with this or that in him. We agree in him.

"And Kagawa belongs with them. Whether he would explain inspiration or atonement or creation or the Sacraments in the terms we prefer is an irrelevant question. George MacDonald said of one of his friends who passed on: 'He knows God, and unless a man knows God he knows nothing'."

Things That Hinder

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,

Bishop of Washington.

THERE come times in the life of individuals and peoples when they are compelled to freshly appraise their equipment and the accumulation of things that the multiplying years have brought in their train. A situation arises where it becomes necessary to discover what is essential and what is non-essential, what is economical and what is extravagant in accomplishing a given course.

There is an incident in the Old Testament that illustrates the force of this. In the thirty-third Chapter of the Book of Exodus we have the record of the migration of a people from one country to another. Moving under the direction of a great leader, namely, Moses, they had pursued their journey hopefully and expectantly, but now and again they experienced a severe interruption that threatened the success of their venture and the failure of their enterprise. In the instance referred to, their leader had solemnly admonished them concerning their wilful apostasy and their disobedience to the just demands of their leaders. In their embarrassment and humiliation we read that, "The children of Israel stripped themselves of their ornaments by the Mount of Horeb." Evidently they had come to realize that they had laid too great stress upon things purely external and that were unrelated to the large interests of the attainment of the goal they sought to reach. A critical situation compelled them to consider more seriously the real purpose of their pilgrimage and to lay aside anything and everything that hindered them in their quest.

Far removed as the incident is, it is suggestive of a condition that repeatedly faces us in the prosecution of our life's plan. It is inevitable that, as the years multiply we accumulate without reference to their value or use, things that are purely ornamental and unessential. This is not only true as it concerns our occupation, our homes, but it is still more true as it relates to our associations and affiliations. Our bias and our prejudice come largely from the undue value we place upon intellectual conceits that have no distinct bearing upon the deep and permanent values of life itself. Any real appraisal of life's essentials leads us to the conviction that we are unduly influenced by things that are purely extraneous and unrelated to its chief interests.

We recall that Thoreau was unwilling to encumber his life with unnecessary possessions. He found that they hindered him not only in his studies but in the attainment of his ideals. As he grew in years he sought to rid himself of everything that would embarrass and hinder him in his search.

The supreme example of a life lived on such high levels that it could not and would not feel the pressure of unnecessary encumbrance was that of the Master. In the prosecution of His ministry He steadfastly refused to permit external and environing conditions to embarrass or hinder Him. It was written of Him that, "He knew not where to lay His head." His judgment of men was based upon what He discovered within rather than what was without. He penetrated beneath that which was superficial and revealed potential powers of which they had never dreamed. He persistently sought to show men that life did not consist in the things which they possessed, that moral worth transcended everything.

When we come to the real tests or crises of life, we are driven to dispossess ourselves of many things that have unduly claimed our attention and regard. In such a situation we lay aside the ornaments and superficial adornments that have claimed an excess of consideration, and we realize that life's finer values are disclosed in what we are rather than in what we have. In our religious practice, and indeed in our devotional life, we place too great stress upon the externals of our religious profession. They doubtless have their place where they serve as a means to an end, but where they occupy too large a place in our consideration of things essential they prove unsatisfying, and unavailing when a supreme test is upon us. These more recent years have made clear the futility of wrong appraisals. One of the mightiest lessons that our latest crisis has enforced is that, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the thing which he possesseth."

Comfort

By Eunice Wingate Quimby.

Somersworth, New Hampshire.

THE very word itself—pronounce it and see if it does not sound like the relief of a sigh, as one drops into a deep-cushioned chair before an open fire in the home of a congenial friend.

Superficially, such a feeling means at least temporary relief from present discomfort. But the word comfort means more than this; it signifies a joining of strength. To that picture of physical well-being must be joined some stimulation of the soul.

What refreshment flows from good and great old books! Old, because they would not have endured if they had not possessed permanent worth and beauty. Such fellowship as flows from reading of the home life, philosophy, and tragedies of the Greeks, Romans, and early French and German, units humanity, narrows space, and contracts time.

The inscription above the door of the Library at Thebes was "Medicine for the Soul." And Emily Dickinson sings:

"He danced along the dingy days,
And this bequest of wings
Was but a book. What liberty
A loosened spirit brings!"

Another source of peace abides in the everlasting hills. Leaving for the moment the psalmist's belief that his God dwelt upon the mountain-top, recalls the rest of soul that accrued to you at the sight of that line of blue-gray hills bordering the earth's edge, which seemed to declare that even on earth we may have peace, though heaven be above our reach.

Again, what quietude may underlie daily work and duties! Attention to homely tasks presses back our troubles into indistinctness and true proportion. Walt Whitman opened our eyes to its mission:

"Oh, little recks the laborer
How near his work is holding him to God,
The loving Laborer through space and time."

While books and nature and work are real comforters, wise and acceptable human sympathy will result in warmth of brotherly feeling, peace, encouragement, and bracing vigor. Plato called comfort the liberty of the soul.

Can it be that there are instances where one is not entitled to this betterment of human sympathy? King Ahab lay down on his bed with his face to the wall and refused to eat, because he could not posess his neighbor's homestead. When another's good causes us sorrow, I am sure we shall agree that justice and unselfishness will answer no call for condolence.

Moreover, when personal effort to rise above grief is imperative, comfort may wisely be withheld, lest it reopen the wound, instead of calming and cheering the sufferer.

On the other hand, there are those who shrink from proffered comfort. One has the right to be alone with his grief if such isolation is preferred, and most of us at times may have been thus sensitive. But in analyzing such a feeling, I wonder if it may not be pride and inordinate self-pity that rejects comfort, or receives it like "cold porridge." When Joseph's blood-stained coat was brought to Jacob, "all his sons and all his daughters rose up to comfort him; but he refused to be comforted."

However, stony places where comfort is useless are few compared with the tracts of experience where it is merited and welcomed; whence the cry, "Is there no balm in Gilead?" is often inarticulate. Brothers and sisters in our Father's family are bravely struggling because of poverty, sickness, vocational handicaps, want of opportunity, loss of friends, regret for mistakes, remorse for sin. "Bear ye one another's burdens."

What forms may comfort in its adequate ministrations take? An opportunity just to express one's trouble to a sympathetic listener gives in itself relief before specific help or comfort is proffered. An understanding heart, one who has himself experienced consolation, can best fit the comfort to the need: physical comforts in poverty and sickness; opportunities for training and service; appreciation of effort to those who are uncomplainingly struggling; the long look to heavenly reunion for loss of friends; God's forgiveness and forbearance for weakness of the flesh; and a spur to character development available through the Spirit.

But comfort must not be tardy, else the moan of Katharine to her husband, Henry the Eighth, may be echoed.

"That comfort comes too late;
'Tis like a pardon after execution."

And it must be tender. "Don't drive a horse through a man's soul," said the preacher Talmadge.

"What can I do for you?" said a nurse to a little boy in a hospital.

"Smile upon me."

The argumentative approach to the administration of comfort will often fail, and may call forth such inward response as spoke itself in Jacob's ejaculations: "Miserable (wearisome in Hebrew) comforters are ye all."

Also, a sufferer shrinks from an attempt to minimize his grief. He hugs to himself its full realization, and wishes not to have it torn from him, but some everlasting arm stretched underneath both him and it. "He jests at scars who never felt a wound."

Let us consider now the God whom the psalmist felt above the hills. Spurgeon affirmed: "Give me the comforts of God, and I can well bear the taunts of men." Isaiah made God's comfort graphic in the consoling words: "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you."

Swift as the humming-bird darts from the sweet flower bells,
And wings to his soft tiny nest on the branch well-secured,
So turned my sensitive heart when a child, hurt, perplexed,
Straight to a mother, whose comfort and hope were assured.
So turn my soul now to Thee, O Father of all,
Our Saviour and Refuge, Strength-giver and Guide, if we call.

God does not stop with mere relief, but brings good hope, by which we are saved, according to St. Paul. The sympathy of Jesus is of one who has passed that way before. His gift of the Spirit, another Comforter, is called to and stands beside. Them that mourn Jesus called blessed. For this to be true, future comfort must exceed the grief.

"Endure, and there shall dawn within thy breast Eternal rest."

problems of the present, they will be the ones that can give to the President the real insight into the communities in which they live.

So if we do write, let us write from real experience and not just from the theories which we have developed in our studies and which our very limited view of economics has not permitted us to prove.

It was flattering to be written to by the President. It is impolite to ignore his appeal. It is presumptuous to write anything outside of the realm of experience.

NEWS FROM THE FRONT

DOMESTIC MISSIONS IN NEED OF A HUNDRED MEN.

"They're Trained and Ready for Work But We Haven't the Money," Says Bishop Bartlett.

Fargo, N. D.—To fill all existing gaps in our domestic missionary staff, and to restore the work in our domestic fields to the point where the cuts began would require forty men, is the estimate of the Rt. Rev. Frederick B. Bartlett, D. D., Bishop of North Dakota and Executive Secretary of the Department of Domestic Missions.

"If we were to go further," to quote Bishop Bartlett, "and take up the opportunities now facing us, eighty or a hundred men would be needed. And the tragedy is the fact that we have the men already trained and anxious to undertake the task, but we haven't the money."

Reduced appropriations up to a certain point stimulated self-support, but continued cuts year after year have had a depressing effect upon all missionaries and congregations.

"In many cases when vacancies have occurred in the clergy staff new appointments have not been made," observes Bishop Bartlett, "with the result that the remaining clergy, already few and overworked, have attempted to cover the field, with an inevitable decrease of pastoral care and administrative efficiency. Also little provision has been made for the running and upkeep of automobiles."

PROGRESS IN SOUTHERN BRAZIL VERY DIFFICULT.

Porto Alegre, Brazil.—The Rt. Rev. William M. M. Thomas, D. D., Missionary Bishop of Southern Brazil, reminds the Church at home that it has always been the plan of Brazil not to attempt any work where it is unnecessary or unpromising, and when a station has once been opened not to retreat.

"But," continues the Bishop commenting on the situation in his District, "the reductions in appropriations for 1935 necessitated by the Emergency Schedule has made further progress all but impossible, and to maintain work already established very difficult.

Concerning salary reductions he says, "I began by taking a twenty-five per cent from my own, and a total of twenty per cent from all others. The reduction of $1,500 in the item of theological instruction has impelled the Rev. R. E. Fuessle and the Rev. M. S. Firth to offer their entire salaries to be added to the said appropriation. The reduction of fifty per cent in the item of traveling expenses makes it impossible to properly care for outlying stations."

"We want to see and feel missionary enthusiasm flowing out to us from the home Church," is the serious appeal of the Bishop.

Dr. Lewis B. Franklin says that three things are necessary if the Church fulfils the Master's command to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature: "Work, pray, and give for His Kingdom."

Today there are 4,000 Negro boys and girls enrolled in our nine Church schools.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

PRAYER FOR BRAZIL.

Almighty God, the Maker of all mankind, we humbly pray that Thou wilt be with Thy servant, the Bishop of Southern Brazil, that Thou wilt bless him and his staff of faithful workers. Let Thy love and patience be shown forth in their lives and conversation, Thy tenderness and compassion in their words and actions. May they win many souls for Thee; and kindle in us a hearty desire to join with them in our prayers and substance that we may have a part in the glorious task of extending Thy Kingdom; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

DISTRICT OF SHANGHAI MAKES RAPID PROGRESS.

Bishop Graves Reports Many Increases In Communicants and Baptisms During Past Two Years.

Shanghai, China.—The Church in this District moves steadily forward, as indicated by a report recently issued by the Rt. Rev. Frederick R. Graves, D. D., Bishop of Shanghai for forty-two years.

During the two years from 1932 to 1934, the baptisms increased from 584 to 787, confirmations from 275 to 342, baptized Christians from 8,779 to 10,063, communicants from 4,429 to 4,942, Sunday-school pupils from 2,418 to 4,159, day and boarding pupils in our Church schools from 2,594 to 3,624, number of patients in our hospitals from 156,613 to 194,648, pledges for the support of the Church from $35,486 to $54,284, fees received for hospital services from $180,293 to $236,278. The school fees have remained about the same, slightly above $334,000.

"The area of this Missionary District," says Bishop Graves, "is 44,500 square miles, about the size of Pennsylvania, but Shanghai has a population of 38,000,000 people, greater than all the twenty-two states west of the Mississippi.

"For every American missionary in Shanghai we have twenty native workers; in round numbers sixty parishes and missions, and fifteen hospitals and schools."

ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL RECEIVES FIRST PRIZE.

Silver Cup Awarded by Only One Vote Poor Road and Frame Buildings Noisy and Dangerous.

Manila, Philippine Islands.—In the entrance hallway of St. Luke's Hospital stands a big silver cup awarded as first prize on Hospital Day for general excellence.

The award was won by only one vote, and some of the things that counted against the hospital are things that come of its poverty. For example, the driveway in front of the hospital is made of loose macadam. It is not a very good road for either automobiles or ponies, and besides, it is a noisy road, for the stones roll under the wheels. In front of the hospital it was felt that there should be a better road.

Another thing was that our wooden buildings are already old, and if fire should break out results might be disastrous. Although it was agreed that they were immaculately clean, yet when there is a vote going on as between a wooden building and a modern concrete building, there can be no doubt as to which one gets the vote.

St. Luke's is not only a hospital, it is also a training school for Philippine nurses. Only girls who have graduated from government and other high schools of the highest standing are admitted to the training school, which is regarded as one of the best in the Islands.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN TOHOKU MOVES FORWARD.

Tohoku, Japan.—Successful evangelistic work in the villages and rural sections is one of the most encouraging features of the present work of the Missionary District of Tohoku.

It will be remembered that for a year past the District has not had the regular oversight of its Bishop, and therefore the splendid record that the Church has made in recent months is all the more notable.

The Rt. Rev. Norman S. Binsted, D. D., Bishop of Tohoku since 1928, acting upon the suggestion of Bishop John McKim, of North Tokyo, became the acting director of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, immediately after the death of Dr. Rudolph B. Teusler.

Bishop Binsted has continued in this post with great effectiveness, and has given such time as its exacting demands permitted to the work in his own Diocese. Perhaps no one is so well fitted as he for such a responsible post. He had served for some time in the hospital as foreign chaplain, was an intimate friend of Dr. Teusler, and is loved and trusted by all the members of the staff, both Japanese and foreign.

St. Luke's Hospital would suffer another great loss if it were to lose Bishop Binsted's connection.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

(To date this page has been filled with programs and a few comments. We are now able to present a few pictures of what is going on in the various dioceses of the Church in Young People's Work. This month we present a sketch of the new ideas in Southern Ohio. Next month we will give the plan of Georgia in the fourth week. And other diocesan plans will follow as they are received. We are trying to especially present the more novel types of work rather than the cut and dried.—The Editor.)

"GROWING PAINS." Or THE PLAN OF SOUTHERN OHIO.

"It is difficult to describe any developing thing. You may photograph it, analyze it, describe it as it is today; but tomorrow it will be different and will need another description."* The author was speaking of human individuals and more especially individuals in their adolescent years, but the statement applies equally to groups of people. The Young Churchman of the Diocese of Southern Ohio has been called by some a "baby," a child not sure of himself, needing much care and nurture; but it might be more accurately described as an adolescent, a young person finding himself. This is probably true of all changed organizations for young people that we are hearing about in various dioceses.

Beginnings. The baby days came way back in 1915, when Bishop Williams in the Diocese of Michigan sponsored the first organization of young people's societies of which there is a record. The Diocese of California was the next to organize and then parish societies in Kentucky banded together. Texas, Minnesota and Massachusetts soon followed. Young people were awaking to their place in the Church and the Church was meeting their desire for an organization where young men and women could meet together to share more closely in her spiritual powers and in her work.

In the Diocese of Southern Ohio the Young People's League was officially organized in June, 1922, although before that time vigorous societies had existed in many parishes. The organization grew and made itself felt in parish and diocesan life.

Changes. But several years ago groups of young people and advisors began to observe changes. Individual societies were still active and a few of them felt a strong diocesan loyalty which made them anticipate rallies and conventions and the feeling of unity they brought. But the few societies in good standing in the Diocesan Young People's Soceity could hardly be called the youth of the diocese.

Workers in the Diocesan Department of Religious Education wondered why they should be sponsoring in some special way the young people's work of only this narrow group. What about the Young People's Fellowships which could not find enough interested members or enough money to pay dues? They needed attention, but if they received the same help and material that was sent to affiliated members, the natural reaction of such societies was, "Why pay dues?" Then there were the parishes which had tried joint fellowships unsuccessfully and were finding much more effective their separate organizations for boys and girls. Unless they were members of the Girls' Friendly Society, or some similar organization they had no contact with other groups of young people. It seemed that the Young People's Society and that work with young people were two entirely different things.

Gambrier Summer Conference. A group of young people first became aware of this situation at the Gambrier Summer Conference in 1934. It was practically impossible to get the whole group from Southern Ohio together as individual young people did not seem to know whether or not they belonged to the Young People's Society. The small group which did care for the organization discussed the situation and recommended that a study be made in the fall.

Study Made. In September, 1934, the Executive Committee of the Diocesan Young People's Society took up the question raised by the group at Gambier and appointed a sub-committee, which went into the problem thoroughly.

The first step was to send a questionnaire to the clergy of the diocese.

Of 71 possible replies, the results were as follows:

Reported no organizations for young people	14
Young People's Societies	18
No Y. P. S., but other organizations	7
Total replies	32
No answer to questionnaire	32

Of these, by hearsay, visiting, etc., knew of several Y. P. F.'s, and several other groups.

Official members for year 10
(Paid dues to attend Convention)

The Committee decided that it is not the function of the diocesan organization to foster one aim or prescribe one form of organization, but to encourage anything that deepens the religious life of the young people of the diocese. It is the function of the diocese to gather together and integrate all such efforts and to tie them up with the Bishop and his work.

Rallies. The Committee next turned the question back to all of the young people at the fall rallies. A member of the Committee was chosen to speak at the rally in each convocation, presenting the idea of a more flexible form of organization. The young people seemed to be enthusiastic about the recommendations of the Committee.

Constitution. With definite data at hand, the Committee proceeded to draw up a tentative Constitution which would meet the difficulties in the old set-up. The Constitution passed the January, 1935, Young People's Convention with a few changes and The Young Churchmen of the Diocese of Southern Ohio came into being. The numbers of young people reached by this more broadly conceived organization gave the Convention an enthusiasm which spoke well for the future.

The purpose as stated in the Constitution remained the same as in the old Young People's Society, namely, "to provide the young people of the diocese with an association for the cultivation of loyalty to our Lord Jesus Christ and to His Church through a program of Fellowship, Study, Service and Worship." It is the aim of the organization to have a group in every parish and mission in the diocese carrying out its purposes.

According to the new plan any local organization which accepts the constitution and affiliates with the Young Churchmen may or may not have its own constitution and by-laws Therefore The Young Churchmen includes Girls' Friendly Society, Order of Sir Galahad, Acolytes Guild, even informal groups of young people who are active in parish life, but who have few formal meetings. Some of these groups allow members to be under 14 and over 25. As groups, they can affiliate with the diocesan organization, but individuals outside the age-limit, not being considered members of the diocesan organization, are not invited to Convention (unless older ones as advisors) and may hold no diocesan office.

Since dues under the old Society often prohibited membership, dues of the Young Churchmen were kept to $1 per year per group.

The affairs of the organization are carried on between annual Conventions by the diocesan officers, who with an advisory committee of the Department of Religious Education, constitute an Executive Board.

Successes. The interest shown in the new plan is encouraging. Groups have become active in many parishes which have never had successful societies. The 17 societies which have so far sent in affiliation cards represent a wide variety of local organizations: Young People's Societies, Clubs, Order of Sir Galahad, Girls' Friendly Society, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Youth Forums, dramatic groups, and so on, and a wide variety of communities. Parishes which have hitherto shown little diocesan interest are becoming enthusiastic.

A pamphlet about The Young Churchmen was sent to each parish in the spring, and now in the fall a drive will be made to get in the official affiliation of groups which are already actively supporting the work, and to meet the problems of parishes where so far no work is done. A week-end Leaders' Conference is held in September to which two or three representatives from each parish are invited. This conference prepares the program material for the year.

In the larger parishes the Young Churchmen can meet the problem of disintegrated parish work. A Young Churchmen's Council, composed of representatives of each of the five organizations for young people in one parish, now plans cooperative enterprises for the groups and occasional joint meetings, whereby the members become more familiar with the life of the parish as a whole.

Future. A great deal is left to be done. In spite of publicity, parishes and individuals remain who do not understand the purpose or work of the organization. A group at the 1935 Gambier Summer Conference, discussing next steps, proposed a big-brother plan whereby each group that affiliates will receive a parish to visit and help and bring into The Young Churchmen. That and other plans will be carried out. The success of the venture is by no means assured yet, but the leaders and members of The Young Churchmen of the Diocese of Southern Ohio are confident that a strong diocesan group can be formed and that thus joined together the young people can be more effective in meeting common problems.

BOOK REVIEWS

SPECIAL DAY SERMONS, by William H. Leach and J. W. G. Ward. 330 pages. Price $2.00. Published by the Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn.

This is a truly helpful volume. It contains a timely sermon for each of the most important days of the year. The sermons have been prepared by Dr. Ward, pastor of the Oak Park Presbyterian Church. There are nineteen in number, specially adapted for such days as New Year, Washington's Birthday, Loyalty Sunday, Palm Sunday, Good Friday, Easter, Ascension Day, Pentecost, Memorial Day, Mother's Day, ending with Christmas and Old Year. At the end of each sermon is a helpful outline of worship, written by Dr. Leach, Editor of the Church Management. It suggests hymns and anthems suitable for the occasion with proper Scripture selections.

The book will be of great help to ministers, group leaders and Sunday-school superintendents.

COSMOGONIES OF OUR FATHERS, by Katherine Brownell Collier, Ph. D. 1934. Columbia University Press, New York. 466 pages, with Bibliography and Index. Price $5.00.

This book is a part of the Columbia Series of Studies in History, Economics and Public Law, edited by the Faculty of Political Science. It is divided into two parts; one, a general historical survey, and, two, a topical review. It deals with the efforts of the seventeenth and eighteenth century writers to harmonize the new cosmological theories which arose out of the discoveries of Copernicus, Kepler and Newton with the traditional Bible account of the creation and of man. We are little able to realize now the upheaval which the new astronomy and physics caused, though we still suffer from similar difficulties with regard to evolution. In this book may be seen and felt the agony of mind through which the religious apologists passed. Many methods of reconciliation were used. Some discarded all the old, some all the new, some segregated knowledge in water-tight compartments and some attempted an harmonization. It is with the latter class that the author deals, and has compiled a monumenal work which, beside its intrinsic interest, provides a valuable book of reference and source book. She summarizes the writings of many authors, both Catholic and Protestant, and several district periods. In the second half she organizes the material under such topics as The Heaven, the Classification of Matter, Spontaneous Generation and The First Men, etc.

While the work necessarily suffers from a catalog effect, it provides amazing reading as the ingenius and sometimes ludicrous attempts pass in review. As a background for the understanding of the disputes of the last century over geology and biology it is indispensable.

SERMONS ON OLD TESTAMENT HEROES, by Dr. Clarence E. Macartney. 247 pages. Published by the Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn. Price $1.50.

A fine book of Old Testament biography. The reviewer finds in this volume an exposition of characters of the most illuminating method that could be used to do them justice and to bring out their heroic faith as well as their weakness, cowardice and sin. This is how the Bible portrays its heroes, as men fighting enemies inward and outward.

The author begins not with Adam, but with Noah, and ends with David, whom he calls "The Greatest Sinner and The Greatest Saints of The Old Testament". Jacob is "The Worst and Best Man in The Old Testament", Elijah was "The Loneliest and Grandest Man in The Old Testament". There are eighteen characters in the study which can be called an art gallery of Old Testament lives. A fine book for preachers and religious teachers.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CONVENTION OF 1785.

Plans have been completed for the commemoration in Philadelphia of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Convention of 1785 on Monday, October 7, to be preceded by commemoration in virtually all parishes and missions of the diocese on Sunday, October 6.

Invitations to participate in the commemoration have been extended to upwards of thirty Bishops, particularly those Bishops whose jurisdictions are included in the seven states represented in the 1785 assembly that met in Philadelphia on September 27 of that year and which remained in session until October 7. Each of the Bishops to whom invitations were sent was asked to bring with him a representative presbyter and layman.

The Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware, and President of the National Council, will speak for the National Council, as well as the Church in Delaware, which sent representatives to the 1785 Convention.

Other Bishops who have accepted to date include the following:

The Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, Bishop of Bethlehem; the Rt. Rev. Wyatt Brown, Bishop of Harrisburg; the Rt. Rev. John C. Ward, Bishop of Erie; the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, Bishop of Easton; Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, Bishop of New Jersey; the Rt. Rev. Albion W. Knight, Bishop Coadjutor of New Jersey; the Rt. Rev. Benjamin M. Washburn, Bishop Coadjutor of Newark; the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, Suffragan Bishop of Long Island; the Rt. Rev. William H. Moreland, retired Bishop of Sacramento; the Rt. Rev. Robert E. L. Strider, Bishop Coadjutor of West Virginia.

The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, has written he will make every effort to come and that he will be accompanied by the Rev. Dr. Z. B. T. Phillips who, as President of the House of Deputies of the General Convention, will represent that body.

The commemoration of the meeting of the 1785 Convention in Philadelphia as arranged by the committee is in sequence to the Diocesan Commemoration Year, which marked the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the series of memorable meetings held in Philadelphia in the year 1784, under the inspiration and leadership of Bishop White, then in priest's orders and rector of Old Christ Church, and which meetings led to the later meetings in New Brunswick, N. J., and in New York City, from which issued the call for the 1785 Convention in Philadelphia to bring the scattered remnants of the Colonial Churches into national unity. The Fundamental Principles upon which it was proposed to erect the Church in America adopted by the New York meeting embodied the principles that were born of the vision and judgment of William White and his associates in the 1784 meetings in Philadelphia.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese, through its Prssident, Mrs. John E. Hill, and the Church Club, through its President, Mr. E. Osborne Coates, and its Board of Managers, are cooperating with the Commemoration Committee.

The Program for Monday, October 7, includes a Commemoration in Old Christ Church, the meeting place of the 1785 Convention, opening with a Celebration of the Holy Communion at 10 A. M. and an address by the Rev. E. Clowes Chorley, D. D., Historigrapher of the General Convention. Dr. Chorley's subject will be "The Convention of 1785. At 11:30 A. M., there will be a meeting of the Clerical Brotherhood in the commodious Neighborhood House of Old Christ Church, at which there will be an address by the Rev. Howard W. Stuckert, Ph. D., rector of the House of Prayer. Dr. Stuckert's subject will be "An Apostle of the Northwest." There will be also an exhibit by the Church Historical Society.

The visiting bishops, presbyters and laymen will be the guests of the Church Club at a luncheon in the Penn Athletic Club at which the clergy and laity, both men and women, of the diocese will be given the opportunity to be present. Mr. E. Osborne Coates, President of the Church Club, will act as Toastmaster. The Rt. Rev. Philip Cook and others will make addresses at the luncheon.

Following the luncheon the visiting bishops, presbyterys and layman will visit one or more of the Colonial Churches in various parts of the diocese, which have been in existence since their foundation in the years between 1695 and the outbreak of the War of Independence, and whose ministry has been continuous to the present day.

As Dr. Chorley and Dr. Stuckert will tell the story of the 1785 Convention and of Jackson Kemper in their respective addresses, it may help to focus the attention and the interest in the Commemoration by noting in relation to the 1785 Convention, that it was at this Convention the first American Prayer Book, historically known as the "Proposed Prayer Book" and the Constitution of the Church were adopted. It was at this Convention also that the petition was addressed to the Archbishop of the Church of England requesting the Consecration of Bishops in the English Succession for the infant Church in America. Another action of this Convention, revolutionary in its conception as related to more than 1,500 years of history, was the admission of laymen to the Councils of the Church and the administration of the Church's business affairs.

Interest in the missionary accomplishments of the great Bishop Kemper to communicants of the Church in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, rests in the fact that for more than twenty years he was an assistant to Bishop White in the United Churches of Christ Church, St. Peter's and St. James; that he was ordained to the Priesthood by Bishop White, and that his Consecration as the First Missionary Bishop to the Northwest was in our own St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, and that Bishop White was the Consecrator.

Old Christ Church, Philadelphia, founded in 1695, in which the Convention of 1785 was held, and where the Commemoration on October 7 will be centered.

The program for the commemorations on Sunday, October 6, for the most part will be, it is understood, of a varied character, as the judgment of the individual rector and his vestry may decide. Bishop Taitt will be the preacher at the morning service in Old Christ Church, when the congregation will hold its parish commemoration.

S. H. Warnock.

MISSIONARIES RECEIVE APPOINTMENTS.

Three missionaries were appointed by the National Council at its September meeting to fill vacancies: the Rev. Arnold B. Craven for the Dominican Republic; Miss Lucy A. Test, a nurse for the Hudson Stuck Hospital, Fort Yukon, Alaska; and Mr. Wilfred C. Files, also for Alaska.

Mr. Craven has been vicar of St. Luke's Chapel, Stamford, Conn. He graduated from the General Theological Seminary in 1934. The staff in the Dominican Republic is always extremely small. Mr. Craven will have charge of that famous Church of the Epiphany, Santo Domingo City, which wore out and was built new and immediately destroyed by a hurricane and built up new once again, supposed to be hurricane proof now.

Miss Test comes from the Church of the Ascension, Atlantic City, N. J. Her appointment was approved early in the summer by the interim committee empowered to meet emergencies, and Miss Test hurried to Fort Yukon, Alaska, in July, while the hospital was dealing with an epidemic.

Mr. Files will continue at Tanana, Alaska, the lay reader's work which he has done as a volunteer for the past three years. He came from Solomons, Maryland.

United Thank Offering missionaries are recommended by the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary and appointed by the National Council. Four, for domestic fields, received appointment for limited terms at the September meetings of the Council and the Board. These are all to fill existing vacancies:

For South Dakota, a religious education secretary, Miss Ann B. Mundelein. She is a member of the Church of the Holy Trinity, New York City. Also for South Dakota, a housemother, Miss Marjorie B. Munich, for the Indian boys' and girls' dormitory at Fort Thompson. Miss Munich comes from St. John's Church, Bridgeport, Conn.

For Western North Carolina, a teacher, Miss Frances B. McNulty, at the Patterson School for Boys, Legerwood. Her parish is now the Chapel of Rest, Legerwood.

For Wyoming, a religious education secretary, student worker at the university, and director of work among the isolated, all in the person of Miss Ann Elizabeth Lucas. She comes from Trinity Church, Columbus, Ohio.

After thirty-three years of evangelistic work in China, Miss Alice M. Clark of the District of Hankow, has been retired, at the age of seventy-seven. She was retired by the former Board of Missions in 1916, but Bishop Roots has employed her from year to year ever since then. The National Council at its September meeting expressed its grateful appreciation of her long years of service to Chinese girls and women.

THE OXFORD GROUP IN GENEVA.

By Margaret Hicks Williams,
A Special Correspondent in Geneva.

The eyes of the world are on Geneva this autumn. The League of Nations is dealing with a problem which may mean life and death to hundreds of thousands, or which may perhaps be the genesis of a new world war.

Into this fear-ridden city have poured between six and seven hundred members of the Oxford Group to hold a city, and eventually, nation-wide campaign. The London Morning Post in an interview with Dr. Frank N. D. Buchman, the head of the movement, quotes him as saying that there are no political motives in the visit of the Oxford Group Team to the League Capital during these important days. It was planned during the campaign in April and since that time requests for Oxford Group teams have been coming from all over Switzerland. From Switzerland itself —from Berne, Lausanne, Basal, Zurich —have come Swiss members of the Oxford Group to join the Genevese and the International Team which is drawn from twenty-eight nations, here in Geneva.

The President of Switzerland on the Team's arrival sent this message of welcome:

"Is there a way out of the present world crisis? The answer is a courageous 'Yes.' What is needed is the changing of lives through new spiritual power so strong that it reconciles dangerous conflicting forces and produces brotherly love and solidarity. It is in attaining this goal that the Oxford Group sees its task. Their next advance will take place on Swiss soil and will make a real contribution in reconciling the nations. We rejoice in the progress of the Oxford Group and extend to their Congress our heartiest greeting. The initial work of the movement has been great with promise and we wish it every success and triumph."

After the Oxford Group team had been in Geneva ten days, the President of Switzerland requested Dr. Buchman and members of the team to come to Berne where he and his cabinet could officially receive them. At this time, he said: "You are showing the way out of the materialism and self-seeking which has brought the world to its present state of chaos. It is your conviction that is your strength. I have followed the opening of your work at Geneva and I feel more than ever convinced that it will make a real contribution towards reconciling the nations."

In replying, Dr. J. E. W. Duys, Socialist Leader of the Dutch Parliament and a member of the Oxford Group team, said: "History is being written today. I never dreamed that I should hear the leader of a cabinet, with his council standing around him, make a statement so profoundly important for the history of the world. Today the issues of life and death are being decided in Geneva. If we had five men at Geneva willing to live up to such principles as you have set forth, we would feel that the future of the world was in safe hands."

The work of the Oxford Group in Geneva opened with a series of five meetings in La Salle de la Reformation, for ten years the meeting place of the League. This Hall was so crowded that an additional hall had to be engaged. More than 15,000 people heard the message of the Group during these days.

All areas of the city's life have been touched. Youth, the unemployed, business, medicine, the Church, social service, International Christian organizations with headquarters in Geneva, and education have had special meetings with members of the Oxford Group team. The President and five of the governing board of the University of Geneva invited their colleagues to meet with a team. The University of Geneva's two medical societies were joint hosts at a dinner. Since the close of the large open meetings, there has been a series of smaller meetings in the parish houses of the various churches.

Besides this, there has been tremendous interest on the part of the foreign press correspondents. More than a dozen nations have special press correspondents here in Geneva for the express purpose of covering the work of the Oxford Group. Old Geneva was particularly impressed when the Socialist Government of the city and canton of Geneva received a Christian delegation and that its joint President should have said that he was glad that the Oxford Group had come, because he felt they had a contribution to offer to the solutions of the problems, national and personal, of the city and canton.

When the speaker of the Swiss Parliament in Berne invited an Oxford Group team to come to the Swiss capital in order that both Houses of Parliament might hear what the Oxford Group had to say, all of Switzerland took note. The President and Vice-President of the Senate and the head of every political party in Parliament came to the meeting held in the Parliament building. La Suisse, reporting on the meeting, said: "Harmony between the confederate states . . . is precarious today. Four times in less than ten months, the Swiss have been divided into two irreconciliable camps by struggles of unparalleled virulence and as violence invites violence, they are engaged in sharpening their swords for a fresh conflict. . . . Yesterday morning about midday the Chamber of the Conseil National mysteriously emptied, leaving at grips a few die-hards who persisted in abusing each other on the subject of country legislation. . . . People ran for the news, very curious to know what was drawing off from the palace the cream of the elders of the people. It was discovered that they were rushing into a chamber on the ground floor where representatives of the Oxford Group movement invited them to hear some speakers. There was a complete League of Nations there, and yet one in which the American element predominated."

Because of the intense interest beginning to spring up, both in Geneva and throughout Switzerland, in what the Oxford Group is doing, and even further because of the way it has already brought new hope and confidence into the life of the city of Geneva, Dr. Eduard Benes, the President of the League Assembly, gave a luncheon for all members of the League, Assembly and Council, on September 23 to meet and to hear the Oxford Group.

There they had an opportunity to hear from men such as Dr. Carl Hambro, President of the Norwegian Parliament, and a former President of the League of Nations, who invited the Oxford Group to come to his own country last November, how, because they came, the whole mental outlook of his country changed. They will hear how God became real again in countless lives, affecting not only the Church, but business and politics as well. They will hear how vital Christianity, as brought by the Oxford Group, can change public opinion in a nation and supplant good-will for fear. They will learn the practical way to bring into a country's life the kind of spirit which will dispel those elements which at present breed avarice and distrust on an international scale.

CHURCH ARMY NEWS.

Church Army worker, Captain A. Charnock, stationed on the Island of Marco, South Florida, reports that many of the people of the Island lost homes and property during the recent disastrous hurricane.

The Community House, which serves as Chapel was untouched. Captain Charnock was "washed out, saving only medical supplies and a few clothes."

Church Army desires to help their missionary in the work of recovery and reconstruction going on at Marco, and suggests that money gifts be sent to Captain Mountford at 414 East Fourteenth Street, New York City.

Six Weeks in New Hampshire.

During six weeks of Beach Services at Hampton, New Hampshire, Captain and Mrs. L. Hall conducted forty-seven services for adults, with an attendance of more than 14,000 present; and nine children's mission services with nearly 500 youngsters attending; 2,200 Gospels were given to people making definite application for them.

PROVINCIAL SYNOD, AUXILIARY, MEETING IN LEXINGTON.

The Province of Sewanee is sending delegates to the fourteenth Synod and Provincial Woman's Auxiliary meeting in Lexington, Ky., October 15, 16 and 17. The opening service, Tuesday, October 15, will be held in Christ Church. Bishop Henry W. Hobson of Southern Ohio will make the chief address. Other speakers will be Bishop H. P. Almon Abbott of Lexington, and the president of the province, Bishop Henry J. Mikell of Atlanta.

A Quiet Hour for all delegates and deputies will be conducted by Bishop John W. Wing of South Florida at the Church of the Good Shepherd, the afternoon of the fifteenth. A large attendance at the Synod is expected.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Woman's Auxiliary.

Some 200 women attended the monthly meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese at St. Thomas' Church, Detroit, September 30, the Rev. Gilbert Appelhof, Jr., was the celebrant. Dr. John W. Wood, Executive Secretary of the Department of Missions, addressed the group at the morning session, while Mrs. Wm. Alvord, of the International Institute, spoke in the afternoon on the subject of "International Relations at Home."

Annual Conference of Women Field Workers.

Under the direction of the Ven. Leonard P. Hagger, Archdeacon of the diocese, the Annual Conference for Diocesan Women Field Workers was held at the Girls' Friendly Society Holiday House, Pine Lake, from September 24-26. In these Conferences Archdeacon Hagger strives to present material which may be assimilated by the Workers and relayed by them in turn to the Church School teachers in the 22 Mission Churches which they serve. The course this year was entitled "Facts and Features of the Church School Curriculum," individual lectures touching upon such subjects as the Bible, the Book of Common Prayer, the Hymnal, Christian Art, etc.

DR. BURKE COLLAPSES UNDER STRAIN.

The following telegram from Bishop Rowe reaches me this Saturday afternoon:

"Just received word that Dr. Grafton Burke of the Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital at Fort Yukon, Alaska, has collapsed due to excessive strain of work at Fort Yukon this year. Accompanied by nurse has been taken to Fairbanks for treatment. This looks serious. Immediate steps must be taken to find doctor to relieve Burke and that immediately."

This telegram reports what some of us have been fearing. Dr. Burke has been carrying a heavy load of responisbility. Reduced appropriations have meant anxiety and redoubled efforts on his part to care for the needs of the Indian people dependent upon the hospital.

A substitute for Dr. Burke must have a background of a thorough medical education, hospital experience, resourcefulness, sympathy with the Indian people, strong physique, ability to adapt himself to outdoor life in an Arctic climate and Christian character and devotion.

Is any reader of this letter willing to volunteer? Can non-medical readers send me the names of physicians before whom this urgent need might be placed?

Yours truly,
John W. Wood.

New York City.

Bishop Schmuck Will Be Guest of Diocese.

The Rt. Rev. Elmer N. Schmuck, D. D., Bishop of the Missionary District of Wyoming, will be the guest of the diocese for the month of October. Bishop Schmuck is being brought to Michigan by the Diocesan Field Department, of which Mr. Fred H. Blackwood, of St. Matthias' Church, Detroit, is chairman.

The diocese has been divided into nine regions, eight outside of the city of Detroit, with a clergyman acting as the Field Department's Representative in each region. Bishop Schmuck's schedule is as follows: October 1-2, Alpena Region; 3-6, Bay City-Saginaw Region; 7-9, Flint Region; 10-13, Jackson Region; 14-16, Lansing Region; 17-20, Oakland-Macomb County Region; 21-22, Port Huron Region; 23-25, Wyandotte Region; 27-30, Detroit Region. His program in each region has been arranged by the department's representative, and has been planned by means of grouping the parishes together, to permit each Churchman and woman in the diocese to hear Bishop Schmuck either at a dinner meeting, a service or a conference.

Bishop Schmuck will tell to the people of Michgan the story of the program and needs of the Church throughout the world.

Dr. John W. Wood, Executive Secretary of the National Council, was a visitor to Detroit on September 29 and 30. on Sunday, the twenty-ninth, he preached at the morning service in St. Joseph's, and at the evening service On Sunday, the twenty-ninth, he addressed the regular meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary at St. Thomas' Church, Detroit.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D Bishop

Fall Conference of Washington Clergy.

"The spirit of secularism is fighting for the soul of America," declared Dr. A. W. Sherman of the National Council in a Forward Movement Conference held for three days last week at Camp Overall, Va. This was the fall conference of the Washington clergy, held under the direction of the diocesan Forward Movement commission, the Rev. F. Bland Tucker chairman. The local arrangements were in the hands of the Rev. Wm. R. Moody, chairman of the diocesan Department of Religious Education. The Bishop of Washington conducted a series of intimate talks to the clergy each evening at twilight. These discourses, out of the rich experience of Bishop Freeman, in these large parishes and the Episcopate, thrilled and inspired the whole group.

Dr. Sherman led conferences on the Forward Movement in all the fields of Church life and set forth numerous practical methods by which the movement may develop parish and diocesan activities. He plead for the Christianization of what he called "Pagan Areas" in industrial, secular, national, social, amusement, racial and international spheres.

Definite questions were set down for detailed discussion in sub-committee, such as, "Should the Forward Movement Literature be Continued?" "How May This Literature be Distributed to the Best Advantage?" "How May the Spirit of the Forward Movement be Injected Into Parish Organizations?" "How May This Movement be Used to Arouse Inactive Members, the Parish Life and the Life of the Diocese, in its Relation to Religious Education, Missions," etc.?

Out of the "findings" of these groups there emerged an extended category of progressive suggestions, and the Bishop suggested the setting up of a "Diocesan Board of Strategy," which will take over the suggestions and work them out later in the whole purpose and life of the diocese.

It was the sense of the forty or more ministers in attendance that such a conference as this be held regularly in September, preferably at this place, an ideal, isolated spot a hundred miles south of Washington, near Luray, Va., on the Shenandoah river. The camp is perfectly adapted for the purpose, complete in all its appointments, with swimming, canoeing, tennis, riding, hiking, etc., by way of exercise and diversion. It has been in use as a private camp for boys for ten years or more and was procured for this meeting through personal contact of Mr. Moody with the owner of the property. Possibly not in the history of the diocese has there been a more generally satisfactory assembly of this kind for the Washington clergy.

The Bishop's Schedule.

Bishop Freeman and Diocesan Missioner, the Rev. Clyde Brown, have arranged an extended schedule of appointments in Southern Maryland for next month. They will spend an entire week visiting the old parishes of the diocese, from October 22 to 29. They will be accompanied by other clergymen and the Bishop will administer confirmation at Croome, Accokeek, Pomonkey, Indian Head, Old Durham, Chaptico, Wayside, Newport, Leonardtown, Valley Lee, Charlotte Hall, Mechanicsville, Old Fields, Aquasco, Baden, and The Ridge.

Loyalty Sunday.

Loyalty Sunday and Bible Sunday, the 400th anniversary of the printing of the Holy Bible in English, will be observed throughout the diocese on October 6, with special ceremonies at the Cathedral.

Meeting of Northern Convocation.

Interest centers in the fall meeting of Southern Convocation of the diocese, the Rev. Walter Plumley deacon, which will be held October 23, at 4 P. M., at Ascension Chapel, Silver Spring, Md., the Rev. J. P. Cox, vicar.

T. F. O.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

First Mass Meeting in Interest of Retreat Movement.

Philadelphia has been chosen for the first of a series of mass meetings to be held in a number of centers throughout the country in the interest of the Retreat Movement, which is being furthered as a complement to the nation-wide Forward Movement, inaugurated at the 1934 General Convention.

Sponsored by the National Retreat Association, which has its headquarters at the College of Preachers in the national capital, the Philadelphia Mass Meeting has received the approval of Bishop Taitt and will be held in the Church of the Holy Trinity, on October 9. It will be conducted under the auspices of the Commission on Evangelism of the diocese. The Hon. Benjamin H. Ludlow, a member of the Philadelphia bar and one of the active laymen in this diocese and a vestryman of St. Mary's Church, Ardmore, will be Chairman of the Mass Meeting.

The Very Rev. Edward Lowry Henderson, a leader in the Retreat Movement, which is now reported to be making great headway in England, and William C. Sturgis, Ph. D., one of the foremost laymen of the Church in the United States, have accepted invitations to address the meeting.

The Church of England leader is Dean of the famous St. Alban Abbey, the Cathedral of the Diocese of St. Alban, who recently came to America at the request of the National Retreat Association to assist in the advancement of the Retreat Movement. Dean Henderson is now holding conferences in the training of Retreat Conductors at the College of Preachers in Washington.

Dr. Sturgis was formerly a member of the faculty of Yale University. He is a member of a number of English and American scientific societies, and has been the leader of many conferences on the devotional life throughout the United States. Dr. Sturgis is now Warden of the new Retreat House of the Diocese of New Jersey at Bernardsville.

The National Retreat Association has for its objective the promotion of Retreats, Schools of Prayer, Conferences on Christian Living and Days of Devotion. It is headed by men known for their devotion and representing various types of Churchmanship.

Sixty-fifth Session of Church School Institute.

The Church School Institute of the diocese, comprising the clergy, superintendents and lay teaching staffs of the Sunday Schools, held its sixty-fifth annual sessions October 3, in the Christian Association building of the University of Pennsylvania.

"Church School Objectives" was the general theme of the Institute sessions, with an address by the Rev. Dr. D. A. McGregor, Executive Secretary of the National Department of Religious Education. At the opening session in the afternoon the Rev. Vernon C. McMasters, Secretary for Church Schools of the National Department of Religious Education discussed "A Program of Religious Education," illustrated by lantern slides.

Bishop Taitt was the speaker at a supper between the afternoon and evening conferences.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Chaplain of University of Florida Leaving State.

The Rev. Merritt F. Williams, Chaplain of the University, was called to St. Philip's Parish, Charleston, S. C., in the spring of the year, but declined the call, largely because of the building program in which he was at that time engaged. Recently the vestry of St. Philip's extended a second call, stating that they would be willing to wait till January 1, for Mr. Williams to come to Charleston. On consultation with Bishop Juhan, however, it was thought best for the field to be left open for the new incumbent at the beginning of the college year, rather than in the middle of it. Accordingly, Mr. Williams notified the vestry of St. Philip's that he would be free to leave for Charleston by October 1, at which time he will assume charge of his new duties.

Mr. Williams has made a notable contribution to the student work while in Gainesville. At the close of the first year of his ministry it became apparent that larger and more adequate quarters were needed to take care of the growing interest and response of the students in connection with the Church's services and other activities in Weed Hall, the Episcopal Student Center.

Through Mr. Williams' leadership and untiring efforts, a movement was inaugurated among the congregations of the two dioceses in the state which resulted in many improvements, which were completed during the past spring and summer and a really useful and attractive Center now awaits the appointment of Mr. Williams' successor in the immediate future.

Practical Living Study Classes.

A Young Leaders' Class for young people from fifteen through eighteen, has been organized at St. Luke's Church School, under the direction of Mr. T. V. Morison. This class will study the Bible in reference to practical living. Following each lesson, assignments are made for investigation of city government, and the responsibility of good citizenship, social conditions under which people live in Atlanta, labor conditions and then discussions in the class follow these investigations and plans are made according to the lessons of Christ for their betterment. About fifty young people enrolled the first Sunday this class was organized.

A Letter Commending the Rev. C. H. Gootee's Prison Work.

The Rev. Charles H. Gootee—"Prison Evangelist" of Richmond, Va.—was with me again today, and conducted two services at the Georgia State Prison Farm, at Milledgeville, preaching at 10:30 A. M. at the Male Camp, where every seat was filled, and a gracious service was had. The text was (Matt. 22:11), "And when the King came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment."

The appeal was a sincere and dispassionate presentation of Gospel truths. No effort was made to stir the emotions of his hearers, but an earnest effort on the part of the preacher to help men to see that Christ and His Righteousness is the world's greatest need, and man's only hope of Heaven.

At the close of the service he gave an invitation, and—notwithstanding the fact that the service was being held in the rotunda of the prison, where there was no altar rail—the men came forward and knelt on the bare floor, four and five deep, and remained there through two prayers, and several songs. Many pledged themselves to lead Christian lives.

In the afternoon he preached again to the men at the Tuberculosis Camp. The text was 2 Cor. 5:17, "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature." He was listened to with profound interest as he talked of the transforming power of Christ in human hearts and lives. Again he gave an invitation to men to give themselves wholly to God, and to surrender heart and life to Christ, that He might come in, set up His throne, and rule and reign in their lives.

He distributed tracts and leaflets to all with whom he came in contact, and promised to send the chaplain three hundred copies of Bishop Joseph F. Berry's tract, "Got Hold of the Cross," for further use in the work here. He also left a number of copies of the Gospels.

Doctor Sherman Addresses Clergy Conference.

On September 23, 24 and 25, in the Parish House of Trinity Church, Staunton, Bishop Jett had his annual conference with the clergy of the diocese. The outstanding feature of the conference was an address by the Rev. Dr. Arthur M. Sherman, in which he gave an able exposition of the aims of the Forward Movement and discussed in a most impressive way, with statistics of various kinds, the great need of intensive devotional work in the Church to combat what seems to be a growing indifference to religion of every kind throughout the world. A former missionary for many years in China, and a careful student of world affairs, Doctor Sherman was able to bring to his audience a deep conviction of the seriousness of world-wide conditions as they relate to religious matters.

Lieut. Col. E. Walton Opie, President of the Laymen's League of the diocese, discussed with the clergy his plans for the proper functioning of the League as a factor in the Church life of the diocese. Mr. John McCleary, Jr., Chairman of the Field Department, presented the Church's Program for 1936 as adopted by the Executive Board of the diocese at its recent meeting, and called attention to the total of the items in the Program, $34,625, which will be the goal in the coming Every Member Canvass. Mr. McCleary also took up the plans of his department for the preparation and prosecution of the canvass.

At various times during the conference Bishop Jett brought to the attention of his clergy various matters which he felt to be of exceptional importance in parochial and diocesan work. The Rev. Dr. John J. Gravatt, rector of Trinity Church, and the ladies in his congregation entertained the visitors delightfully, and did everything possible for their pleasure.

An unusual and amusing incident related to the journey of some of the parsons to Staunton. Shortly before there had been an attempted bank robbery in central Virginia, and police all over the state were on the lookout for the bandits. All the clergymen went to Staunton by automobile and at one point on the road a policeman was stopping any cars that looked at all suspicious. Some of the reverend clergy were allowed to pass without being halted—perhaps those wearing clericals. Several were stopped and given "the once over." Fortunately these clergymen are a decent looking lot—a few really handsome—so after a quick glance at the occupants of the cars and once the inquiry, "Where are all you preachers going, anyway?" they were permitted to go on .

Memorials at Radford.

At the evening service on Sunday, September 22, Bishop Jett set apart four stained glass windows in Grace Church at Radford. These had been given as memorials to Deaconess Blanche Adams, Miss Minnie Howe, Mrs. Mary Catherine Wilson and Mr. John A. Wilson. For a while, just after she came to this country from her home in England, Deaconess Adams lived in Radford, and during the rest of her life, most of which was spent as a missionary in the mountains, she retained deep love for Radford and its people. The Bishop preached on "Christian Citizenship." Also participating in the service was the Rev. Charles W. Sydnor, who lives in Pulaski, and is rector of Christ Church, Pulaski, and Grace Church, Radford.

Convocation Meets.

The Convocation of Asheville met at St. James' Church, Hendersonville, on Tuesday, September 17. The general subject of the meeting was the Church's attitude to the English Bible, with particular reference to the approaching Coverdale celebration. Papers were read on "How We Got the Bible," by the Rev. Albert New of Waynesville; "The Bible in the Middle Ages," by the Rev. H. P. Scratchley of Asheville; "The Translations of the Bible," by the Rev. Frank Blackwelder of Canton; and "How to Read and Understand the Bible," by the Rev. James P. Burke of Hendersonville. Unusual interest was displayed by the entertaining parish, a large number of people attending at the various sessions.

Upon the adjournment of Convocation, the Dean, the Rev. A. W. Farnum, turned the meeting over to the Rev. Edgar R. Neff, chairman of the Field Department of the Diocese. On the night of September 17, addresses on "Looking Forward" were made by Bishop Gribbin and the Rev. Edgar R. Neff. On the following morning, the clergy assembled at a round table discussion, led by the Rev. G. L. Granger of Sylva, on "Rural Work," the Rev. J. P. Burke, on "The Partnership Plan," and "The Forward Movement," the Rev. George F. Rogers, rector, Trinity Church, Asheville.

"EVEN THERE . . . THY RIGHT HAND SHALL HOLD ME."

Psalm 139:10.

William Olney.

So after all, amid the din and tumult,
Depression, loss, perplexity and fear,
There is the grasp of His Right Hand upon me;
I do not walk alone, my God is near.

Because His Fingers tighten fast upon me,
Holding me close so that I cannot sink:
The roaring of the blast will raise no tremor,
Safe, though I stand upon destruction's brink.

That Right Hand crowns an Arm that is Almighty:
It is possessed by One Who is All-Wise:
That Hand obeys a Heart that is most loving;
It serves a Mind no chance-ill can surprise.

Therefore, though night enshroud me; though the pathway
To better days be hidden from my sight;
Held in that Right Hand I shall walk securely
Into a pleasant Future Heav'nly-bright.

A Remarkable Child of Africa.

By H. H. Smith.

The slave trade was such a lucrative business in the seventeenth century that Rhode Island, "the greatest slave-trading state in America, built 103 slave ships in the decade from 1698 to 1708, and in 1770 this state alone had 150 ships engaged in the slave trade." Weatherford, who states these facts in his interesting book, "The Negro from Africa to America," also tells us that many of the slave ships carried rum to Africa which was exchanged for a cargo of slaves. One of the shrewd slave traders of Rhode Island gave these instructions to his captain: "Warter yr rum as much as possible and sell as much by short measuer as you can."

In 1761 a slave ship from Senegall, West Africa, entered the harbor of Boston. We do not know whether that particular cargo of slaves had been procured by the barter of "short-measure, watered rum"; but we do know that among those children of the Dark Continent there was a little girl about eight years old. She was not an attractive object—with her dirty face and unkempt hair; but there was something about the brightness of the eye that caused a good woman who desired to secure a servant to purchase her.

It was not with the covetous spirit of an unfeeling slave trader that Mrs. John Wheatley bought this child. Mrs. Wheatley was a woman of refinement and of a religious turn of mind. While the child was to be trained as a useful servant of the household, her mistress felt a responsibility for her education and religious training. The child proved to be unusually bright and quick to learn. In a little more than a year she was able to read the most difficult parts of the Scriptures fluently. She was encouraged in her love of books and given opportunity to continue her studies until she could read some of the Latin classics—especially Virgil and Ovid, Pope's translation of Homer was her favorite English classic. She showed some gifts for verse making and when only fourteen years old wrote these lines:

On Being Brought From Africa to America.

"'Twas mercy brought me from my pagan land,
Taught my benighted soul to understand
That there's a God—that there's a Saviour, too:
Once I redemption neither sought nor knew.
Some view our sable race with scornful eye—
'Their color is a diabolic dye'.
Remember, Christians, Negroes black as Cain
May be refined and join the angelic strain."

That is not great poetry, of course; but just think of it from a child only six years out of the African jungles! Phillis Wheatley was highly esteemed by many of the prominent families of Boston for her lovable disposition and her unusual talents. She wrote a poem complimentary to George Washington in 1775, during the siege of Boston. On receipt of the poem, Washington wrote her: "I thank you most sincerely for your polite notice of me, in the elegant lines you enclosed, and however undeserving I may be of such encomium and panegyric, the style and manner exhibit a striking proof of your poetical talents, in honor of which and as a tribute justly due to you, I would have published the poem, had I not been apprehensive that while I only mean to give the world this new instance of your genius, I might have incurred the imputation of vanity." Washington invited her to visit him at his headquarters at Cambridge, and she was received with marked courtesy by the General and his officers.

Phillis Wheatley is not included among our great poets, but when Edmund Clarence Stedman published his "Library of American Literature," he included her poem on Imagination:

"Imagination! Who can sing thy force?
Or who describe the swiftness of thy course?
Soaring through air to find the bright abode,
Th' empyreal palace of the thundering God,
We on Thy pinions can surpass the wind,
And leave the rolling universe behind:
From star to star the mental optics rove,
Measure the skies, and range the realms above;
There in one view we grasp the mighty whole,
Or with new worlds amaze th' unbounded soul."

Phillis Wheatley was most fortunate in finding her home in the Wheatley family. Like many other Negroes brought up as slaves, she responded to the high ideals set before her. Writing of the death of her mistress, she said:

"I have lately met with a great trial in the death of my mistress; let us imagine the loss of a parent, a sister or brother, the tenderness of all were united in her. I was a poor little outcast and a stranger when she took me in; not only into her house, but I presently became a sharer in her most tender affections. I was treated by her more like a child than her servant; no opportunity was left unimproved of giving me the best of advice; but in terms how tender! how engaging. This I hope ever to keep in remembrance. Her exemplary life was a greater monitor than all her precepts and instructions. To alleviate our sorrow we had the satisfaction to see her depart in inexpressible raptures, earnest longings, and impatient thirstings for the upper courts of the Lord."

Speaking of Phillis Wheatley, in his book, "The Negro in Literature and Art," Brawley said:

"Hers was a great soul. Her ambition knew no bounds, her thirst for knowledge was insatiable, and she triumphed over the most adverse circumstances. A child of the wilderness and a slave, by her grace and culture she satisfied the conventionalities of Boston and of England. Her brilliant conversation was equaled only by her modest demeanor. Everything about her was refined. More and more as one studies her life he becomes aware of her sterling Christian character. In a dark day she caught a glimpse of the eternal light, and it was meet that the first Negro woman in American literature should be one of unerring piety and the highest of literary ideals."—The Presbyterian of the South.

Work.

For the seed in the soil, the grass on the stalk, and the twig on the tree the sun, rain and air are agencies of life, growth, and splendor; but for the grass which is mown, or the twig which is broken, they are factors which wither, mold, and decay. The great dynamos of God are working. Through activities and functioning the universe, all things, and beings came. That is essential to develop the feet, hands, eye, mind, and soul. Work is the elixir of life; it furnishes zest, strength, interest, joy, power, and keeps us from evil. Drones are nowhere admired; the world's great men are men of achievement and the happiest moments are moments when our persistent and most strenuous directed efforts bring about anticipated results. God is the Master of work; and Christ said, "I came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." His greatest reward is for the worker: "Well done, good and faithful servant." How can anyone expect glory here, or hereafter, who is not doing anything?

Blessed is the man who has found a task which he enjoys; and mercy on the man who is obliged to do what he does not like; for he is certainly in misery. Pity the man who has nothing to do for he has not fruits to enjoy; and he has reached the destination before his day. Even God does not try to make anything out of a sea which has no outlet except a Dead Sea; so a man who does not serve and grow dies. Give information and your knowledge increases; offer a helping hand and you acquire skill; be courteous in every way, every day, and you will reap a winning personality; by inspiring others your own joy increases. Certainly the joy of your life to a great extent is in your own power. The true happiness lies not in the pensioned era but in the noble adventure of carrying on.—L. S. Hoffman, in he Christ We Love.

FOOD FOR MARS.

Grace French Smith.

Inscribed in Belgian, Italian or French,
On freights that are aiming for war and trench
"Eight horses or forty men,"
And either were shoved in the pen.
So the infinite value of man had been lost,
For the war must be won at whatever cost,
"If we make such a drive as you suggest,"
Said an aide to Napoleon, risking arrest,
"One million men will be lost!
One million men are the cost."
And Napoleon answered, with ice, to his plea,
"And what are a million men to me?"

Turn the pages of history—ever, alas!
A determined struggle to crush the mass,
"Eight horses or forty men,"
And either are shoved in the pen.
A selfish use of the crowd for greed,
Not men of God, they are cattle—and bleed.

Trying Both Ways.

Wakutemani found himself strangely drawn to the missionary, and he heard her teaching again and again, and departed without reply. But one day he came to her and said: "I will try your way without leaving the old way. I will try both ways at once. Tell me what a Christian ought to do; I will do that. I will also do what an Indian ought to do. And in a year I will follow the way that has satisfied me."

The missionary said: "If you are to be a Christian, you must not drink, nor do violence. And you must pray to the Great Spirit to teach you the right way."

The dances came, and Wakutemani led them. Naked and painted, he sang the old war-songs, and leaped and brandished his weapons, the young braves following him. The drums sounded their monotonous accompaniment; the voices droned, and rose at times into yells; and their savage instincts swelled with every dance. At last there came a lull, and Wakutemani stood in the midst of the ring. "This way does not satisfy me," he said. "If any others feel as I do, let them follow me."

Two young braves rose and followed him out of the circle into the night. They went back to the Mission. "We have tried both ways," they said to the missionary; "we will follow yours."

They followed in the new way, and found that it satisfied. Every Sunday, a middle-aged Indian stands up in one of the little churches and reads from the Bible and teaches the people how the Great Spirit wants men to live. It is the Rev. Mr. Wakutemani. The young men know he was a great brave in his youth, and that he tried both ways, and found the way that satisfies. —Sel.

"His Most Worthy Praises."

One of the reasons for our attendance at church, as recorded in the exhortation, is "To set forth His most worthy praise." Long before, the Psalmist had struck the same note in the words, "He that offereth me thanks and praise, he honoureth me." The verse continues, "To him that ordereth his conversation right will I show the salvation of God." In the balanced poetry of his day, the Psalmist sets forth the two ways of praise and thanksgiving. One is by the lips, the other is by the life, by ordering the conversation, that is the manner of life, aright.

It is not uncommon for people to ask for the prayers of the Church in their extremity and adversity. But it is uncommon for people to ask for special thanksgiving for mercies vouchsafed to them. Likewise for ten who give thanks with their lips there is about one who does it with his life. The general thanksgiving prays that we may give thanks not only with our lips, but also with our lives by giving up "ourselves to Thy service and by walking before Thee in holiness and righteousness all our days."

As we are slack in thanking God, so we fail often to express our gratitude to our fellows. How many people take the comforts and joys of home for granted. Their climax of gratitude is often, "It might be worse." Hearts are overburdened and nigh to breaking more often than we imagine as they look in vain for words of appreciation, thanks and love. It behooves us to stir ourselves in the direction both regarding God and our loved ones.

—Canadian Churchman.

He Is Able."

There is nothing that the world is quite so much in need of as renewal of man's faith in God's wisdom and in His love and power. In His wise providence He knows our needs better than we ourselves. In His love He is ready to meet those needs whenever we turn to Him in the faith that breaks down the barrier of separation that by our sin and indifference we have erected between ourselves and Him. Then His power is available to us in all our ways. And it is as true today as it ever has been that He is able to supply all our need "according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

God Our Guide.

"Order my steps" is a prayer which should ever be on our lips. We should get our orders from God, not once in our life only, when we first give ourselves to him; not at the opening of each day only, as we go forth to the day's task; not merely at the beginning of each new piece of work or of each fresh task—but every moment, for each step. That is what walking with God means. We may make this so real that we shall look up into God's face continually, asking, "What next, dear Lord? What shall I do now? Which course shall I take today? How shall I do this duty?" If we can but have God's guidance and help for the little short steps, we need not fear for the long miles, the great stretches of road. If each step is of His ordering, the long miles will be paths of His choosing.

Do It Well.

"What is worth doing is worth doing well." Many a task fails of beauty and value because of that fine finishing touch. A little self-examination would be of service here. You attend church, but do you do it well? Do you come on time? Do you come prayerfully? Do you share in the service and promote the atmosphere of worship? You teach in the Sunday School. Are you regular? Does every member of your class know that when he comes on Sunday morning you will be here ahead of him to welcome him, to make him glad he has come? Do you prepare your lessons carefully and prayerfully, bringing a fresh and helpful message to your class? You are a member of one of the church organizations. Do you bring that organization your enthusiasm? Are you one of those whose eager helpfulness makes the organization a success, or one whose lagging steps tend to retard its progress. How well do you do your part as a member of the church? Do you just "get by," or do you give your church your best?

COMPASSION.

Mabel C. Gorrell.

My friend sat near his open door
To watch the fading clouds grow dim;
In early years he worked and strove
For all that patience won for him;

The peace attained was worth its price,
And light, that glows in eyes and face;
Devotion toward his fellowmen,
The will to serve in any place.

He loves each one who passes by,
Though some are crippled, dwarfed by shade,
One put them here to live and serve—
They all are souls our Father made.

"Throw Away Your Baggage."

In one of his recent sermons Toyohiko Kagawa, the famous Japanese evangelist, says that in the great earthquake in Tokyo a few years ago the policemen were continually shouting to the crowds that were seeking to escape the flames: "Throw away your baggage!" He says that thousands of people perished who might have escaped if they had been willing to heed the advice and leave behind them the silks and other valuables they were seeking to save. In one sense of the word, this was what Jesus was saying to the rich young ruler when He told them to go sell all that he had, and give it to the poor, and come and follow Him. It is an admonition that nearly all of us need. Material possessions and earthly values have a place of too great importance in the average life. We are always in danger of clinging to these so tightly that we imperil our immortal souls. Often it becomes necessary for us to rid ourselves of some cherished possession and deires and ambition in order that we may find the way that leads to spiritual life.

A dear old lady attended a health lecture, and stayed behind to ask the lecturer a question.

"Did I understand you to say," she asked, "that deep breathing kills microbes?"

"I certainly did say that many microbes are killed by deep breathing," replied the lecturer.

"Then can you tell me, please," she asked, "how one can teach the microbes to breath deeply?"—Exchange.

FOR THE CHILDREN

The Little Red Bicycle.

The little red bicycle lived in a great big house on a wide shady street, and was owned by a little boy, called Tommy Brown. Tommy had a great many other toys as well, but of them all he loved his bicycle the most. The little red bicycle slept in a big cupboard just off the front hall, and with him slept the roller skate twins, the ball and bat, and Mr. Broom, who never lay down because he was so very tall.

Now Tommy was a very good little boy, and tidy one, too. Every afternoon when he came in from play he made sure that his toys were put to sleep in the cupboard before he went upstairs to wash for tea. "Oh, dear," said the little red bicycle one day, "I do wish Tommy would be a little more careless once in a while and forget to put me away." "Whatever for?" said the ball and bat together. "Because I want to see the world," sighed the little red bicycle, and even though the roller skates said, "How silly!" he fell to dreaming of the big world outside.

All grew quiet in the cupboard as one by one the toys fell asleep. Poor Mr. Broom slipped a little sideways until his head was in a corner. "Gracious!" said the little red bicycle suddenly—then held his breath for fear some of the others would hear him and waken—but none did. What had he seen? Why, the door was swinging open and he could feel a breeze. Tommy for once had forgotten to shut the front door tightly and the breeze had opened the cupboard, too. "Now is my chance for an adventure," the little red bicycle whispered, and so saying he gave his peddles a twirl and away he went.

Out through the door and down the front steps went the naughty little bicycle. His pedals whizzed round and round as he saile ddown the street, and as he went he sang a little song:—

"Oh, why should I stay in a cupboard and sleep,
With some stuffy old toys and a broom,
When I can be out in the big wide world.
Having fun where there's plenty of room."

On and on went the little red bicycle, and faster and fatser went his little pedals, and faster and faster went his little round wheels. Mr. Yellow Moon looked down as he sailed the blue sky and gasped when he saw what the little red bicycle was doing. "Little red bicycle, little red bicycle, what are you doing out here all by yourself at this hour of the night. Go home to bed." But the little red bicycle just laughed at Mr. Moon and kept on singing his naughty little song. Then all the little stars looked down and blinked their eyes when they saw what the little red bicycle was doing. "Go home to bed; go home to bed," they cried, "This is the time for the fairy folk to play and you may bump into some and hurt them if you are not careful." But the naughty little red bicycle just gave his pedals a flip and kept on going along.

Pretty soon he began to get tired for, you must remember, he had been going very fast. "This isn't much fun," he said crossly, as he stopped by a big board fence to rest, "I've run, and I've run, and I've run, and I haven't met any adventure yet." The big board fence, who was listening, just smiled and said to himself, "Perhaps if I teach the little red bicycle a lesson he will be good once more and go home to bed where he belongs." So what do you think he did? He began to stretch—and he stretched, and he stretched, and he stretched, until he had made a big ring right around the spot where the little red bicycle was standing. "Oh, dear! Oh, dear! What has happened?" cried the little red bicycle, "How did this wall ever get here? Oh, how shall I ever get out?" First he went this way, and then he went that, and he banged on one side, then he banged on another, but the big board fence only smiled and stood quite still.

Pretty soon the little red bicycle's nice red paint began to scratch, and one pedal got such a bang that it fell right off. "Oh, dear! Oh, dear! I wish I had been a good little bicycle and never come out. Oh, why didn't I listen to Mr. Moon when he spoke to me? I wonder if he would help me now?" So saying he looked up into the sky and there was Mr. Moon sailing right over head. "Please, Mr. Yellow Moon, I am so sorry I have been naughty. It wasn't any fun looking for adventure all by myself, and now that I have found one, I am in trouble. Will you please help me, Mr. Moon?" "I will if you promise to go right home and never leave your nice cosy cupboard again, unless Tommy takes you out," said Mr. Moon. "Oh, I will, I will. Thank you, dear Mr. Moon," cried the little red bicycle. "All right! Here comes one of my jolly little moonbeams," called Mr. Moon, "Catch hold tightly and I will lift you up and carry you home." Down came the moonbeam, and up went the little red bicycle—and before he knew it, he was safe back in his cosy cupboard.

"Oh! Here I am. How wonderful!" whispered the little red bicycle joyfully, then looked around anxiously to see if any of the others had heard. But Mr. Broom was sound asleep in his corner and the other toys were far away in dreamland. "How sleepy and tired I am and how glad I am to be back again," he thought as he too dozed off to sleep. "Thank you, Mr. Moon, for helping me, I'll never be so silly and naughty again." And Mr. Moon, who was looking in the window, looked down and winked at the big board fence, "You helped, too," he seemed to say.

In the morning, when Tommy's mother went to get her broom to sweep the kitchen floor, she found the open cupboard door. Looking in, she gasped at the sight, and then called, "Come, Tommy, you will have to get busy and fix your little red bicycle, the door must have swung open in the night and has knocked off a pedal and scratched the paint. Perhaps Daddy will help you with it tonight"—and he did.

Pork Chops.

Scrap loved pork chops. Why his family so seldom ate them was a mystery to him, and the amount of chicken and fish they did eat was appalling; for neither of these was he ever allowed to touch lest a bone become lodged in his throat.

Ridiculous, he thought. But nobody paid any attention to his ideas, or even appeared to understand them, though he barked the most lustily.

Of course, he was a member of the family, and as such should have been listened to.

For years he had performed his duties in the household as any self-respecting member should. He drove the cows to pasture and sent the pigs back into their yard when they sometimes managed to escape and get into the potato patch, he carried sticks of wood and acted as general protector to everybody on the farm.

He had been such a tiny ball of brown fur when he had first been given to the boys, that Scrap had seemed the only appropriate name to call him, and Scrap he had been ever since, though as time went on the name was not so descriptive as it had been at first.

He loved the boys dearly and was their companion, and they taught him tricks enough to have fitted him for any circus. All together, he led a very happy life, and if the rest of the family did not always understand him, he felt that it was not his fault. He understood them well enough. He knew that, when the boys started off right after breakfast with books under their arms, he was never expected to go farther than the gate with them, and that, when they went off up the road with an ax, or perhaps a box of lunch, it was his time for a grand frolic, and that by no chance whatever would he be left at home.

Oh, the delight of those tramps! The boys usually walked miles on those occasions, but Scrap easily ran three or four times as far, making little excursions around trees and bushes, chasing dozens of delightful odors, scratching up the soft wood mold in search of no one knew exactly what, and again flying (so lightly did his paws touch the ground) in pursuit of some incautious rabbit that had strayed from its burrow.

When these tramps were over and two very tired, hungry boys came back, an even more tired brindle dog followed them and could hardly wait to get to his comfortable napping-place behind his kitchen stove.

It was when they were coming back from one of these long tramps one brisk fall afternoon, that Mother, opening the door, spied the boys up the road, Scrap proudly trotting beside them, with a long stick in his mouth.

"Take it to Mother," said Jay, as Scrap looked up for instructions.

Away he bounded, laying the stick at her feet.

Mother patted him and told him he was a good dog to bring her kindling wood for her grate fire, and then as the boys came nearer she called to them to hurry, since dinner was ready; for, you see, Scrap's family had lived in the city until the last few years and had clung to the city custom of having dinner in the late afternoon.

"We have got some nice pork chops and baked potatoes, and sister has made us some soup, too," Mother added.

"That sounds pretty good to me," said Jay. "I am hungry enough to eat the barn door."

"So am I," echoed Will.

No one noticed that Scrap's ears went up and his tail gave an extra joyful wag at the mention of pork chops.

It took but a few minutes for the boys to wash their hands and make themselves sufficiently presentable to sit down at the table, and it was not long before six hungry people were doing full justice to Sister's good soup.

Father looked up suddenly and asked where Scrap was.

"Behind the kitchen stove," answered Sister.

"What did you do with the chops?" Father asked.

"They're on the hearth," she answered.

"Aren't you afraid Scrap will get them? He is as hungry as the boys, and you know how he loves pork chops."

Right here I must explain that the stove in that kitchen was an old-fashioned, rather large affair, with no warming oven, but with a wide low hearth in front, where the food next to be served was often set to keep hot. The hearth was so low, indeed, that it was only just above the level of Scrap's nose.

"No," said Sister, "he won't take them. You know, Daddy, you have yourself often boasted about Scrap's honesty. You know he has never stolen a thing since he was a little bit of a puppy. I am sure there is no virtue in being honest if things are put so far out of the way that one can't steal them."

"Very well," said her father, "but I'm not looking out for Scrap's virtues just now so much as I am for our dinner."

By this time most of the family had finished eating their soup, and Sister rose to take the dishes from the table, walking very softly toward the door. Once there, she beckoned to her father, who followed quickly and peeped in the kitchen door.

Scrap was no longer snoozing behind the kitchen stove as Sister had left him, but had gone to the other end of the long room, and was lying with his nose in the corner farthest away.

Triumphantly Sister returned to the dining room with the platter in her hands, and Mother carefully counted the chops and said, "Yes, that is exactly the number I cooked." It was perfectly certain that they had not been touched.

"Now, Daddy, what do you say to that?" asked Sister.

"Well," said Father, "I'll tell you just what I think. Scrap is a great deal wiser and better than some people. He not only did not yield to temptation, but he got as far out of the way of it as he could."

"Come here, Scrap. You certainly deserve a reward. Sit up like a gentleman," and Scrap straightened himself up at once on his hind legs, joyfully took the nicely browned chop Father gave him, and carried it out on the old mat in the back porch, which was his usual dining room.

"I'll save every bone for him, too," said Mother.

Our Plant-Enemies.

You will probably go all through life without being bitten by a poisonous snake. Everybody knows that rattlers, copperheads and a few other sorts of snakes have poison fangs, but do you know your enemies in the plant world when you meet them?

To be sure, the bite of the poison-ivy family is not so serious as rattlesnake bite, but it can be very disagreeable. Take a look at the pretty little plant which is often found climbing trees. It has leaves a good deal like oak-tree leaves. They are shiny green in spring and gorgeous autumn colors in the fall. They look as if they would make a nice bouquet to take home, but if you pick them, or even brush against them, you are very likely to have much itching and swollen hands covered with little blisters. You may even have the poison-oak poisoning spread all over your body, and be sick in bed.

When the famous Captain John Smith came to Virginia, he seems to have met the poison-ivy family for the first time. No doubt he found it in the same woods where Pocahontas saved his life. His description of the treacherous plant runs: "The poisonous weed, being in shape but little different from our English yvie; but being touched causeth redness, itchinge, and lastly blysters"; and that description is as true today as it was when Jamestown was founded.

There are four sorts of poison-ivy plants in our country. Every one of them is to be avoided if you value your comfort. Three of these plant enemies grow in the eastern part of the United States and one in the west. The poison-oak as mentioned is the typical western pioneer. Poison-sumac, which looks very much like the harmless sumac, and poison-ivy are what you must look out for further east.

Probably any old timer in the woods where you go for picnics or the mountains where you go camping and fishing can point out the dangerous weeds to you, but here is a simple way to tell each of the common poison plants. Poison-sumac, which is the most vicious and seriously poisonous of the whole family, grows only in bogs and swamps, where true sumac never grows. The fruit of poison-sumac is a drooping bunch of pale berries, while harmless true sumac has stiff erect bunches of brown or black seeds. Poison-ivy is of two sorts, one like a stiff little bush and one like a vine. The leaves of both grow in groups of three. They look much like woodbine or Virginia-creeper leaves, only the leaves of the harmless and pretty vine grow always in groups of five. Count the leaves. There is an old saying, "Five fingers are safe when handling five leaves." Poison-oak leaves look like real oak leaves, but the indentations on the edges are not so deep as on real oak leaves, and real oak leaves do not grow on low thin stems. They do not climb other trees, vine-like. Although the four plants look rather differently they all really belong to the same family, and it is a family one should not try to get acquainted with too intimately. Don't try shaking hands with any of them. Many people claim they don't take poison-ivy, and then find they do.

You may go for years through woods where the poisoners grow and never catch the poison-ivy. Then you may happen to touch some when it is most poisonous, in the spring, or when you are hot and perspiring and most likely to be poisoned, and have a very different and disagreeable experience. There is no doubt that people differ a good deal in how susceptible they are to poison-ivy poisoning, but most people can be poisoned under just the proper conditions. Some poison so easily that their faces and hands will swell and blister after merely driving by the poison plant and having the wind blow the poisonous elements their way.

Just what it is about poison-ivy that poisons has long been a mystery. Doctors think now that it is at least partly a very irritating oil on the leaves of the plant. This oil may be transferred from one part of your skin to another, or from your hand to another's by contact.

If you have the bad luck to rub against any of these poisoners you had better wash as soon as possible either in gasoline or in strong soapsuds. These thing will take off the poison oil. Plain water does almost no good. As you know, water will not cut oil.

"How Do You Do?"

"Uncle Bob," complained Barbara, "I think it is silly for people to say, 'How do you do?' They seldom have time to stop and tell each other how they do. Why don't they just say 'Good day'?"

Uncle Bob laid down his book.

"That's an interesting subject. Suppose we talk it over?"

"'How do you do?' isn't much to talk over," sniffed Barbara. "I'm not going to say it any more."

"Of course," mused Uncle Bob, you might prefer to ask, 'How do you perspire?' or 'Have you eaten your rice'?"

Barbara stared at her uncle and then began to giggle.

"The idea! I'd never say things like that."

"Probably not," agreed Uncle Bob, "unless you happened to be a native of Egypt or of China."

"You must be fooling."

"'Cross my heart' I'm not. The first greeting is as common in Egypt as the other is in China."

"That's funny," laughed Barbara.

"In Spain," went on her uncle, "they ask, 'How are you'?"

"We do that," nodded Barbara. "It's shorter than 'How do you do?'"

"If we were to meet in France, now," stated Uncle Bob, "I'd probably say to you, 'How do you carry yourself?' In Holland I might ask, 'How do you fare?'"

"And how would you greet me in Germany?" Barbara wanted to know.

"I'd bow politely and inquire, 'How do you find yourself?' In Italy I'd ask, 'How do you stand'?"

"My, this is fun!" laughed Barbara. "Tell me some more, Cncle Bob."

"Swedish friends ask each other, 'How can you?' and—"

"How can you—what?" demanded Barbara, so interested that she forgot she was interrupting. "That doesn't make sense."

"To them it does," replied Uncle Bob. "Polite little Polish girls want to know 'How do you have yourself?' while those of Russia ask, 'How do you live on?'"

"Don't they mean, 'What do you live on'?" inquired Barbara, looking puzzled.

"Of all things, no! That would be horribly impolite. The Persians, now, observe courteously, 'May your shadow never grow less.'"

"That's about the funniest of all," chuckled Barbara. "It's a wonder their greeting doesn't begin with 'How'; so many of them begin with that word."

"It does seem popular as a starter," declared Uncle Bob. "I met an American Indian brave last summer at a pageant, and what do you suppose he said when I greeted him?"

"What, Uncle Bob?"

"He looked me over from head to foot and then solemnly grunted: 'How?' Just that. Brief to the point, wasn't it? But—'pon my word!" cried her uncle at his watch, I'm going to be late to class, sure as shooting. Your questions are too interesting, young lady. Save the rest for vacation, or you'll make your poor uncle lose his job."

"Bye, then, Uncle," responded Barbara, "and thanks a lot."

Then she called after him:

"My next question is going to be, how do people say 'Good-bye'?"

Uncle Bob glanced back over his shoulder and there was twinkle in his eye as he called:

"So long, then!" —The Sentinel.

Holes In Your Pockets.

Boys, did you ever stop to think that only civilized man has pockets? And what a wonderful thing they are. But a pocket with holes isn't worth much, is it?

Your mind is a pocket, into which to put thoughts, ideas, impressions, purposes and all sorts of good things. But minds full of holes are not worth much. Lots of good things are put into them, but they don't stay there.

You'll never be a good thinker, nor a very wise person until you patch the holes in your mind's pockets. Forgetting is one of the holes, lack of attention another, lack of purpose a third, allowing yourself to get confused is another. How many other holes can you think of?

The Ven. Franklin T. Eastment has resigned his position as Archdeacon of Altoona, Pa., and the clergy of that Archdeaconry have elected the Rev. William T. Sherwood, rector of Trinity Church, Tyrone, and St. John's, Huntingdon, to be Archdeacon. Bishop Brown made this announcement at a recent meeting of the Executive Council of the diocese.

The Rev. W. H. B. Allen, rector of St. Peter's Church, Narragansett, R. I., has retired after a rectorshi pof thirty-six years.

Deaths.

The Rev. Henry Horton Williams, a retired minister of the Diocese of Virginia, died on September 10, at his home in Charlottesville. Mr. Williams was born at Birkenhead, England, November 17, 1852. He was engaged in business for many years and served as a lay worker in the mountain missionary work in the Diocese of Virginia. Because of having interest in the mountain work, he sought ordination to the diaconate in order to enlarge his field of service. He was ordained by Bishop Peterkin of West Virginia in 1822. He continued to be engaged in the mountain work until his retirement on account of age. He married in August, 1909, Miss Francis C. Birkley of Albemarle County, who died several years ago. The funeral was held at Christ Church, Charlottesville, on September 11, by the Rev. Robert F. Gibson, rector of the church, assisted by other clergy of the Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge.

Mrs. Charles R. Palmore.

One of earth's choicest flowers was transplanted into the heavenly garden on August 30, when Eliza Perkins Palmore, daughter of the late Judge William A. Perkins and Anne Henderson, his wife, and widow of Dr. Charles R. Palmore, entered the higher life in the eighty-sixth year of her age. After a married life of less than ten years, she was left a widow with two daughters. Faced with the necessity of providing for her family, Mrs. Palmore entered the mercantile business at Stony Point, in Cumberland County, Virginia. She was quite successful in business and succeeded in giving her children a college education. Her physical and mental alertness were conspicuous throughout her long life, and were only lost about three weeks before her death, when she suffered a fall, which fractured her hip. She never recovered from the shock of this fall. Mrs. Palmore is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Anne H. Adams and Mrs. Mattauer Crute, eight grandchildren, and seven great-grandchildren.

From girlhood Mrs. Palmore was a loyal and devoted communicant of Grace Church, Ca Ira, in the shadow of whose ancient walls she was laid to rest on August 31. Her devotion to Christ and His Church was always conspicuous and beautiful. Her sweet nature and gentle charity made her a favorite with all, and the memory of her radiant personality will ever remain fresh with those who knew her. The Church Militant has lost another soldier: the Church Triumphant has gained another saint.

Liberate the truth and it will make good by its inherent appealing power.

The greatest miracles are the everyday facts of life. —Aldous Huxley.

"Each one of us has it in him to become a mirror of the Eternal."

Our part is to ask in faith; His gracious response is to give. He will come, not as Guest, but as Host; not to share a part, but to control the whole.

Apart from God there is no solution to the problems that life offers. The Christian believer, however, as a recent writer says, "has an inner sense by which he reads in the events of life the signals of God's care and love." Through our faith in Him we know that life is worth the living because it is His gift.

Ah! how often when we have been dissatisfied with the ways of God, we ought to have been dissatisfied with our own ways.—Hudson Taylor.

Man is not left upon this earth so fair
To grope his ways in darkness all alone—
Where hunger is, is food to satisfy,
For God, who put the heart's deep longing there,
Gives not His child who asks for bread, a stone.

When we witness for Christ our witnessing has a tenfold influence if it is supported by the unanswerable testimony of a godly life.

Swift answers, Lord, are Thine, no waiting long.
Today Thou makest mine a new, new song.
For reassurance sweet comes straight from Thee:
"I am the Vine, and thou a branch of me."

It was said of John Henry Newman, author of "Lead, Kindly Light," that his students were moved by anything he said simply because it was Newman who said it. The nobility of his character, the beauty of his life, and the gentleness of his nature made whatever he said important to those who knew him. Such is the power of the sincere Christian.

In His own right way, to bring us His best blessing, Christ still comes. In the fullness of time, when we are ready, when we are in need, God sends forth His Son.—George Hodges.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED

By

REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 12, 1935. No. 41.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas Frank Gailor, D. D., LL. D.,
Bishop of Tennessee and Chancellor of the University of the South.

Bishop Gailor reached the end of his "training for eternity" in death at Sewanee, Tennessee, October 3, in his eightieth year.

"Training for eternity" was his own description of what life meant to him. "Otherwise," he said, "it is hardly worth the living."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Calls and Trial Sermons.

September 28, 1935.

Mr. Editor:

Your editorial in today's issue of the Southern Churchman, "Is This the Right Way?" is very impressive. I wish that it could be sent to all of our vestrymen.

What has become of our old-fashioned men of God, who waited for the Holy Spirit to call them and guide them into a new work after they had done all they could in the old charge?

And where are our splendid laymen, taught by godly parents and ministers to look up to the ministry of the Church as to men set apart for a high and holy calling? I believe we have them still, both clergy and laity, who look to God and not men for spiritual guidance in all matters concerning the Church.

But when the vestry offer a clergyman an opportunity to preach a "trial sermon" in their vacant church, do they think they are placing him in a proper and honorable position? And would they desire the kind of pastor that will do it?

And finally what of a clergyman who will write a letter offering himself as rector of a vacant church? A good layman once answered this question. He told the writer that over forty applications had been received for the rectorship of the large congregation to which he belonged and to the credit of the vestry none of the writers was called.

Page Mr. Page.

Mr. Editor:

The article captioned, "The Speech No Man Makes," by Randolph Roswell Page, in your issue of August 31, is one of the most worthwhile it has been my privilege to read. It speaks the truth fearlessly, forcefully. That characteristic, however, is an outstanding one in the Page, Nelson and Kinloch families of Virginia.

During my nineteen years as a member of the Board of Trustees of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tennessee (representing the Diocese of Mississippi, my native state), I was thrown quite intimately with Bishop Cleland Kinloch Nelson, of the Diocese of Georgia. The memory of that jovial and at the same time sterling man is with me as a sweet and elevating one of those days beginning back in 1894.

At a dining given the Board of Trustees at Sewanee, Bishop Nelson narrated this incident, evidencing family characteristics: While sitting in the lobby of a London, England, hotel, he sneezed, immediately a man, an entire stranger, jumped up and said: "Good gracious me, man, you must be kin either to the Page, Nelson or Kinloch family in Virginia, U. S. A." The Bishop asked "Why?" The reply was, "None other than they can sneeze so inharmoniously loud, unless he is one of them." Bishop Nelson was my guest as we travelled through the Diocese of Mississippi in the interest of the University of the South. A more enjoyable guest I never had.

Commending Mr. Schapiro's Work.

Mr. Editor:

I would like again to draw the attention of Church people to the work of Mr. B. A. M. Schapiro—"Word Studies in the Old Testament."

The fourth volume has been completed and is awaiting publication, but Mr. Schapiro is in need of financial assistance in order to be able to print it and go on with the work.

He believes in these days, when the Word of God is assailed, that the "Word Studies" are calculated to defend the Oracles of God.

Many letters, urging him to continue the work have come to him. The following, by the Rt. Rev. James De Wolf Perry, highly commends Mr. Schapiro's work:

"My Dear Mr. Schapiro:

"Your three volumes on studies of words in the Old Testament, have interested me deeply. As the study of Hebrew in our Church Seminaries has been abandoned by many candidates for the Ministry, such contributions as these from your pen become the more valuable as information. I feel that the Church owes you a debt of gratitude for the publications you have given us, and I hope that your work in this important field will continue.

"Faithfully yours,
"James DeWolf Perry,

A Real Leader Enters Into Life Eternal.

Thomas Frank Gailor received every honor which our Church could confer upon a bishop. He stood for all that was honorable and in the world he witnessed Christ and His sufficiency. The following editorial, written by Mr. Alfred Mynders in The Chattanooga News expresses so much better than we could express the layman's appreciation of this great leader, that we take pleasure in quoting it.

Bishop Gailor.

To say that Thomas Frank Gailor was born in Jackson, Miss., September 17, 1856; that he was duly educated for the priesthood and ordained in Tennessee; that he became a member of the faculty at Sewanee, and in 1893 was elected Bishop Coadjutor of Tennessee and in 1898 became bishop of the diocese, is merely to set up a canvas.

The fine mind, the personality and great heart of Bishop Gailor painted on that canvas a picture rich and beautiful.

Many who are not in his Church would say that he was First Citizen of Tennessee. Only one who did belong to his denomination, however, could know what Bishop Gailor meant to the Episcopal Diocese of Tennessee. To men of his own age he was a spiritual leader and a delightful social companion. To Episcopalians between ten and fifty, he was an ideal—a pattern of a great preacher, a model of a gentleman—everything that a Shepherd should be to his flock. To them he was a Chevalier Bayard, a Knight without fear and without reproach. He taught them to love their fellowmen and to feel dishonor as a stain.

Two years ago, Bishop Gailor spoke at St. Paul's in Chattanooga where, fifty years before as a young priest he had spoken. We realized then how the Bishop had made his own mind conform to a world where social justice is now the great demand.

He said that the Church must realize that there must be a redistribution of the things which make life supportable, that our social life must be changed and so regulated that no future depression will find great blocks of our population hungry, ill clad, desperate and (despairful.)

His text was the healing of lepers, and he told how Christ was not afraid to lay hands on those who were shunned by all their fellows. The true Christian today will not be afraid to go down among even the lowest and most humble and help them, said this fine preacher.

We have heard much about Spinoza's God, lately, due to the writing of a book on Spinoza, by Lewis Browne, and to Albert Einstein's declaration that his God is Spinoza's God. It was not Bishop Gailor's God, however. He believed at the end, as fervently as he did at Sewanee in 1882, that the guiding hand behind this vast Universe is a kind and gentle Father. Scoffers must be nonplussed when they see how this sort of religion molded the character of the Bishop and sustained him in sorrow, and mellowed and refined him in age. Many new "isms" and theories sprang up in religion in his time. To the propounders of these new ideas, Bishop Gailor seemed to say, with the faith of an Abraham: "Canst thou by searching find out God?"

He knew, with old Omar, that—

". . . all the Saints and Sages who discuss'd
Of the two worlds so wisely—they are thrust
Like foolish prophets forth; their words to scorn
Are scattered, and their mouths are stop't with dust."

And he knew that only Faith can be the basis of a comfort in any religion.

The sophisticates regard it as a somewhat effeminate gesture, we believe, to cling to simple faith. The "he-man" is sometimes rather ashamed to be religious. But, when we heard Bishop Gailor, we realized that it was a noble and a manly thing to honor the name of Jesus. When, a few years ago, at the Eucharist Congress in Chicago, over 150,000 men, members of the Holy Name Society, sat in Soldiers' Field at night, and each lighted his little candle, there was, at first, a snicker from the sidelines. But, when 150,000 manly voices rose in praise, and the light from 150,000 candles flickered to the skies, all within sight of the majestice spectacle were moved as if by a beam of light from the sky.

We may doubt that man is immortal, but few doubt that there is something behind this scheme of the Universe which is immortal.

We may hope that it is not impersonal Nature, which is Spinoza's God.

But, whatever form or shape the Father of us all may take, we may feel certain that He would be content to have us consider Him like Bishop Gailor's God.

Bishop Gailor's death is a loss to Tennessee and the nation. He lent dignity to high place, and yet was a warm-hearted, impulsive, neighborly gentleman.

Someone once called him a "cosmopolitan provincial," because he was a man who could mingle with the other great of the Earth and yet not lose that Native Southern wit and charm which makes the best of the Southerners beloved of the peoples of far lands.

Tennessee loved and respected and revered him, not because he held high place in the Protestant Episcopal Church, but because he was Thomas Frank Gailor.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Is the Archbishop Right?

The Living Church, September 28, 1935.

In spite of the fact that a time has been reached when apparently the only effective answer to Italy can be made in strong words backed up by the guns of the British fleet, we cannot help a feeling of regret that so distinguished a Church leader as the Archbishop of York has acted as the mouthpiece of Downing Street in the shaping of British public opinion in support of armed opposition to Mussolini. Addressing the nation over the radio, Archbishop Temple not only spoke strongly in favor of the application of economic sanctions, but also assured the British public that use of the army and navy to enforce this policy would no more be war than the policeman's use of his club to curb a riot. This reminds us strikingly of Signor Mussolini's own euphonious description of the forthcoming conflict not as war but as a "colonial adventure." If a rose by any other name smells as sweet, it is equally true that war by any other name is equally malodorous.

But beyond that the Archbishop's words make our heart sink as our mind flashes back to those days in 1914 in Europe and a few years later in this country when the clergy rendered such effective service to their several nations and to the god of war by interpreting national ambitions in the terms of Christianity. Are we again to have the spectacle of priests and ministers who are pledged to the service of the Prince of Peace preaching war from their pulpits? Must we once more have the whole Gospel picture twisted and warped so that the figure of Christ emerges only as seen in that exceptional moment when in righteous anger He drove the money changers from the temple of God ?

We do not say that the Archbishop of York was wrong in the distinction he made between the use of force in a definite act of aggression and the use of force in order to restrain aggression. There is indeed a very vital distinction and at least on the surface of things it appears that Italy is acting in the spirit of the former and Great Britain of the latter conception. We know, however, that there are many forces working behind the scene, as there were in the last war and as there have been in every war. We know that rarely if ever does a country enter into warfare with its hands entirely clean. We know that Britain has vital imperial interests that are threatened by Mussolini's act. We know above all that any use of military and naval force as an instrument of national policy is a violation of the Kellogg-Briand Pact to which both Italy and Britain, as well as our own country and most of the nations of the world, are parties, and we know that the violation of that pact, whatever the provocoation may be, is a threat to the peace and security of the entire world.

Methodism and the Church of England.

Church of England Newspaper, September 20, 1935.

The remarkable plea by a Methodist minister for reunion between Methodism and the Church of England is worthy of the careful attention of Methodists and Anglicans. We have no idea how many Methodists would support Dr. Harrison's main contention, but we are sure it is true that on both sides a steadily-increasing number are of opinion that the causes of separation have lost a great deal of their significance. This being so, why are the barriers maintained and the sin of schism perpetuated in view of the unparalleled opportunities of advance of the Christian forces? We agree with Dr. Harrison when he says: "If the longing for Reunion were strong enough on both sides, the way could be found, for Methodism is nearer to the Church of England in aims, in principles and ideals than at any previous point in its history."

If the fence which divides us is so flimsy it is surelv a sin against our one Lord to acquiesce generation after generation in a state of affairs which constitutes a serious hindrance to the extension of the Kingdom of Christ. Is it not possible for a few men—clerical and lay—from both Churches to take up Dr. Harrison's challenge and prepare the way for the fulfilment of Christ's prayer, "That they all may be one"?

Church Money Raising.

Christianity Today, October, 1935.

At the Convention of the Lutheran Synod of New York held during the month of June, a special committee appointed at a previous convention presented recommendations strongly condemning the raising of church money by means of card parties, bazaars, etc. While making clear that the morality of card parties, dancing, and similar matters was not the point at issue, this report said, "A search of the Scriptures certainly will not reveal a single phrase in support of any commercial method of supporting the religion of Jesus Christ."

The report also discusses the question from another standpoint, that of tax exemption and states, "For a congregation exempt from taxation on its property, without a license from the sanitary department or a license from the city to give a supper is certainly unfair competition with the restaurants, which are paying taxes on their property and which are inspected by the sanitary department and must pay for a license." The report adds, "It is no wonder therefore that the communistic element despises the Christian Church for its unethical methods."

The resolutions were passed.

In Time of Trouble.

The German Bible Societies had a remarkable year in 1934. Persecution has driven the people to the Scriptures. In face of repressive measures of the Hitler regime on churches and the ministry, the Bavarian Society issued 15,269 Bibles as against 11,970 the preceding year; the Saxony Society 46,994 against 31,-062; the Prussian 169,762 against 138,990, and the Wurttemberg 844,383 against 715,542.

Seeking the Lost.

Four new auto busses to carry students to different sections of Chicago for open air meetings have been purchased by the Moody Bible Institute. Dr. Will H. Houghton, the President, in his address dedicating these buses, said: "We are dedicating these buses today to a militant Christianity. Communism and atheism are on the street corner, by the grace of God we are going to the street corners with the gospel message."

Mormon Missionaries.

Twenty-six Mormon missionaries are now engaged in the task of "converting" France, Belgium and Switzerland to the religion of the Latter Day Saints. All are recent college graduates, two of them girls, and their ages range from twenty-one to twenty-six years. Utah, Idaho, Oregon, California have sent these ambassadors of Mormonism.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

"Filled With All the Fulness of God"

In the changes made in the revision of the Prayer Book, one of the most important is that to be found in the final prayer of the Baptismal Service, where we find the words:—"that Christ dwelling in your hearts by faith ye may be filled with all the fulness of God." This sets clearly before the congregation the wonderful privilege which belongs by right to every baptized member of the Church. The Church would not have dared to use words of such tremendous significance if they were not based upon Holy Scripture, and it is therefore necessary to go directly to the source from which these words were taken. They form part of a prayer offered by St. Paul on behalf of his Ephesian converts, and are to be found in the third chapter of his Epistle to the Ephesians, in the fourteenth and following verses. The prayer is as follows:—"For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that He would grant you, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God."

The Spiritual Firmament.

St. Paul reveals to us here, as it were, the vastness of the spiritual firmament which may well be compared with the work of our modern astronomers in opening up to us the vastness of the physical universe. It seems strange that in these days of ours, when so much is being done to reveal to us the extent and glory of the natural universe, that our theologians should not be just as busy in following in St. Paul's footsteps and making the study of spiritual astronomy an important department of our knowledge of Christianity. St. Paul evidently regarded his prayer as an unfolding of the possibilities of the spiritual life which might and ought to be experienced by the Ephesian Christians. If these wonderful experiences were within the reach of the Ephesians they are likewise within the reach of all Christians in every age and in all places. The Church has done well and wisely in setting before her people the greatness of the privileges which pertain to their spiritual inheritance at a time when they are specially reminded of the fact that they have been dedicated to God in Holy Baptism, and are therefore partakers of the promises which they inherit as members of the Christian Church.

The Greatness of Our Privileges As Christians.

Christian people, as a rule, do not realize how great their privileges are and what a wonderful thing the Christian life might be if they really entered into the full possession of these privileges. We have but to read over carefully and thoughtfully the passage above quoted to realize how very much we have yet to learn about what the Christian life really means as understood by St. Paul, and no doubt to many of those to whom he was writing in this Epistle. We only need to take the words which form the climax of the prayer. "that ye may be filled with all the fulness of God," to get a glimpse of the depth of meaning that those words imply. We may well ask:—How can we possibly be filled with all the fulness of God? It is true that St. Paul said of Christ:—"for in Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." Col. 2:9. And he also tells us:—"the Church which is Christ's Body," is "the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." But how can this be said of us individually?

St. John tells us that, "of His fulness have all we received and grace for grace." Which throws an important sidelight on the words used by St. Paul in his prayer for the Ephesians.

Our Union With God in Christ Gives Us a Share in His Fulness.

We may explain the matter in this way. We have been brought into union with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and we therefore share in His fulness according to our individual capacity for receiving it. Perhaps the most easily understood illustration would be that of an electric light bulb which is connected up with a powerful current, but is only capable of receiving and using an infinitesimal part of the power in which it shares. It may be a ten candle power burner, because it is only capable of receiving such a limited amount of current. Or it may have a much larger capacity resulting in that much more light. But the source from which the bulb receives its power is far greater than its capacity for receiving it. So with us, we have been admitted to a share in the divine fulness, as members of the Body of Christ, but our effectiveness as Christians depends upon the measure of our capacity for sharing in it.

An All-Important Lesson to Be Learned.

The great lesson which we may learn from this is that God gives us the opportunity of drawing more and more upon His fulness, as we open our minds and hearts to an ever-increasing supply of His Holy Spirit. Here again we find the Church teaching us clearly this same truth, this time in the service of Confirmation, when we are given a new start in our Christian life. At that time the Bishop, when he laid his hands upon us in blessing, said these words:—"Defend, O Lord, this Thy child with Thy heavenly grace that he may continue Thine forever and daily increase in Thy Holy Spirit more and more, until he come unto Thy everlasting Kingdom." The daily increase in God's Holy Spirit "more and more," means a continuous and ever increasing share in the divine fulness, if we on our part will but daily open our hearts and by faith receive this ever larger share of His fulness. The Forward Movement is seeking diligently to awaken in the minds and hearts of our people, a fuller consciousness of what it means to be a true disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to put new life and meaning into the teaching of our Church with regard to our duties and priveleges as the children of God.

The Soul.

The soul has eagles' wings,
Beyond the furthest star,
Like to a bee it brings
Its treasures from afar.

The angels know its flight;
For it is like their own;
Swifter than even light,
It reaches heaven's throne.

The Story of St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai

By WALTER H. POTTS, M. D.,

Member of the Staff of Saint Luke's Hospital, Shanghai.

ON THE MORNING of May 24, a small group of doctors, gathered in the staff office of the hospital, were about to begin the day's work when the Superintendent rushed in with the astounding news that the American Oriental Banking Corporation had closed its doors. In the face of remarks doubting his veracity, he informed us of some difficult over cashing a check following which he had seen the notice posted in English, Chinese and Russian on the doors of the bank. This news meant another and a severe set-back to the twenty-year dream of St. Luke's Hospital. We had been on the brink of starting the new and up-to-date plant in which St. Luke's and St. Elizabeth's Hospitals were to have merged into a large general hospital. The news of the bank failure meant that it would be necessary to "carry on" just a little longer in the ancient and ramshackle buildings which tell a story of seventy years of hospital service to Shanghai. These old buildings originally built of brick occupy the four corners of a street intersection in the heavily populated industrial section of Shanghai known as Hongkew. It was over this section, incidentally, that the undeclared war between Japan and China in 1932 was fought. The hospital buildings present truly a sorry sight. The weather-beaten brick facing shows the crumbling, powdery decay peculiar to the older bricks of China. The once imposing stone steps of the main entrance have been worn so badly that their shape is almost cup-like. The lock and bolt of the front door has rusted and the keys have been lost longer than anybody remembers, because St. Luke's never closes its doors. The interior of the buildings are dark and dismal for the most part. Being built of wood has meant the constant fight between hospital authorities on the one side and vermin and white ants on the other. Spectacular victories have been scored by both sides. The wood-work has also meant a terrible fire hazard and one dreads to think of the rapidity with which these old buildings could burn. However, the walls of these old buildings can tell many a soul-stirring story. They could tell you how they have housed one of the largest fracture services in the world and one of the largest services in traumatic surgery. They could tell you the story of how they sheltered a little boy of nine years until his death fourteen years later. He was suffering from an excessive chronic and incurable bone tuberculosis. They could tell you of the pathetic picture of the "broken-back paralytic" who died in the hospital after lingering for years. The hospital Chaplain could add to these stories with his story of baptism and confirmation where modern medicine and surgery failed. These old walls could also tell of the boy whose leg was amputated during the last war when the Japanese invaders destroyed his home and killed his parents. This boy has learned enough English to operate the telephone switch-board and takes his turn daily.

IN SPITE of the handicaps of cramped quarters, over-crowding and old buildings, St. Luke's has been able to keep abreast of the times in its equipment and work. This has been largely due to the generous friends both in China and abroad. We feel that we have kept up with the march of the medical profession. The hospital with its 160 beds is always full, usually to the point of putting convalescents on the floor. Its work is largely supported through local contributions, contracts and an annual grant by the Municipal Council of Shanghai. St. Luke's is the main teaching hospital for the Pennsylvania Medical School of Shanghai, being the Medical Department of St. John's University. Every year a new group of young doctors go out into their own country to practice modern medicine with its Christian ideals. A large number of the prominent medical men in China are listed among the alumni of this school, which had its origin over thirty years ago. In order to summarize the present-day work of St. Luke's, it is necessary to use a few figures taken from that uninteresting word "statistics." A glance at the annual report reveals that 3,000 patients were treated in the wards during the past year with 122,000 out-patient visits. The extent of surgery done is indicated by the 1,600 operations which do not include 3,000 minor cases done in the emergency room. The financial report shows that approximately one-third of all patients pay nothing while the cost per patient per day to the institution works at $3.38 (Shanghai currency), or $1.35 in U. S. currency.

No story of St. Luke's would be complete without mention of its sister institution, St. Elizabeth's. In the early days of hospital work in China, it was considered unethical to house male and female patients in the same buildings. The women's work was, therefore, taken over in the establishment of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, now nearing its fortieth year of service. Famed for its excellent maternity work and care of children, it has also grown to be a large general hospital for women. St. Elizabeth's does its share in the work of the medical school and the two hospitals have become time-honored partners in the medical profession of Shanghai. It was quite natural, therefore, that they should have decided to unite in the new hospital project.

For the past twenty years St. Luke's has been accumulating a building fund. The many contributions have been carefully husbanded and a large part of the funds were invested in the American Oriental Banking Corporation. Two years ago a committee was formed by Bishop Graves with directions to proceed on the plan of uniting the two hospitals. A suitable site was purchased and gradually a set of plans acceptable to both staffs was evolved. These were submitted to the National Council for approval when the fatal bank failure, involving about one-half of the building fund, abruptly halted all further steps. We now await the "salvaging of the wreck" in the hopes that some of the funds are not irrevocably lost. In the meantime both hospitals will have to continue suffering from "growing pains," a condition which has been chronic for many years and, at the same time, is become more acute each day. We do not believe the condition incurable, but think that many of the present-day "Rethinkers" will take our side in bringing to realization the plan which will climax the splendid traditions of St. Luke's.

He that saveth his time from prayer shall lose it. But he that loseth his time for communion with God shall find it in a life of multiplied blessings.

God's delays are not denials,
You will find Him true,
Working through the darkest trials
What is best for you.

Sewanee Summer Training School

By GARDINER L. TUCKER,

Executive Secretary of Department of Religious Education, Province of Sewanee.

SEWANEE is more than a college. It is the focal center of a movement for the revival of American ideals. Sewanee is the center and heart of the South, built by the power of the hope of men who cherished a great ideal and who had a great vision. The South still holds true to the fundamental American ideals. Since the Civil War the nation as a whole has thrown away fundamental American traditions. American life has been shaped by foreign ideals, an industrialism and a commercialism based almost entirely on the motive of profit. American democracy has been blurred and nearly wiped out."

The above statements were made by Professor Roy Colbert, Ph. D., Associate Professor of Economics and Sociology in the University of Wisconsin, as part of an address made by him on the subject of "Southern Ideals and National Welfare," in one of the evening programs of the Sewanee Summer Training School. He said further, "To restore neglected American ideals, to unite the people of this nation for the common purpose of realizing these ideals and so to insure stability in our economic and social life, this is the center of the Sewanee Movement."

A new chapter in the history of the Sewanee Movement was written by the session of the Sewanee Summer School this year. Men from outside the "Sewanee area," i. e., the South, called attention to the national importance of the movement, and its value to the Church and Commonwealth of the Nation. It took the breath away, a little, for those active in the Sewanee Movement to hear a professor from Wisconsin say publicly that a movement whose emblem is the old flag of the Confederacy, slightly modified, really stands for the conservation of true Americanism! This was almost as much as to say that the Stars and Bars of the South must save the Stars and Stripes!

Together with the fuller realization of the national importance of the Movement there has come a clearer understanding of its ideals, its history, and its principles. "The Sewanee Vision," as the ideal toward which the Movement is making its progress was the general subject of this year's program, and this was interpreted in various aspects by a series of speakers. That "Vision" is of a "new earth coming down from God out of Heaven"—not that such a vision, the common property of all Christians, is the monoply of the Sewanee Movement—but that it is accepted as the ideal of that Movement, with the obligation of special responsibility for its fulfilment in the Sewanee area, the South.

The history of the Movement was set forth, from its beginning in 1832 (antedating the Oxford Movement by one year), until the present time, and its future was forecast. "The Sewanee Movement" is the name, adopted only last year, of a series of activities carried on by the dioceses and the people of the Episcopal Church in the South, acting in cooperation with one another. These activities have been principally educational. The Movement has embodied itself in the University of the South (its first concrete achievement); in the Province of Sewanee (successor of the Confederate Episcopal Church); in secondary schools and junior colleges; in the Summer Conferences, of which the Sewanee Summer Training School is the oldest, and the center of the system; in the Young People's Service League of the Province, and in the provincial organizations of other Church societies; in the Regional Rural Conference, the Sewanee Conference on Religious Education, and other similar conferences. The American Church Institute for Negroes is in close alliance with it. It has formulated its own principles from its own experiences, and it has as its emblem the "Cross of Stars," a modification of the old flag of the Confederacy.

Perhaps more important than any other development has been that of its personnel and leadership. The men whom Sewanee trained in college have continued to work together in the Sewanee Movement. Thirteen alumni of the University of the South, "old Sewanee boys," served on the faculty and staff of the Summer School this year. Bishop Gailor, the Chancellor of the University and Dr. Finney the Vice-Chancellor, both actively associated with the Summer Schol, were together in college at Sewanee fifty years ago. Bishop Mikell, Bishop Green, the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, Judge Arthur Crownover and Dean Raimundo deOvies were Sewanee students together about forty years ago. Chaplain Moultre Guerry, the Rev. Capers Satterlee, the Rev. Alfred Loaring Clark, the Rev. J. Hodge Alves, the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, and Leon C. Palmer were alumni of more recent dates. Other alumni were registered as students in the School. The intimate and long-continued association of the leaders in the movement goes much further back. The bishops who led in the ante-bellum days were close personal friends, as well as ecclesiastical associates. The affectionate comradeship so characteristic of our day has been a quality from the beginning.

DURING the last year some interesting new data concerning the Sewanee Movement have been brought to light, indicating that the beginning of the Summer Conference Movement in the American Episcopal Church was very probably made at Sewanee. The Sewanee Summer Training School, begun in 1910, was preceded by other summer conferences. The first was made in July, 1883, and had for its special interest the consideration of the relation of the Church to the colored people of the South. It was called by the Rt. Rev. William Mercer Green, D. D., Bishop of Mississippi, grandfather of the present Bishop Coadjutor of Mississippi, who served as Director of the Adult Division this year. Again in 1904, 1905, and 1906, the Sewanee Summer School of hTeology was conducted along the lines of the summer conferences so widely held in more recent years. So that it seems quite probable that "Mother Mountain" (Sewanee) can claim as her offspring not only the other summer conferences of the South, but all those of the Episcopal Church throughout the nation. And even in far-off China! Miss Alice Gregg, Educational Secretary of the Distric of Anking, China, who was a member of the faculty of the Young People's Division, reported that after attending the Sewanee Summer Training School of some years ago she determined to undertake the holding of a similar gathering in China, for the benefit of the missionary workers of our Church in that field, and that she did succeed, and that the conference has been held for several summers. She received letters whil at Sewanee in August, telling of the holding of the Summer Conference in Kuling, China, in July, and she expressed her appreciation of the support given the Chinese Summer Conference by the annual offerings made at Sewanee.

The Director of the Clergy School of the Sewanee Summer Training School, session of 1935, was the Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop of Atlanta, and President of the Province of Sewanee. The Rev. R. Bland

Mitchell, D. D., of Birmingham, Ala., served as Associate Director. The lecturers were: the Very Rev. Raimundo deOvies of Atlanta; Dr. R. J. Colbert, of the University of Wisconsin; Rev. E. P. Dandridge, D. D., of Nashville, Tenn., and the Rev. Victor L. Dowdell, Ph. D., of Porto Rico.

The Director of the Adult Division was the Rt. Rev. W. M. Green, D. D., with Chaplain Moultrie Guerry of the University of the South as Assistant Director. Other members of the faculty and staff were Bishop Mikell of Atlanta, Bishop Gailor of Tennessee; Dr. John W. Wood, the Rev. Vernon McMaster and Mrs. D. D. Taber of the National Council staff; Dr. H. A. Morgan of the Tennessee Valley Authority; the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., and Miss Annie Morton Stout of the Provincial Educational Staff; Dr. B. F. Finney, Vice Chancellor, and Dean Charles L. Wells, Dean of Theology, of the faculty of the University of the South; Miss Winifred Kirkland of Sewanee; Dean Raimundo deOvies of Atlanta; Miss Juliet Allein of Memphis; the Rev. Alfred Loaring Clark of Memphis, Tennessee Chairman of Religious Education; Mr. Leon C. Palmer, National Secretary for the Brotherhood of St. Andrew; Miss Isabel Shoop of Birmingham, Ala.; Miss Alma S. Hammond of New Orleans; Miss Lida Holt of Spring Hill, Ala.

The Director of the Young People's Division was the Rev. Alfred Loaring Clark of Memphis, with the Rev. Capers Satterlee of Birmingham, Ala., as Assistant Director. Other members of the faculty and staff were Miss Alice Gregg of Anking, China, Dean Raimundo deOvies of Atlanta, the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., and Miss Annie Morton Stout of the Provincial Educational Staff, the Rev. J. Hodge Alves of Spring Hill, Ala., Mrs. John O. Gill of Mobile, Ala., and Miss Ruth Loaring Clark of Memphis, Tenn., and Mrs. Forrest McGinley of Memphis, Tenn.

The dates were as follows:

Clergy School, July 30-August 9.

Adult Division, July 30-August 13.

Young People's Division, August 13 to August 27.

IN CONNECTION with the Sewanee Summer Training School with its three divisions, there were held a number of other meetings and gatherings, as follows:

The Sewanee Conference on Religious Education, July 29-30, of which the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., was Director.

The first meeting of the Board of Diocesan Chairmen and Directors of Religious Education of the Province of Sewanee, of which the Rev. John Long Jackson, of Charlotte, N. C., was Chairman.

The Woman's Auxiliary Rally, directed by Mrs. Fred Ramsey, President of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Tennessee.

The Daughters of the King gathering, directed by Mrs. W. J. Loaring Clark, National President of the Order.

The Laymen's Conference, directed by Judge Arthur Crownover, of Nashville, Tenn.

The Annual Convention of the Young People's Service League of the Province of Sewanee, presided over by Mr. Joseph Faulk of Columbia, S. C., Provincial President.

The Sewanee Exhibition, maintained during the whole session of the School, directed by Miss Annie Morton Stout, of the Provincial Educational Staff.

Among the projects coming under consideration in this years' session were the following:

The New Educational Program for the Province of Sewanee. This was in part worked out in the meeting of the Board of Diocesan Chairmen and Directors of Religious Education. It will be completed in time for presentation to the Synod in October.

The Sewanee Institute on Current Problems. This is planned for the summer of 1937, and will be conducted by the University of the South.

The Young People's Leadership Training Curriculum. This new extension of the Leadership Training plan to those not sufficiently advanced for the N. A. L. A. courses and credits has been undertaken by this Province some years ago, and is rapidly developing along lines parallel to the N. A. L. A.

Correspondence Courses in Religious Education. The Province of Sewanee is working out this project with the approval of the National Department of Religious Education. The courses given are those of the N. A. L. A. Curriculum of Leadership Training, and the courses are given through correspondence by the members of the Provincial Educational Staff, Dr. Tucker, Dr. Starr and Miss Stout.

Christian Living Series. This newest series of teaching material for Church Schools, utilizing the best modern educational methods and yet adaptable to all types of Church Schools, was presented and explained by its authors, Mr. and Mrs. Leon C. Palmer of Philadelphia.

Programs for the Young People's Service League. The Executive Council of the Young People's Service League of the Province of Sewanee, under energetic direction of the new President, Mr. Gordon Tucker of Miami, Fla., assembled and produced a series of programs for meetings of the parish leagues for the first half-year. They will be distributed in the near future, at the expense of the Provincial League, to all the parish leagues of the Province of Sewanee.

Cooperation of the Sewanee Movement with the Forward Movement. This was the subject of the dramatic program, "Mother Mountain and her Southland," presented during the Adult Division, which vividly set forth the good results to follow from the unification of the two movements, complementary to each other, and each necessary to the life and progress of the Church.

The Sewanee Summer Training School is under the joint direction of the Educational Department of the Province of Sewanee and the University of the South. It is the official Summer School of the Province, and is an extension of the University's educational service to those active in the Church's work.

For the session of 1936 the following leaders have been selected, and have accepted their several offices:

President of the Board of Managers, the Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D.

Director of the Clergy School, the Rt. Rev. J. C. Morris, D. D.

Director of the Adult Division, the Rev. Moultrie Guerry.

Director of the Young People's Division, the Rev. Alfred Loaring Clark.

Chairman of Program Committee, the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D.

Director of the Sewanee Exhibition, Miss Annie Morton Stout.

Four Hundred Years of the Printed English Bible

Myles Coverdale and the First Printed English Bible

By EZRA SQUIER TIPPLE.

President Emeritus, Drew University.

THE ENGLISH BIBLE has a distinction all its own. The familiar judgment of Macaulay, "The English Bible—a book which, if everything else in our language should perish, would alone suffice to show the whole extent of its beauty and power," is so well known as almost to make necessary an apology for repeating it. Yet, as this year brings the four hundredth anniversary of the first complete printed English Bible, it will help to remind us of our precious heritage, and the man whose name it bears—Myles Coverdale. And who was this Myles Coverdale?

It is probable that his surname was taken from the district where he was born, Cover-dale, in what is called Richmondshire in the North Riding. The exact date of his birth is uncertain. It is now given as "about 1488," though it may have been somewhere near 1485. He died in 1568-9, having come to a goodly age, well beyond four score years, much admired, and followed by all the Puritans.

From his childhood he was a student, given to learning, eager, diligent, having a sturdy purpose and a tenacious memory. He studied philosophy and theology at Cambridge, had an ever-growing circle of acquaintances, such as Sir Thomas More, Erasmus, and Thomas Cromwell, who was long his influential friend.

Some time after Coverdale entered the convent of Austin friars at Cambridge the famous Robert Barnes became its prior. When the latter was later arrested on a charge of heresy, Coverdale went with him to London to assist him in drawing up his defense. Later, leaving the convent, he assumed the habit of a secular priest and began at once to preach against confession and the veneration of images. The intimate facts concerning the life of Coverdale are rather obscure. An undated letter to Thomas Cromwell, prior at least to 1527, gives a hint of his religious inclinations and perhaps of his activities. In this letter he writes that "I begyne to taste of Holy Schryptures." It is impossible to account for his movements between 1528 and 1535; but it is more than probable that most of the time was spent abroad. It has been aserted that, in 1529, he was at Hamburg, assisting Tyndale in his translation of the Pentateuch; but the evidence is of doubtful value.

He was writing, however, or translating in these silent years; for, in 1534, he brought out two books, both translations, "Ye Olde God and the Newe" and "Paraphrase upon the Psalms." Beyond question he had begun the work of translating the Scriptures into English, which came to a glorious consummation in 1535 in the first complete printed English Bible.

IN THE HISTORY of the English Bible there are two outstanding names, William Tyndale and Myles Coverdale. While this article has to do primarily with the latter, the former has so large a place in the story of the English Bible that his name commands reverence, inasmuch as his was the first printed New Testament. Appearing in 1525, it was so eagrly sought after that people went about saying that "the conscience of England has found a new King."

Coverdale, undoubtedly, owed much to Tyndale, building in large measure upon what had already been done by his predecessor. But he had genius and ability all his own. Nearly half a century ago, H. W. Hoare, an English writer, made this striking comparison between Coverdale and Tyndale: "If the latter be the Hercules among our Biblical laborers, the former is certainly the Orpheus. Diffident and retiring in disposition, of delicate susceptibility, literary dexterity and resource, with a wonderful ear for cadence and rhythm, it is to Coverdale we owe much of the beautiful music which seems to well up out of the perennial springs of our Authorized Version. 'Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy Holy Spirit from me'; 'Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands. They shall perish, but thou shalt endure: they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed: but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail.' Where can we find anything more perfect, unless it be in passages scattered up and down in our Prayer Book version of the Psalms, which is almost wholly, or in the Isaiah of our Bibles, which is very largely, from the hand of this beautiful translator? But, though contrasted with Tyndale in the main features of his character, he is also his indispensable literary complement standing in relation to him as gentleness does to strength, pliability and grace to robustness and vigor, modesty to self-confidence."

To the study of the English Scriptures he gave practically his entire life. He wrote or translated numerous tracts and books, some twenty-six in all; but his chief distinction is that the first complete Bible printed in English bears his name. It is this achievement which the present year commemorates. It may be, as is often said, that his translation as a work of scholarship does not rank with that of some other translators; but he accomplished what no other person prior to 1535 had done. He translated and published a Bible in the English language. The publisher and place of printing of the 1535 Bible have always been a mystery. These facts are not of primary importance. Coverdale was the inspiring genius of the enterprise. The place may have been Zurich, Frankfort, Cologne, or Paris, what matters it? The work of translation was probably done at Antwerp, and the volume was probably printed on the press of Froschover in Zurich. In the version there is no definite mention of the original Hebrew and Greek texts. Coverdale was not without some knowledge of both these languages, but was much less well-equipped in this respect than Tyndale as Coverdale modestly acknowledges. He knew German and Latin extremely well, and a little French. The five "interpreters," which he said that he used, are thought to have been the Vulgate, the Latin version of Pagninus, part of Luther's translation, the Zurich version, and Tyndale's Pentateuch and New Testament. His knowledge and ability seems to have been unquestioned. He was employed by Thomas Cromwell to assist in the Great Bible in 1539, which was ordered to be placed in all English churches. The text of this is largely that of the Bible of John Rogers, bought out in 1537 under the name of Thomas Matthew, of which the Old Testament from Ezra to Malachi and the Apocrypha were substantially Coverdale's own. The New

Self-Preservation

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,

Bishop of Washington.

AN INCIDENT occurred in the early ministry of Jesus that, however we may interpret it, has a deep significance. We read in the fourth Chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel that, immediately following His Baptism and preceding His entrance upon His larger ministry, He was "led up of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted." The purpose of this long-continued vigil was in the nature of preparation for the great task that presently He was to undertake.

The practice of long periods of detachment for the purpose of uninterrupted reflection, has been common to many men who have assumed the role of leadership. It is in the silences and away from the distractions of the world that genius is fanned into a flame and the clearly defined purpose of a great mission becomes evident.

In the experience of the Master, we read that, "when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungered." Physically depleted, the most immediate avenue of approach to Him was through His unsatisfied appetite, hence it was that the tempter touched Him where He was most vulnerable, saying, "If thou be the son of God, commend that these stones be made bread." It was an appeal to Him to exercise His miraculous power in behalf of His own obvious needs. This power, He doubtless had, for, on another occasion, to meet the hunger of a multitude, He multiplied a few barley loaves, making them sufficient to feed five thousand. In answer to the tempter's demand, He quoted from the ancient Scriptures, the words: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

The whole condition with which Jesus was confronted,, is suggestive of one of life's major problems. Self-preservation, the maintenance of our physical well-being is primary and indispensable. The bread problem is universal and persistent. A bread problem ushered in the French Revolution, and in some form it has been the genesis of most of the world's disorders. As a matter of fact, it is one of the fundamental problems of our own age. To preserve the physical well-being of a people is a primary obligation upon every government. Jesus did not challenge this. He did maintain that, greater than the bread problem was the normal satisfaction of man's moral and spiritual nature. To insure subsistence, this He always recognized and gave it its proper place throughout His ministry. Over against this physical demand, He set another principle of life when He said: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." He was maintaining that, normal, wholesome living called for and demanded the recognition of God's place in the scheme of things, the recognition of the moral law as indispensable to orderly, decent and satisfying living. To "move humanity to a cleaner stye," is both consistent and necessary, but if the "cleaner stye" is to be properly maintained, it must be sustained by something other than that form of selfish individualism that obeys neither the laws of God or of man. At the root of our present disordered life is the moral and spiritual decline and decay of a people. We have thought that, with our "mighty wisdom or little wit," we could set our house in order. We would, through our incomparable genius and our clever legislation recover the normal, prosperous ways of living. We are beginning to realize the significance and profound meaning of the words of the tempted Master that, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

We have a bread problem and it is a pressing one, and it must be met, but along with it and vitally related to it we have a moral and spiritual problem that concerns the deepest interests of our people.

FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF THE FIRST PRINTED ENGLISH BIBLE.

Testament and the first part of the Old Testament were very clearly Tyndale's.

In 1558, Coverdale may have had a share in the preparation of the Geneva version of the Scriptures, but the evidence is not conclusive. In the remainder of his life he was actively concerned in the wider circulation of the Bible.

MILES COVERDALE was one of the leading figures during the progress of the reformed opinions in England and on the Continent. By his marriage which naturally was regarded as a protest against the doctrines of celibacy of the priesthood, he became identified completely with the reforming party. He was appointed bishop of Exeter in 1551, and the vigorous Protestantism of Western England in the reign of Elizabeth was undoubtedly greatly aided by his powerful preaching and influence. On Mary's accession to the throne, 1553, he was deprived of his bishopric and ordered to London, though later he was permitted to leave for Denmark.

In 1554 he signed a remarkable confession of faith in conjunction with other Protestant bishops and martyrs imprisoned in London. Following the signature of the others, is annexed the following notable declaration: "To these things above said do I, Myles Coverdale, late bishop of Exeter, consent and agree with these, mine afflicted brethren, being prisoners. Mine own hand, M. C."

This man, modest, conscientious, laborious, a thoroughly honest and good man, who had a considerable share in the introduction of German spiritual culture to English readers in the second quarter of the sixteenth century, a consistently Protestant reformer, the Church of the present day does well to honor, both for the first Bible printed in English and for many of the most cherished phrasings of beautiful and tender passages of the Scriptures.

In Christ there is no East or West,
In Him no South or North;
But one great fellowship of love
Throughout the whole wide earth.

In Him shall true hearts everywhere
Their high communion find;
His service is the golden cord
Close-binding all mankind.

Join hands, then, brothers of the faith,
Whate'er your race may be;
Who serves my Father as a son
Is surely kin to me.

In Chirst now meet both East and West,
In Him meet South and North;
All Christly souls are one in Him
Throughout the whole wide earth.

We would like to take this opportunity to urge those subscribers who have not paid their subscriptions to do so by return mail. The Southern Churchman is making a valiant fight and it is a great drain on our treasury to have to send out some thousands of bills each month for past due accounts. The bills are small, but in the aggregate they amount to a large sum, which we need to carry on the work. We shall appreciate tremendously your cooperation.

As much as we dislike to take this step, from now on we shall be forced to cancel subscriptions on which payments have been overdue for three months.

ERECTION OF HOSPITAL DELAYED BECAUSE OF CLOSING OF BANKS.

More Than a Half Million Dollars on Deposit. Financial Stringency Not Considered Serious.

Shanghai, China.—Erection of a new building for the combined St. Luke's and St. Eilzabeth's Hospital has been delayed on account of financial stringency resulting from the flow of silver out of China that led to the closing of banking institutions in Shanghai where the hospital funds were on deposit.

The present buildings of the two hospitals being worn out and inadequate to meet present needs, plans have been completed for a new combined institution. Bishop Graves and the medical staff have purchased a new site in a favorable location.

The necessary funds for the erection of the new plant, including hospital, nurses' home, and other buildings, have been accumulating in China for several years, totaling today approximately $548,000 Chinese currency, and are held on fixed deposit in Shanghai by financial institutions of the Raven group under American management.

The banks believe that the depositors will be paid in full, but pending adjustments, all steps for the erection of the proposed joint hospital must be postponed.

Meanwhile, architectural plans are being completed and studied by architects in China and America who are experts in hospital planning, so that there will be no further delay when the funds are released.

PUERTO RICO NURSE BRINGS JOY AND HEALTH TO MANY SUFFERERS.

Barahona, Puerto Rico.—The Rev. Ramon Quinones, priest in charge of the mission in this rural community, has under his direction a dispensary for the care of the sick and suffering who are out of reach of the Government employed physicians and nurses.

The dispensary building is a temporary structure erected in 1929 out of discarded lumber, when the old St. Catherine's Training School was torn down. The structure cannot last much longer, and should be replaced immediately by a concrete building.

Despite the handicap of cramped quarters and inadequate equipment, during the past three years, the nurse at Barahona has brought joy and happiness to many hundreds of people who otherwise would have been doomed to suffering and probable death.

In 1932 at a total cost of $45, the nurse gave 140 injections, chiefly for malaria and tetanus, did 777 dressings, attended 262 cases at the dispensary and in homes, and made 300 parochial visits. In 1933 at a cost of $68 she did more than 700 injections, treated 1,400 cases in which stitches were taken, and did 1,160 dressings. In 1934 she cared for more than 1,600 cases.

Bishop Colmore, commenting on the work, says: "It is difficult to imagine what the dispensary means to such an isolated country area."

Churchmen in Taft, California, lacking the necessary means to build a new church, have erected a worthy building by their own labor.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

THE SANCTUARY.

Prayer for China.

Almighty God, whose wisdom has enlightened and whose will has ruled Thy Church, grant to the Bishops and to all other leaders and missionaries, especially in China, the guidance of Thy Holy Spirit, that in all things they may seek the welfare of Thy Kingdom and the glory of Thy Name, and that we may be partners with them in the preaching of Thy Gospel, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

BISHOP BENTLEY TRAVELS TWO THOUSAND FOUR HUNDRED MILES.

Thirty-three Baptisms and Eleven Confirmations. Many Services Held in Out of the Way Places.

Nenana, Alaska.—The Rt. Rev. J. B. Bentley, accompanied by Mrs. Bentley, returned to Nenana September 1, from a month's trip. During the summer the little "Discovery," renamed the "Depression" by Dr. Burke, traveled 2,400 miles. About the same distance had been traveled by steamer. There had been in August 33 baptisms and 11 confirmations, and many services held in out of the way places.

Stops were made at Eagle, Fort Yukon, Circle, Beaver, Steven's Village, Rampart, Tanana, Hot Springs, Tolovana, and many other smaller communities and fishing villages along the way.

The Bishop reports that the epidemic of measles which caused so much sickness at Eagle, Fort Yukon, and Circle is about over, and that people are able to return to their fishing.

The Diocesan treasurer has received from the little mission at Allakaket, in charge of the Misses Hill and Kay, $92 for the first half of the year to be applied on the 1935 quota. A total of $2,433.58 for missions had been received from the Alaskan churches at the end of July. The smallest amount, $3.85, came from St. Luke's, Douglas Island, and the largest amount, $600, was given by St. Matthew's, at Fairbanks.

NEWS FROM THE FRONT WANTED.

The Southern Churchman, believing that missions constitute the life of the Church, hereby invites the missionaries of our Church to write articles to this paper describing the work they are doing in an interesting way, so that our people may know more of what is going on in the mission field. WEST INDIAN CHURCH HAS SEVENTY-FIVE HUNDRED MEMBERS

Late Comers Unable to Find Seats at Main Services. Rector Has Many Duties Outside Parish.

Panama City, Panama.—The Rev. Arthur F. Nightengale, rector of St. Paul's Church, very much needs a larger church, according to a report of a recent Sunday night vistor to his service.

This West Indian congregation now consists of 7,500 baptized members, and with a church of only 1,000 seating capacity, every service is crowded to overflowing.

"Late comers stand outside its doors and windows. At the main services on Sunday the crowd reaches out into the street in front and down the side streets.

"The rector leads a busy life. His Sunday schedule is as follows: Holy Communion, 5:30; Holy Communion at 8:30 at a mission six miles away; Morning Prayer or Holy Communion and sermon at 10:30 at St. Paul's; Sunday School at 3:30; service out of town at another mission at 5; Evening Prayer and sermon at St. Paul's at 7:30.

"They have a large vested choir, a splendid Woman's Auxiliary, and a St. Agnes' Guild for the younger women and girls.

"In addition to his many parochial and other mission duties, Mr. Nightengale also ministers to the lepers at Palo Seco, a short distance out from the Pacific entrance to the Canal.

"When in Panama City be sure to visit St. Paul's."

RT. REV. PAUL SHINJI SASAKI ASSUMES DUTIES IN MID-JAPAN.

Nagoya, Japan.—The Rt. Rev. Paul Shinji Sasaki, Bishop of the Diocese of Mid-Japan, consecrated on St. James' Day, July 25, has taken charge of his duties with his accustomed energy.

The new Bishop, educated in mission schools in Japan, and in Oxford and Cambridge, has under his care twenty-seven established parishes, a foreign staff including six clergy, one layman, and thirteen women workers; a Japanese staff of nineteen clergy, five catechists, and seven women workers; twelve Church schools, and one hospital for tubercular patients. Included in the Diocese of Mid-Japan is the Karuizawa Church used by both Japanese and English-speaking Churchmen.

A friend long resident in Japan writes of him. "He is a devout saint, a wonderful pastor, and a very telling preacher. They loved him while he was a student in Oxford."

For many years he was a professor at St. Paul's University, Tokyo, rector of Meijiro Church, head of the department of religious education, and university chaplain.

The Canadian Church will continue to support the missionary work of the Diocese, which includes several prefectures stretching through the central part of the Empire from the Pacific Ocean on the east to the Japan Sea on the west.

Beds and mattresses from the closed school at Anvik, Alaska, have been sent to Fort Yukon, where they will be used in the hospital during times of epidemic when the wards are filled to overflowing.

ORDER OF THE HOLY CROSS

To many of us the idea of monks and nuns means the Roman Catholic Church. So it comes as quite a surprise that in our Protestant Episcopal Church we have several orders of monks and of nuns. To one of these our program this evening is devoted. It is the Order of the Holy Cross, or, as it is familiarly known, the O. H. C.

Vow: Poverty, Chastity and Obedience.

Its members take the threefold vow of Poverty, Chastity and Obedience. Poverty means that they will own no property except a small wooden cross. This each one wears about his neck at all times. All else must be given away, either to relatives or friends, or the Order. Chastity means that the members will never marry, or have the cares of a family. Obedience means that the members will obey absolutely the orders of their superiors in the Order, even if it means going to the end of the earth at a moment's notice.

In 1881, in the slums of New York, the order had its birth when three clergymen decided that they could best do their work of ministering to the poor if they became poor themselves, and took the Order vows as given above. They took the name from the Mission Church of the Holy Cross, Avenue C and Seventh Street. They dressed as the monks of old and went everywhere in the slums doing their good work for eight years They then moved to a place where they could have more time for prayer. The Order grew and now has several centers from which it works. Its headquarters, however, are at West Park, New York.

Each morning at five o'clock a monk goes through the monastery tapping at each door and saying, "Let us bless the Lord." As soon as the sleeper awakes he says, "Thanks be to God," and the monk passes to the next door. If you are a visitor you must obey the rules of the monastery while within its walls. At 5:30 the monks are all in chapel for two services. These together last about a half hour. At 6 A. M. they have the Holy Communion.

At seven they go to breakfast. Silence is observed at meals except at dinner on Sundays and the great feasts. They have a reader who reads some devotional book while the eating is going on. After breakfast you go back to your room and clean up. At about eight o'clock another service is held for about a half hour. At 8:30 all assemble in the office of the Superiors where the work is mapped out for the day. At nine all talking stops as they go to work.

There is much to be done. They have a farm with its multiplicity of duties, to be done by some. House cleaning provides work for others, and study is given to others. At noon there is another service, and at 12:30 dinner. There is then a recreational hour in the Community room. At two there is another service, after which they work until 5:30. At 6:30 comes supper. At 8:30 another service and bed at 10. They have thus eight services during the day.

This kind of a life probably would not appeal to some of us. But there are a number of people who feel that they can best serve God in this way. If so should they not be allowed to do so in our Church? Some people who do not care for this type of life say that people jump into such a life without knowing what it is. But a man must be about twenty-four years old, and have served in the community at least two and one-half years before he is allowed to take the vows.

Preaching, Teaching and Missionary Work.

Some thing that when people do so much praying they would have no time for anything else. But this is not the case. The O. H. C. does three kinds of work and does them all well. They are Preaching, Teaching and Missionary Work. Their preaching is of two kinds. The first is in ordinary parishes, where they, on the invitation of the rector, preach "Missions."

A number of years ago a group who were attending the Sewanee Summer Training School was addressed by one of the Fathers. The topic was, "Preaching a Mission to Children." There was so much happiness and pleasure and real hearty laughter in the address that all came away from it wondering why we had not found more such happiness in our own personal Christianity.

Another work that they do is Rescue Work, helping the down and out in our larger centers. This, we remember, was the original work they started out to do, and which they have never stopped doing.

They also conduct schools which they have founded in this country and in the foreign field. One of these is St. Andrew's in Tennessee, near Sewanee. It is for mountain boys. They come from miles around to this school and much good is done. St. Andrew's is within easy walking distance from Sewanee and most people who attend the Summer Conferences there visit it. It is most interesting. Another is in Kent, Connecticut, where an equally fine work is being done with a very different type of boy.

The third type of work that they do is that in the foreign mission field. We remember that much of the missionary work of the early Church was done by monks, like St. Augustine or St. Aidan; so it seemed to the Holy Cross Fathers that they could probably do fine work today. They picked out Liberia, that little toe-hold that the Church has in Africa. Though we had been in Liberia for about a hundred years, we were still hugging the coast. But the Fathers decided to go far inland, so they struck out for what they called the "hinterland," two hundred miles, or more, from the Ocean. No white man had ever been in this particular section.

Father Campbell.

One of the Fathers that went to this isolated spot was Father Campbell. Some years ago a great man made the remark that if any man could make a mousetrap better than his neighbor that the world would make a beaten path to his door. It seemed that the man who had given up home, property and even his will in the vows of Chastity, Poverty and Obedience, and had then gone to one of the most savage spots on earth, would be gone from the world never to be heard of any more. But Robert Erskine Campbell was the man whom Mother Church had to have for greater work. For, when Bishop Overs resigned the Bishopric of Liberia, Father Campbell was called from Bolahum to take his place. Such a thing was unexpected by the Order, and they had to release him from his obligations to the Order. But they did this and he has been making a great success as Bishop now for the past ten years.

The Bolahum Mission is in the Gbande country. There they maintain a school for boys, where sixty boys are cared for. They also maintain the Holy Cross Hospital there. The Monks are unable to care for a girls' school, but feeling the need for such an institution they have gotten the Sisterhood of the Holy Name, from Malvern Link, England, to be associated with them and to run a school there. Twenty girls are being cared for in it.

Father Hughson, the Superior of the Order, writes:

"I have just come back from West Africa, and I have been profoundly moved by what I saw there. The Order of the Holy Cross established its Missions in the hinterland of Liberia twelve years ago amongst a people who had never so much as heard the Name of Our Lord. Today with a staff of four Fathers, five Sisters and native evangelists, we are manning no less than eighteen towns amongst the three nations to whom the Bishop has sent us.

"In these towns, which are visited every fortnight, we have 800 adults under formal instruction for baptism. The task of teaching so vast a number is appalling. It means that we must increase our staff unless we deliberately decide that we must tell those who come, asking to be made Christians, that we can do nothing for them—a contingency we are unwilling for a moment to contemplate."

The Order is supported entirely by voluntary contributions, and is not included in the Program of the Church. In order to keep its friends informed of its work it publishes three magazines, the Holy Cross Magazine, the St. Andrew's Messenger and The Liberian Hinterland. The Order is growing slowly but it is doing a great work.

On Sharing.

If nobody smiled and nobody cheered,
And nobody helped us along,
If each every minute looked after himself,
And the good things all went to the strong;
If nobody cared just a little for you,
And nobody thought about me,
And we all stood alone to the battle of life
What a dreary old place this would be.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

Yeocomico Church.
Westmoreland County, Virginia.

YEOCOMICO CHURCH WILL HAVE THE R. E. LEE MEMORIAL SERVICE.

Sunday morning, October 13, at eleven o'clock, the Robert E. Lee Memorial Service will be held in Yeocomico Church at Tucker Hill. The Rev. W. A. R. Goodwin, D. D., rector of Bruton Parish, Williamsburg, Va., and "father of the restoration of the old capital," will be the speaker.

Not only will the directors of the Lee Memorial Foundation of Stratford, attend, but many visitors will be at the dedication.

Yeocomico Church is not only most historic in itself, but has more historical connections with other eastern settlements and colonies than probably any other shrine in the Northern Neck of Virginia. The church is closely connected with both Wakefield and Stratford.

DR. SUTTON DECLINES ELECTION AS BISHOP OF VERMONT.

Statement of the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton, Vicar of Trinity Chapel, Trinity Parish, New York, on his declination of his election as Bishop of Vermont, Sunday, October 5:

You will be expecting this morning some statement as to my decision with regard to my election as Bishop of Vermont. The announcement has been delayed longer than I could have wished, and the period pending the announcement has been difficult for Vermont, for you and for me. I do not, however, see how the delay could have been rightly avoided. When the election came, I was in the interior of Mexico. I knew very little about the Diocese of Vermont, and it was out of the question that I should make a decision on so weighty a matter without as full information as I could obtain. When I returned to New York some of those whom I felt it my duty to consult were not only out of the city, but so scattered that I could not go to them. It was necessary, therefore, for me to wait for their return. It was not until the middle of last week that my final interview was held. For the delay I am exceedingly sorry, but I am sure that you have understood it.

I have given the matter very careful and very prayerful thought. A call to the Episcopate demands the most serious consideration. Especially is this true when the call comes as my call to Vermont came without any intimation that my name was to be proposed. To treat such a call lightly would be, as it seems to me, an act of irreverence. As is usually the case in such matters there have been many considerations for and many considerations against my going. Sacrifices were inevitable, no matter what I decided to do, but from the beginning I have tried very earnestly to put aside any personal preferences I might have. This is never an easy thing to do and one can seldom be absolutely sure that he has succeeded in doing it. I can only say again that I have tried. I have gone over the matter very carefully with the rector and no one could have been more kind nor more helpful. The decision of necessity lay with me, but since it has been made he has asked me to say that he feels it is the right one. In the light of the fullest information and the wisest advice, I have been able to obtain, I have decided to decline the call to Vermont and to remain here. I need not say that to sever the ties which bind me to this congregation, and which have grown stronger with the years, would have been deeply painful and I am glad to be spared this pain. I am most grateful for your expressions of love and loyalty, and knowing you as I do I know that they are genuine. I pray that our work together in the future may be abundantly blessed and that God may make us all more worthy of the trust which He has reposed in us, and more adequate for the task which He has committed to us.

Dr. Fleming's Statement.

Statement of the Rev. Frederic S. Fleming, D. D., rector of Trinity Parish, regarding Dr. Sutton's declination of the election as Bishop of Vermont:

"I recognize how conscientiously Dr. Sutton has faced this whole question and I rejoice that his decision means his continuance in Trinity Parish."

TO THE CHURCH.
Letter sent to the Clergy from The National Council.

The Church's life since General Convention, has been marked by an increase in interest and support. It is plain that the faith and spirit of the Church are responding to the program of inspiration and education inaugurated by the Commission on the Forward Movement.

The reports submitted to the Council indicate that as yet the improvement has not proceeded far enough to provide for the degree of restoration in parochial, diocesan and general Church work which the General Convention set as a goal for this Triennium.

It was clearly the intention of General Convention that the Church should regard the $2,700,000 Annual Budget as the base for a program of restoration; similarly that it should regard the Emergency Schedule of $2,313,118 as a "stand still" program, and anything less as a Budget of disaster.

Even the minimum program called for an increase of 25 per cent over the actual contributions from the dioceses for the Church's general work in 1934. Some dioceses reached or exceeded this mark, yet the sum of the expectations eventually reported an advance of only nine per cent. Happily the amount needed to insure the advance of 25 per cent was secured from individual gifts. Thus the "stand still" program was anchored, and the payments on Expectations to September 1 would indicate that there will be no deficit in the administration of the General Church Program in 1935.

The Council has given preliminary consideration to the Operating Budget for 1936. The officers of the Council have complied with the instructions of General Convention to secure from each diocese the acceptance of an objective for 1936 based upon shown capacity to pay and a willingness to accept a generous share of $2,700,000.

The results of this inquiry are frankly disappointing, if not discouraging. In spite of the improvement in the spirit and faith of the Church and in spite of the fact that the present year has brought a marked recovery in general conditions throughout the United States which is signalized by increased spending in all directions, the sum of the Objectives which the dioceses have been willing to accept is still below the amount needed to provide for the "stand still" program.

We are confident that the results of the Annual Canvass will exceed the amounts represented by the Objectives tentatively assumed and that the Church can and will by its gifts for missions in 1936, advance toward the goal of restoration. However the Council feels that the Church should know that the estimated sum to be realized from these Objectives is at present $200,000 less than the amount needed to continue the present Operating Budget and $600,000 less than the amount needed to provide for the $2,700,000 Budget of Restoration.

The Council proposes to each diocese and parish as the guide for its corporate effort and to every Church member as the rule of his personal endeavor this threefold program:

1. In terms of Christian discipleship. The adoption and the realization of the aims of the Forward Movement; recognizing that at the bottom of all the weakness in our organized Christianity is the feebleness of our apprehension of Christ the Saviour and the limitations of our acceptance of the demands He makes upon us.

2. In terms of Christian Stewardship. The application and the prosecution of the annual Every Member Canvass, not as a mere financial campaign but as an annual event in a sustained program of education in Christian living and Christian missions.

3. In terms of Christian Partnership. A resolution to share whatever increase of life and wealth the new day brings. The sincere practice of this simple rule by individuals, parishes and dioceses would work a miracle for us and do as much as anything to banish all necessity for quotas and apportionments and lead us into the joy and satisfaction of a great partnership of recovery.

The National Council.

MORE PROGRESS.

As we approach the last quarter of the year the payments on Expectations are very encouraging. Not only do the payments exceed those of last year in the number of dollars remitted, but the total of the payments represents a higher percentage of the Expectations.

The increase is all the more remarkable when we remember that under the new plan of self apportionment the dioceses and districts pledged themselves to the payment of $117,000 more than in 1934.

While payments are being maintained on a high basis we are not unmindful of the fact that there remains but three months of this year and in these three months $517,342.26 must be paid as against $769,757.74 remitted during the nine months just passed.

The Diocese of Michigan has the honor of being the first diocese to pay its Expectation in full. This diocese has not only paid the amount due to date, but the remittances exceed the Expectation for the entire year.

James E. Whitney,
Assistant Treasurer.

TO HOLD MISSIONS OF HEALTH AND HEALING.

At the conclusion of a successful summer's work in the Life Abundant Center at Black Mountain, N. C., the Rev. and Mrs. Robert B. H. Bell are leaving for Montgomery, Ala., where they will hold a Mission of Health and Healing at St. John's Episcopal Church, the Rev. Dr. Richard Wilkinson, rector. They will be there daily from October 13-20.

From there they go to St. John's, Birmingham, Ala., the Ven. V. G. Lowery, rector. The mission will be held from October 24 to October 31.

From November 10 to 17, they will be with the Rev. George B. Lackonby, rector of the Church of the Ascension, and beginning November 18-24, they will hold a Mission at Holy Trinity, Hillsdale, N. J., the Rev. Ross Flanagan, rector. From there the Bells will go West on an extended Mission of Health and Healing.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. I. B. Larned, Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Creighton, S. T. D., Suffragan.

Annual Clergy Conference.

The annual Clergy Conference of the diocese was held in Southampton September 30 to October 2. The opening service and the corporate communions were held in St. John's Church; the conference sessions in the Parrish Art Museum. Bishop Stires' opening address was from the text, "Thy Kingdom come". It was a searching study of the Church's objective. This seemed to supply a basic theme for the whole conference, culminating in the Bishop's final address, when he emphasized in detail certain aspects of our present problem.

The President's Letter.

On Tuesday the diocesan department of Christian Social Service presented its program. The Rev. Dr. Melish, acting for the Rev. Mr. Titus, chairman, who was ill, read a letter to the President of the United States in reply to the letter which the President lately addressed individually to the clergy of the country. It was proposed to make the suggested reply in the name of the bishops and clergy of this diocese collectively. There was some discussion of the proposal, with the result that the letter was submitted to be signed by all who wished, to be sent to the President in the name of the signers and not in the name of the conference of the diocese. The vote seemed to indicate that a good majority of those present were anxious to sign the letter as it was read.

Resolution Against Gambling.

Reference to the movement to legalize lotteries brought up a resolution against gambling at church fairs, and the following was adopted:

Whereas, gambling has become so general in practice and so harmful in result that it constitutes a grave economic and moral danger; and

Whereas, the State of New York has definitely forbidden by law the practice of all games of chance and the use of all gambling devices even for charitable purposes; and

Whereas, it is the duty of the Christian Church to obey the civil law and to set a wholesome example of Christian morality in all things; therefore, be it

Resolved, that the clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Long Island, assembled in Southampton this first day of October, 1935, do hereby disapprove the use of all games of chance and other gambling devices in church bazaars and entertainments; and we do solemnly promise strictly and conscientiously to obey the State laws and to set a wholesome example of Christian morality to the young people of our land.

Resolution Regarding Rev. L. Bradford Young.

The recent trip of the Rev. L. Bradford Young to San Francisco, in connection with his call to be rector of Trinity Church in that city, and his decision to relinquish it and return to Brooklyn, also brought out a resolution:

The clergy of the Diocese of Long Island, in conference assembled at Southampton, October 1, 1935, welcome home from San Francisco their friend and colleague, the Rev. Lorin Bradford Young. His decision and courtesy express our ideal of the Christian ministry which valiance for truth and sincerity of purpose must always command.

Stirring Addresses from Two Conspicuous Leaders.

First, the Rev. Leslie Glenn, of Cambridge, Mass., spoke of Youth and the Church. His specific theme was religious work among college students. He stressed two serious difficulties—first, the indifference of college administrators to the religious state of the students; second, the inadequacy of the resources at the command of student pastors. He thought the church schools of our parishes and the church boarding schools of the country were, on the whole, doing a good job; but there was a tremendous loss in the spiritual life of our young people in the colleges. He plead most effectively for better support of the college pastors now successfully at work in a number of important centers, and for the spread of such work into many other necessary places. The second address was by Bishop Hobson, of Southern Ohio, chairman of the Commission on the Forward Movement. He said the question really is, Shall we have part in God's eternal forward movement? The calling of disciples did not stop in Galilee; Christ is still calling disciples—calling us. Does He ask us to join Him in standing still? Does he ask us to join Him in retreat? Forward movement is characteristic of God, and must be characteristic of Christ's disciples.

Bishop Stires' Closing Address.

On Wednesday morning, after the Eucharist and breakfast, the conference assembled for the final session. Bishop Stires' closing address emphasized three points in particular. The first was the great importance of thorough training of candidates for confirmation. He valued quality far above quantity in the candidates presented. Secondly, he dwelt upon the necessity of putting people, especially young people, to work at definite tasks in the Church; and lastly, he spoke of the romantic appeal that could easily be connected with the "red side of the envelope", the appeal for whole-hearted and thoroughly informed enthusiasm for the mission of the Church. In this final word he brought us back to his basic theme—the petition in the Lord's Prayer, "Thy Kingdom come".

Rt Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop

Objective 12 Per Cent Increase Over Last Year.

The Every-Member Canvass for the diocese sets as its objective $70,000, which is 12 per cent increase over last year. Of this amount the diocese requires $28,000 for its work, and, if it is raised, will send $42,000 to the General Church. It is Rhode Island's practice to meet its National Council obligations at least in full.

Anniversaries Celebrated.

St. Philip's Church, Crompton, of which the Rev. Harvey B. Marks is rector, is observing its ninetieth anniversary this month. Last Sunday evening, Bishop Perry, at a service which overflowed the church, congratulated the rector and the parish.

On Sunday, October 20, he will institute the Rev. Donald J. Campbell as a part of the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Church of the Redeemer, Providence.

The Narragansett Junior College.

The Rev. Dudley Tyng, Ph. D., formerly rector of St. Thomas' Church, Providence, and later of St. John's, Barrington, has founded the Narragansett Junior College, Pawtucket, a coeducational institution domiciled in the Y. M. C. A. Besides serving as dean, Dr. Tyng teaches German, Semitics and History of Religion. Two prominent Churchmen of the diocese are on the faculty—the Rev. W. T. Townsend, Ph. D., D. D., who gives courses in History, and Professor T. H. Robinson, of the Rhode Island College of Education, whose subject is History.

The Rev. Albert C. Larned, who succeeded the Rev. Charles D. Burrows, retired, as rector of St. Matthew's Church, Jamestown, R. I., has been instituted by Bishop Perry. From 1923 to 1926 Mr. Larned was rector of St. David's Church, Meshanticut, R. I., and chaplain of the State institutions. In recent months he assisted the Rev. Anthony R. Parshley, rector of St. Michael's Church, Bristol.

Dates of Conferences.

"The Every-Member Canvass and Its Underlying Motives" will be the subjects of conferences with rectors and Canvass chairmen which the Rev. Eric M. Tasman, Field Secretary for the National Council, will hold in the diocese this month. The first will be held at St. George's Church, Newport, on October 14; the second at the Cathedral of St. John, Providence, on October 15: and the third at St. Paul's Church, Wickford, October 16.

Fall Institute for Clergy.

"An Evaluation of Religious Education in the Church Schools" was the theme of the Annual Fall Institute for clergy, teachers and officers of Church schools, and other Church workers held October 6, 7, 8 and 9 in the parish house of the Cathedral, Providence.

Dr. D. A. McGregor, of the Department of Religious Education of the National Council, the only member of the faculty from outside the diocese, gave a course on "Basic Principles of Religious Education".

ROCHESTER.

Rt. Rev. David L. Farris, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Ferris Asks for a Coadjutor Bishop.

The Rt. Rev. David Lincoln Ferris, D. D., Bishop of the diocese, has asked the Standing Committee to grant him the assistance of a Coadjutor. For some years the pressure of the administration of the diocese has been an increasing burden upon the Bishop, and at last the state of his health makes the provision of an assistant imperative.

Bishop Ferris purposes to turn over the administration of the diocese and part of the visitation to the Coadjutor, retaining part of the visitation himself.

It is expected that a special convention will be called before Christmas.

Campaign of Visitation and Publicity. Twenty Different Communions Take Part in Crusade.

Under the leadership of the Rev. William C. Compton, S. T. D., rector of the Church of the Ascension, Rochester, and President of the Rochester Federation of Churches, twenty different communions, over an area of nine counties in Central and Western New York, are cooperating in a Church Loyalty Crusade. The Rev. George Dowey is the Director of the Crusade, which involves a campaign of visitation and publicity, designed to reach effectively the entire membership and constituency of the cooperating churches. The campaign is to run from November 3 to December 15. It is felt that its purposes and methods coincide with the Forward Movement.

Celebrate Anniversary by Decreasing Indebtedness.

St. Mark's and St. John's Church, Rochester, is celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of its founding by a campaign to decrease the indebtedness on the church. The Rev. Frank Fisher, rector, has set the goal at $10,000. The first reports show over $7,000 cash in hand.

The Rev. Alexander C. Zabriskie, S. T. D., is to be the speaker at a great mass meeting and dinner for the men of the Diocese, which will be held in the Masonic Temple, Rochester, Wednesday, October 16.

ARKANSAS

Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Edward T. Demby, D. D., Suffragan Bishop.

Preaching Mission.

A very successful Preaching Mission has been concluded at St. Peter's Mission, Tollville. The Missioner was the Rev. William T. Holt, chairman of the Diocesan Department of Missions. He was assisted by the Rev. Elnathan Tartt, rector of St. Paul's Parish, Batesville. The attendance was splendid and the results of the Mission are evident in many ways, among which is the renewed interest in renovating the building and making the Mission Church more of a community center. The young people organized a Diocesan Branch of the Young People's Service League. An event in the Mission was the attendance of the Methodist Minister of Hazen, Arkansas, who brought a large number of his congregation with him. The significance of this is that the Mission not only aroused the Church people to renewed interest in their Church, but it also was a "good will" tour to make friends for the Church in the community. Other preaching Missions are planned as a part of the Forward Movement.

Candidate for Holy Orders.

September 27 the Rev. Messrs. Witsell, Tartt and Stowell examined for Deacon' Orders Mr. George Merkel of Pine Bluff, who will be ordained when he completes his canonical requirements. Mr. Merkel has been for a number of years the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce in Pine Bluff and is well known throughout the state and diocese.

Bishop Saphore.

The election of Bishop Saphore, Suffragan, to be Diocesan has been confirmed by a majority of Bishops. Confirmations by the Standing Committees are being received as the summer vacation period comes to an end and the diocesan work in the National Church begins.

Diocesan Office.

Dean John Williamson, Chairman of the Forward Movement Committee of the diocese, is finding that it will be necessary for him to establish a Diocesan Office from which he can assist the many activities that are getting under way. Forward Movement Headquarters will be located in the Cathedral building, if possible, so that the clergy and others who may have occasion to visit Little Rock may have a place in which to meet.

Social Service and Public Libraries.

For five years the Rev. William T. Holt of Newport, has been struggling to establish a Free Public Library. He found assistance from the Church Periodical Club and the Free Public Library in Newark, New Jersey, that enabled him to have the Library opened. The Church in his Parish has an admirable Crypt and here he placed the books. The Parish has supplied the place, the heat and the light for the Library. After paying most of the exepnse of maintaining the Library himself, Mr. Holt at last got through a project so that the Librarian might be supplied by the Federal agencies. At present a Project has been filled for the erection of a Library Building and the money necessary has been pledged. The Free Public Library in Newport now has the endorsement of all the civic organizations and is regularly incorporated under the State Laws. It is a member of the State Library Association.

It is suggested that our Social Service Department in the various dioceses might very well interest itself in the establishment of Free Public Libraries, and in assisting those that are established.

NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. Ernest V. Shayler, D. D., Bishop.

"Ask for Bread—Given a Stone."

When the men of the diocese assembled for a dinner at All Saints, Omaha, last Wednesday evening, each man found a stone at his place on the table. It became clear later that the purpose of the stone was to emphasize a pledge taken by every one present to "leave no stone unturned to extend the work of Christ and His Kingdom".

In the unavoidable absence of Bishop Maxon, of Tennessee, Bishop S. Keeler, of Minnesota, gave an effective address. This dinner, sponsored by the Men's Club of the diocese, was a part of a great effort to speed up interest in the "Forward Movement" and to arouse new life in the parishes.

Clergy Confer.

Under the leadership of Bishop Keeler, the clergy met in Trinity Cathedral Parish House Thursday morning. Emphasis on the pastoral work of the ministry was the keynote.

Women Meet.

Two great gatherings of women were held in All Saints', Omaha, and in Lincoln, addressed by Bishop Keeler. Women from almost every parish were present and Bishop Keeler gave inspiring addresses on the great women saints of the past.

Annual Gatherings at Historic Old Churches.

With the coming of the autumn the activities of the diocese have taken on new life. The preparation for the fall campaign is in full swing; arrangements are being made for the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in Richmond the end of October, and various conferences are being held in different parts of the diocese.

The Virinia Chamber of Commerce has chosen for the principle feature of its fall Travelogue the old colonial churches of the State. There are some hundred or more listed in a little booklet which is furnished free to the traveling public. The introduction in the pamphlet was written by the Rev. Dr. G. M. Brydon ,historiographer of the diocese, and is in itself a valuable and concise statement of the conditions which maintained at the end of the colonial period. The old churches are holding their annual "home-coming" days during this month. On September 15 a large crowd gathered at Fork Church, St. Martin's Parish, Hanover county, to celebrate the two hundredth anniversary of the completion of the building. Among the clergymen who took part in the service were Rev. G. McL. Brydon and Rev. Thomas Nelson, of the Seminary, descendants of the founders of the parish. On September 22 a beautiful window was unveiled in St. Paul's Church, Hanover Court House, to the memory of Mrs. Bessie Lee Cardwell, wife of Mr. Patrick Cardwell. For many years she was an active worker in the Woman's Auxiliary, holding a diocesan office for years prior to her death. This window was put in by her friends in Hanover. At the service Bishop Tucker preached and read the prayer of dedication. There were also present most of the diocesan officers of the Auxiliary.

At St. John's Church, King William county, the annual celebration was held September 29, at which service the Rev. Ernest Trice Thompson, D. D., of the Union Theological Seminary, preached at the morning service, and in the afternoon the Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, D. D., addressed the Restoration Association.

On the same day there was an historical annual gathering at Old Lamb's Creek Church in King George county, which was addressed by the Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, D. D., and was attended by a large crowd.

Travel Talks.

The Rev. W. Geiger Irwin, rector of St. Andrew's Church and Schools, having returned recently from a tour of the Cathedral centers and University towns of Great Britain, is preparing to give a series of Travel Talks, illustrated by moving pictures and a new unit—the Reflectoscope. It is planned to give these talks in St. Andrew's Hall, Idlewood Avenue, following the one for children, begun on October 7. The remaining talks to be given are those on October 14, 16, 18 and 21 which will be for adults. Season tickets for a nominal sum will admit to the full series for adults. The proceeds will be applied to paying for the new Reflectoscope.

Bishop Tucker Names Delegates to Celebration.

The Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Virginia, appointed Rosewell Page and the Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon, D. D., to represent the Diocese of Virginia at the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America, held in Philladelphia, October 7. The celebration was held in Christ Episcopal Church, where the organization proceedings were held on September 2, 1785.

Four delegates from Virginia were appointed to attend the meeting in 1785 when the denomination was organized. They were David Griffith of Alexandria, John Page of Rosewell, later Governor of Virginia; William Lee of James City County, and the Rev. S. S. McGrosky of Hungar's Parish. Only Mr. Griffith and Mr. Page attended, however.

Fourth District, Woman's Auxiliary Meets.

On September 10, there was a meeting in St. Mark's Church, Syracuse, of the Presidents, Educational Secretaries and Supply Secretaries of the Fourth District, Woman's Auxiliary. Mrs. Lewis S. Carr, Syracuse, Educational Secretary, and Mrs. Eugene B. Pratt, Supply Secretary, had charge of the meeting. In the afternoon Mrs. Charles R. Mellen, General Educational Secretary of the Auxiliary, gave suggestions on program planning and an outline of the study work for the year on Latin America. Fifty-nine women attended the sessions. Luncheon was served by the Daughters of St. Mark's, the Parish Guild.

Bishop Fiske's Announcement.

The Rt. Rev. Charles Fisk has announced his intention to resign to the Standing Committee of the diocese. This notice was given October 4. He has been requested to remain until the convention convenes in May. Bishop Fisk was ordained Priest in 1897, and consecrated Bishop in 1915.

The Rev. A. R. Mitchell, D. D., Celebrates Fiftieth Anniversary.

On Sunday, September 22, the Rev. Alexander R. Mitchell, D. D., celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination at his two churches, St. James and St. Andrew's, Greenville, S. C. The Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop of Upper South Carolina, and the Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, D. D., Bishop of South Carolina, both spoke at the celebrations. A large group of Dr. Mitchell's friends were present at the services.

Dr. Mitchell has been one of the foremost builders of the Church in South Carolina in the present generation, having been responsible for the organization of the two parishes which he now serves, and the mission at Greer, and also many other churches in the State.

Executive Council Meets.

The Executive Council of the diocese met in Trinity Parish House, Columbia, September 19, to plan for the fall work. A missionary spirit pervaded the meeting, which decided to make the quota to the National Church a prior claim upon the treasury of the diocese for the coming year.

At the meeting the Rev. A. Rufus Morgan, of Columbia, was elected to the Council in the place of the Rev. Charles C. Fishburne, who has moved from the diocese. Mr. Morgan was also elected Chairman of the Department of Christian Social Service.

Fall Clergy Conference.

The fall Clergy Conference of the Diocese was held under the auspices of the Field Department at Trinity Parish House, Columbia, Thursday, September 26. The chairman of the meeting was the Rev. Lewis N. Taylor, of Columbia. Most of the clergy of the diocese were present and joined in the discussions, which were on an unusually deep spiritual basis.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D. Bishop

The Secretary of War Speaks to Advocates of Peace.

Before an audience of nearly five thousand people, made up of Protestants, Catholics and Jews, in Washington, Secretary of War Cordell Hull declared: "The Church is a sponsor and advocate of peace, and I know that you will agree with me that at this moment, when there is menace of war that may not be confined to any two nations, but may spread among several, there is a weighty obligation resting on the Church to exert itself in every conceivable manner to impress the people with a hatred of war and a love of peace."

This was said during the session of the mass meeting in the interest of revival of religion in Washington, October 2, the very day on which Italy was reported as making an assault upon a Christian nation and on the day when President Roosevelt was assuring Americans and the world at large that it would be the part of the United States to steer clear of any foreign entanglements.

In a veritable "love feast" of religionists of all types, under auspices of the Committee on Religious Life in the Nation's Capital, stage and auditorium of Constitution Hall, the largest available local auditorium, were filled with Christians of many names and with a host of Hebrew religionists—all of whom were represented in the speaking and in the brilliant musical program of hymns and anthems. It was something to stir the imagination of a devotee of unity and religious solidarity, and, as the Bishop of Washington, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, who presided, said, the event set a new advance in religion and indicated that religion is the most popular matter which engages the American people.

Secretary Hull, appearing as a crusader for religion and for peace, appealed to the vast audience for a "flaming crusade" to improve conditions in all avenues of life—more particularly in the realm of international relations, as regards peace. In the face of Mussolini's spread-eagle and fiery appeal to Fascists, Mr. Hull's reference to war as "comparative barbarism" sent a thrill through the listeners and was greeted with vigorous approval.

Jewish Rabbi and Catholic Bishop Address Meeting.

Rabbi Abram Simon, speaking for the Jewish group, made an eloquent plea for the banishing of prejudice, which he termed "dislike of the unlike". Only prejudice stands between Jew and Christian, he declared. "Both Jew and Christians stand before the same Father and they both bow before the same flag—and they both have the same hope of immortality."

The Rev. Maurice Sheehy spoke for the Catholics, in the absence of Bishop James H. Ryan, rector of Washington's Catholic University, who was detained. "As a Catholic I am concerned about the perpetuation of a form of government under which religion is free and which flourishes in accordance with the response of the individual to its appeal," he said. He urged a loyalty which must be "sane and critical" rather than "blind and unreasoning", if our form of government is to endure.

Bishop Freeman is chairman of the Committee on Religious Life and Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, of the Cathedral staff, is secretary.

Provincial Conference of Colored Workers.

The eleventh annual Provincial Conference for Colored Church Workers of the Third Province was held in St. Monica's Chapel, Washington, October 9-11. The special theme was the Forward Movement. Bishop James E. Freeman and Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes were among the speakers. The conference preacher was the Rev. Ernest S. Thomas, rector of St. Barnabas' Church, Germantown, Pa.

Northern Convocation to Meet at Silver Spring.

October 23 is the date set for the fall session of the Northern Convocation, to be held in Ascension Chapel, Silver Spring, the Rev. J. C. Cox, vicar. The Rev. Walter Plumley, dean of the convocation, will preside.

The Rev. D. C. Clark, rector of Takoma Park Church, has resigned to go to Emmanuel Church, Cumberland, Md. The rector-emeritus, the Rev. O. M. Young, is temporarily in charge at Trinity, Takoma Park.

Fred H. Thompson, South Carolinian who served in the A. E. F. at the age of fourteen and is claimed to have been the youngest member of the army in France, had nothing on the Rev. Worth Wicker, chaplain of the 113th Field Artillery.

Officers of the service battery of the 113th said today that Captain Wicker was only fourteen when he enlisted in the navy during the war. He served many months.

Thompson is said to have wheedled a recruiting sergeant into believing he was eighteen, Captain Wicker is said to have done the same thing.

The Rev. Mr. Wicker is rector of St. Paul's Church, Greenville. He was commissioned a chaplain in the National Guard some months ago.

WALKING WITH GOD.

Who walks with God must take his way
Across far distances and gray
To goals that others do not see
Where others do not care to be.
Who walks with God must have no fear
When danger and defeat appear,
Nor stop when every hope seems gone,
For God, our God, moves ever on.
Who walks with God must press ahead
When sun or cloud is overhead;
When all the waiting thousands cheer,
Or when they only stop to sneer;
When all the challenge leaves the hours
And naught is left but jaded powers.
But he will some day reach the dawn,
For God, our God, moves ever on.

The Medical Language of Luke.

Are we, aside from tradition, well assured that Luke was indeed a doctor just like those who come to treat our sick folks today? Undoubtedly, for his writings carry the hall marks of a medical man in themselves, and his profession is incontrovertibly embalmed in the very words he uses; we note this especially, as one might readily anticipate, in the technical medical terms he uses as compared with Matthew and with Mark, as well as his fuller details in describing the miracles of healing; we remark it, too, in describing other events, when in numerous instances he instinctively lays hold of terms for the most part found only in Greek medical authors.

This important fact was first brought clearly to light by William Kirk Hobart in 1882 ("The Medical Language of St. Luke: A Proof from Internal Evidence that the Gospel According to St. Luke and the Acts of the Apostles were written by the Same Person and that the Writer was a Medical Man"), who devoted his life to the study. The Rev. Alfred Plummer, former Master of University College, Durham, England, in his commentary on Luke, remarks that the argument is cumulative, for while any two or three instances of coincidence of his language with medical terminology might be explained as happenings, the large number of such words makes such an explanation unsatisfactory. Later on, this attractive theme became the subject of a volume by the dean of the higher critics, Adolph Harnack of Berlin, who in the English edition of his "Luke the Physician" declares: "The evidence is of overwhelming force; so that it seems to me that no doubt can exist that the third Gospel and the Acts of the Apostles were composed by a physician. . . . I subscribe to the words of Zahn, 'Hobart has proved for every one who can at all appreciate proof that the author of the Lukan work was a man practiced in the scientific language of Greek medicine—in short, a Greek physician'."

A few pertinent illustrations cannot fail to be of interest.

Luke alone preserves for us in the sermon at Nazareth our Lord's appellation of Physician, "And he said unto them, Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself."

While in Matthew and Mark we read simply that Simon's wife's mother had a fever, Luke tells that she "was taken with the great fever"; this accords with the classification of the period which recognized two classes, the great and the little fevers—the mother-in-law had the serious, threatening kind.

The medical expression "was taken" is used nine times by Luke, never in Mark and John, and only once in Matthew; in Acts 28:8 it occurs again, also with fever, in the case of Publius who lay sick. Hippocrates uses the same word in connection with those who were seized with epilepsy, and Galen uses it in a number of instances as well.

In Chapter 5 Luke tells us that the leper who besought the Lord to heal him was "full of leprosy"; while in Chapter 17 a group of evidently lighter cases is simply described as ten men who were lepers. Our man in the fifth chapter had the aggravated form, much as if in describing a smallpox patient I should note that he had the "confluent smallpox," distinguishing a far worse form.

The report of our Lord's solemn warnings as to latter days cautions the disciples "to take heed to yourselves lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life." Overcharged is a medical term for the distress and nausea following debauchery.

In the account of the Gadarene, Luke in particular notes that he "ware no clothes," and adds, not related by Matthew and Mark, that the possession had lasted a long time, always a matter of prime interest to a doctor and noted elsewhere in Luke, as when he states that the woman with issue had been troubled for twelve years, and that the woman who was "bowed together, and could in no wise lift up herself," had suffered for eighteen years, with several instances, too, in Acts. Nakedness as observed in the Gadarene is noted by Greek medical men, as in Arateus in his chapter on mania, as a mark of a deranged mind.

In the account of the woman with the issue of blood, the statement follows that the flow was stanched; a phrase characteristically medical as shown by similar terms in Hippocrates, Dioscorides, and Galen.

When our Lord said, "It is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God," he used a diction quite different from Matthew and Mark, for here the word for "needle" means a surgical needle, and the word for "eye" is that for a hole or perforation of any kind in the body.

In speaking to the lawyers, "Ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers," Luke uses the expression for the doctor's examination of the body by inspection with palpation.

In the expression in the shipwreck chapter in Acts 27:17, "They used helps, undergirding the ship," the word for undergirding is never used for ships but is common among medical men for structures which serve to strengthen some part of the body. "They used helps" is also remarkable as the current medical term applied to ligaments, muscles, peritoneum.

It is Luke alone who relates the miracle done by our Lord upon one of His enemies, Malchus, who came to arrest Him in the Garden, in restoring his ear which Peter smote off. Doctor-like, Luke completes the picture by noting that it was the right ear, as mentioned also by John.

He further tells us that the withered hand stretched out and healed was the right one; and it appeals to his keen medical judgment that our Lord's immediate order for the daughter of Jairus, when He "took her by the hand, and called saying, Maid, arise. And her spirit came again, and she arose straightway," was, "He commanded to give her meat."

The man who came to our Lord after His descent from the Mount of Transfiguration and besought him to "look upon my son: for he is mine only child" used the term for "look upon" that was used of old for a request to make a medical examination into the condition of a patient.

And so, all through the Gospel and the Acts, similar material abounds, enough for a much longer disquisition on this head alone.

We have need to be profoundly impressed by these facts, which have only been appreciated for a few years, that many undeniable defenses of the Bible still lie hidden away and undiscovered within its own pages as they are read by millions century after century.

—Dr. Howard Kelly, in S. S. Times.

Depression Compensations.

A visitor remarked that her hostess' little children seemed to get as much enjoyment out of a box of clothespins, a few straight pieces of kindling wood and other makeshift playthings as some others did from expensive toys. The mother laughed and said it had taken her a number of months, filled with self pity and unhappiness, to arrive at that conclusion, but that she was at last thoroughly convinced.

"There are some genuine compensations for hard times," she continued. "I had looked forward when the three were babies to getting them the best books and the most wonderful toys. Now I can see that the children like to make their own good times—and there are plenty of good books in the library."

"See what I've made!" said the small son of the family, a little later. It was a house—rather shaky—which he had constructed out of kindlings. "Mary and Bob are working on the folks that are going to live in it," he added.

Sure enough! His sister and a visitor were busily stuffing the bodies of the future inmates of the new house, while a fourth child was making a table for the residence out of a small paper box. This corner of the room was badly littered, but it was the "play room" corner and an old piece of oilcloth had been laid down so that all scraps could be removed in a few minutes.

Of course the children tired of their cooperative house furnishing after a time. So when the mother invited them to do an errand for her as soon as they had put their playroom in order, this activity was performed as happily as the other. The children would go back to their manufactuirng another day the mother informed me.

"But Guy has finished his house," I said.

"Yes," she answered, smiling, "he will either improve it or make something else."

Another day when I was there, these children were making what they called a "picture farm" by pasting small cut-out illustrations on a large sheet of pasteboard, the side of a carton, supposed to represent the land. There was a house, a barn, a tree and all the other things the children thought a farm ought to have. And, soaring in the sky, far above all, was an airplane! The mother brought out a picture which the children had constructed some months before, and it was easy to see a decided improvement in their work—although nobody, of course, thought of it as work.

"We're all going to make a bird-house for the show," announced one of the group. "Did you see that piece of wood that we found in the orchard?"

Sharp eyes had discovered a limb with a knot hole in it, and forthwith the mother had to go with them to the orchard and cut off, with a dull saw, this coveted material. All it needed, according to the children, was a floor and a roof to make it the most perfect birdhouse ever exhibited in a contest. It could be hung from a tree for a home for the birds.

"Whatever else hard times has brought us, the children certainly are getting thrills that they never could have had if all their playthings had been ready-made," said the happy mother. "It is a little inconvenient at times. For instance, on that occasion, I had to leave the bread in the oven, at the risk of its getting overdone, to saw this dead limb off the tree. But it was worth it."

"Mother can't find nice things as easily as we can," boasted one of the children, "because she doesn't get out as much as we do so she doesn't have so much practice, but she's learning all right."

"Huh!" said another, "Who found the mica for the windows in the new house, I'd like to know. Didn't Mother?"

"Indeed, I am learning to use my eyes," laughed mother, "and I'm learning some other valuable lessons, too."

Putting Away Childish Things.

Paul has a unique way of describing what it might mean to become a Christian. In his own confession, he says: "When I became a man I put away childish things." 1 Cor. 13:11. It is a great hour when a young man, reared in a home of privilege, where parents are indulgent, moves out into adult life, to assume a place of responsibility and dignity; or when a girl, whose every wish has been satisfied and every need supplied, sees the need for high independent living and discovers that life is a way to make, a victory to win, and a character to adorn with usefulness and courage. Paul may not have been describing his conversion, but he was telling of a time, when he ceased being a child and began to live like a grown-up. "When I became a man, I put away childish things."

In the opening chapter of "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," John Fox tells of Chad Buford, little mountain urchin, watching the neighbors bury the only two people he had loved. They were his foster parents. No one knew who Chad's real parents were. Left alone, with only the prospect of being a servant in a neighbor's home, little Chad made up his mind to face the world alone, a world of mystery, out beyond his cove. With his long squirrel rifle, his good dog Jack, with a coon-skin cap pulled over his shaggy hair, his eyes filled with tears, he climbed to the ridge and looked over into a new world. With his back upon the past and his brave little face set into the future, he dropped to his knees, pulled off his cap and prayed, "O God, I ain't nothing but a boy, but I gotta act like a man, now."

It seems to be a contradiction that Jesus so urges child-likenesses upon His disciples. But there is a great difference between childishness and childlikeness. Nothing is more beautiful than the child-like spirit. It is fresh, eager and spritely. It is enthusiastic and alert, capable of surprise, and always hopeful and trusting. All this lies over against the blase and cynical. Surely the childlike spirit is the loveliest thing we know. It is opposed to pride and arrogance. It is humble and sensitive and Christlike. Childishness is what Sergeant Alvin York meant when, expressing the hope that we'd never have another war, said: "Let's never do a childish thing like that again." Or it is what one of our professors meant, when seeing a student hanging around the stage exit of a cheap burlesque show, remarked: "Poor Chap, he hasn't grown up yet!" Childishness in infants is natural, but in young people it is sin. In adults it is doubly so. A person grows up when he stands by his own convictions, takes his place helpfully in the scheme of things and faces life with courage.

Learning French and English.

A recent writer tells of his varied attempt by book and teacher to bridge the chasm between himself and the French language. At last he discovered a Frenchman whose English was as bad as his French. They walked in the park each tearing at the other's language, something like this:

"It calls to walk," said he smiling brilliantly. "It is good morning," said I. "better than I had extended." "I was at you yesterday ze morning, but I deed not find."

"I was obliged to leap early," said I, "and I was busy standing up straight all around the forenoon."

"The book I prayed you send, he came, and I thank, but positively are you not deranged?"

"Don't talk," said I, "never talk again. It was really nothing, anywhere. I had been very happy, I reassure."

He slipped and caught my arm.

"Pardon, I glide, I glode. There was the hide of a banane. Did I crash you?"

"I noticed no insults," I replied. "You merely gnawed my arm.

Gestures and smiles of perfect understanding. And they tottered together a few steps more in any lingual direction. —Selected.

WHERE IS GOD?

(Ballads with double refrain.)

Grace French Smith.

Is God out of sight in the noise and the crush
Of years that are passing to our dismay?
Are we blind to His presence in worldly rush?
The wonders of God are all pointing His way—
The rainbows that dip in the silver bay,
The poem of color in sunset sky.
Are we deaf to His voice as we kneel and pray?
Just a veil is between our God and the eye.

The rose of silk with a velvet blush,
The fruit of the trees in gorgeous array,
The liquid notes of the woodland thrush,
The wonders of God are all pointing His way—
The stars of the universe all betray
A Creator of Power. Yet He hears the sigh,
And the longing of man as he wanders astray,
Just a veil is between our God and the eye.

The lawn that is trampled revives like plush,
The tree that is injured repairs decay,
And Helen Keller can feel through the hush,
The wonders of God are all pointing His way—
The mind of a man, He has carved out of clay,
It can break up an atom, and soar on high,
Approaching eternity—crown of his day—
Just a veil is between our God and the eye.

O God, do forgive us our doubts that slay,
The wonders of God are all pointing His way.
Endow us with sight that can magnify—
Just a veil is between our God and the eye.

* * *

One of the great lessons which our Lord Himself taught us was that while the Christian life is a life of service it is not to be taken with undue solemnity. "Consider the ravens," He said, "they sow not neither reap; they have no store-chamber nor barn: and God feedeth them." "Consider the lilies how they grow: they toil not neither do they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." I am afraid we sometimes take ourselves far too solemnly, whereas God meant us to live as His children with a gaiety justified by our belief in His providence and care.

—Bishop J. W. Hunkin (English).

We can have peace about any and everything that we thust put into His hands—our personal difficulties, our business affairs, our loved ones, our salvation, and the approach of the greatest disturber of our peace, even death itself. Surely if there is any one to whom we may trust our every concern, it is He who has all power in Heaven and on earth and who loved us enough to die for us. —Rev. L. T. Wilds.

In the realized Presence of God we begin dimly to know ourselves as we are. As our knowledge of God grows, so does our knowledge of ourselves and our fellow men. This is why the saints have always been more alive and sensitive to evil and imperfection than those who are less in touch with God.

Sea Birds.

It was on a rain-gray day, full of mists and warm showers, that we started for the sea. Our road led through southern New Jersey, and was bordered by the wild flowers of the Barrens, butter-yellow false foxglove, lilac spikes of hairy-button snake-root, polygonella, all pearl and rose, golden asters, orange polygala, and that strange white figwort, the turtle-head.

We crossed the Plains, that uncanny twenty-five square miles of country where all the trees are dwarfed like those in a Japanese tea garden. Beyond them we came to wind swept dunes with a pale sea beyond, where the ceaseless surf broke forever upon a beach the color of old silver.

There we met those incurable optimists, the surf fisherman. All day they stood thigh-deep in the salt water and cast and cast interminably but never, never did they catch a fish. One of them told me that he had had a nibble early that morning, another one had had a bite the day before. They reminded me of those fishermen in the Seine, whom I used to see in France, who as far as I could make out only caught a fish once or twice in a long life-time.

Beyond the fishermen were the birds that we had come to see. Everywhere were herring gulls, the old ones with whtie heads and tails, pearl-gray backs, and gray, black tipped wings, while the young ones were blotched with black and brown. Here and there were laughing gulls, some with the black heads of summer, others in winter plumage with white heads streaked with dusky black. Then there were ring-billed gulls, difficult to tell from the herring gulls, except that they were smaller and had yellow legs, if one could get close enough to make out that field mark.

All along the beach were the sandpipers. Flocks of pale-gray sanderlings, white beneath with a black center to every feather on their backs, who followed every receding wave close to the water's edge. Then at the edge of salt water pools were flocks of Western sandpipers which look almost exactly like semipalmated sandpipers, but have longer and more curved bills. The Banker was our authority on those birds, and we meekly accepted his statements as to which were which, although we strongly suspected that he was guessing.

Apart from the sandpipers we saw a willet, a slim, trim, sand-gray bird, who moved along the beach giving a suppressed curtsy every once in a while and showing black and white wings when he flew.

Back in the dunes we came upon a little company of the piping plover, darling little birds, so light as hardly to be distinguished from the white sand across which they pattered, and who gave sweet, piping calls when they flew. I remember finding my first nest of the piping plover on a beach at the Bay of Fundy and years later another one on a dune on Little Beach Island, off the New Jersey coast, four eggs in a little hollow in the hot sand.

Then the Banker took us far up the beach to where there were great patches of dead bayberry bushes. There he suddenly clapped his hands, loudly and out from among the bushes flew, one by one, a colony of black-crowned night herons. We scanned each one hopefully, because the Banker told us to expect one or more of the rare yellow-crowned night herons from the South in that company. In winter plumage the yellow-crowned look like the black-crowned, except that they have longer legs, so that a strip of bare shank shows beyond the tail when they fly, while the black-crowned show only the feet. No yellow-crowned appeared, however, and we took our car again and motored far up the beach.

An osprey flew close beside us not far overhead, at a gait of exactly twenty miles an hour, much to the delight of the Artist, who hails from California, where ospreys are as rare as rough-legged hawks are here. The Banker told us about a young friend of his who climbed to an osprey's nest to band the young and was attacked and badly gashed by the female osprey. That brought up stories of attacks by eagles, great-horned owls, and screech owls in the nesting season. Also I remembered that a wood thrush once flew at my face when I visited her nest, and another occasion when I had to beat off the thrusts of a common tern. Then we discussed at some length the stories of eagles carrying off young children and decided that most of them were imaginary. The Artist, from personal observation, assured us that a golden eagle, the most powerful of the species in this country, can only with the greatest difficulty carry off a jack rabbit, which certainly weigh less than the average child. We all agreed that probably the only bird of prey which could menace the life of a child would be the grim lammergeyer, that Alpine bird, a cross between a vulture and an eagle, the largest European bird of prey.

Back from the dunes were wide stretches of tawny green marshlands, dotted here and there with white herring gulls. Beyond the gulls showed three patches of such intense white that we examined them through our field glasses and found them to be three American egrets, those exquisite white herons which drift up from the South more and more frequently every summer, quite a colony of them now nesting in the southern part of New Jersey.

Beyond the egrets towered one great blue heron, which looked as big as a rock when it flew. Everywhere were fish crows, which are a litle smaller than the ordinary crow and can best be told by their voices, as the fish crow talks through his nose and says "car," instead of the "caw" of the American crow.

Here and there we saw turkey vultures and a few marsh hawks, those harriers with white rump patches, hunting back and forth across the salt meadows. Then there were flocks of white-bellied tree swallows in such numbers that they looked like swarms of enormous mosquitoes.

Once an irregular flock of blue-winged teal passed high overhead, but the great bird adventure of the day came when we had headed the car toward the Point. Suddenly through the sky not far overhead came a little squawk about the size of a sparrow hawk, but which looked almost black in the gray haze, and we recognized delightedly that rare falcon, the pigeon hawk. He looked and flew down every year from the Far North and haunts our beaches. The little killer had a grim and adequate look.

Everywhere on the beach were ring-necked plover with a broken black band across their throats, and once on a mud flat covered with green gangrenous patches of seaweed we came upon a series of perfectly round tracks in the mud, the sign and seal of the opossum, whose paw prints are like those of no other mammal. By eight he had sailed out from some near-by patch of woods to hunt for fiddler and ghost crabs. Everywhere we saw the burrows of the latter. Occasionally there would be a white flash across the sand, and we would glimpse a ghost crab with his white shell with a lace-like pattern of gray and eyes on stilts, which gave him a most comical appearance. Usually they would disappear in some near-by burrow from which, a moment later, two black eyes would peer out.

Once we came upon a ghost crab too far from a burrow to escape. He immediately pretended to be dead, but retained enough life to give the Artist, who picked him up, a severe pinch, which caused said Artist to drop him with a startled yell.

Beyond the mud flat we came upon a great company of black skimmers huddled together on the sand, strange birds with their black wings, white-streaked heads, and red bills, with the lower mandible longer than the upper. As they crouched on the sand they yapped like a pack of dogs, while near them were black-breasted plover, turnstones, and semipalmated sandpipers.

On the way home we followed a road through a great marsh, where we stopped to pick bunches of purple gerardia and seaside goldenrod. There we heard the alarm note of the short-billed marsh wren, "Chip-chop, chip-chop," and a moment later saw him in the long grass, the second smallest bird of our Eastern States. His tiny body was brown, streaked with black and white, with tawny sides, and he rattled when he sang, while the long-billed marsh wren clicks, and the Carolina wren rings.

Beyond the wren we heard the "Chip-whee-oo" of the white-eyed vireo and saw a goldfinch in full plumage, with his black wings and golden head and body.

The last bird of the day we met on the way home in the heart of the Barrens, an immature red-tailed hawk perched on a low pine tree, its lighter breast distinguishing it from its brother, the red-shouldered hawk.

We went home in the afterglow where, through an amethystine haze, distant showers made long slanting lines of gold, and rose against a sky of rippled flame, spaced with long strips of apple-green and aquamarine.

A Busy Day.

It was a beautiful day in early autumn, just the kind when boys like to be in the woods or walking in the fields. The leaves of the trees were red and gold and yellow. Oh, how pretty they were!

"Dick! D-i-c-k!" But mother's calls for her boy were not answered. Hiding behind the barn, Dick heard all right, but knowing what they meant, he did not answer. He had heard mother say something about raking leaves off the lawn. That would interfere with his plans to go to the woods.

When he was sure his mother was not looking, Dick ran off in the direction of the woods. Now he would have lots of fun and would find such beautiful leaves.

"Just look at that ant-hill," he cried to himself, seeing a number of ants running back and forth. He stopped to look at them, but they kept right on with their work. How busy they were!

B-u-z-z-z-z-z-z-z! Dick ducked his head as this noise sounded in his ear. He did not like bees when they came too close, and he thought this one was trying to sting him. But the bee did not notice the boy. This bee had gone forth after honey and was on her way to the hive, so she had no time for Dick.

A rather scolding bark sounded on the ground near Dick. Turning around, he saw a squirrel digging in the leaves. Finding the nuts for which he looked, he filled his cheeks with them and ran up a tree. He went inside the tree through a small hole. In a minute he came out again and ran down to the ground to find more nuts.

What was that striped animal that ran under the pile of stones? A chipmunk! He, too, was carrying nuts into his nest, so he might have something to eat during the long winter which was coming. He chattered away as he worked.

How busy they all were! Dick thought of those leaves on the lawn. He should be at home working. He began to feel uneasy, for he knew he had done wrong in running away when there was work he could do. Maybe his mother was raking those leaves.

B-u-z-z! The bew flew past Dick again on her way for more honey. To Dick it sounded as though the bee said something as she flew by. That buzz sounded like "l-a-z-y". And when he looked at the busy ants, it seemed as though some of them motioned to him as much as to say, "Come on, get busy. Don't stand there doing nothing."

The squirrel and chipmunk began to chatter. Of course, they didn't say it, but Dick thought they were calling to him, "Lazy boy! Lazy boy! Ran away so he wouldn't have to work. Left the work for his mother to do. Shame on you! Shame on you!"

Yes, sir; the bees and ants and squirrels and chipmunks were as busy as could be, and here was a strong, healthy boy running away from work. Dick could not stand that. He ran home in just a few minutes, and got busy with his rake. When mother looked out of the window, she saw him working hard.

Pretty soon he came in for something to eat. My, he was hungry!

"And look what I have for you, mother," he said, holding up a handful of pretty leaves. "I found them on our front lawn."

When Dick went to bed that night, he thought of the folk in the woods. Well, they could not call him lazy now, for the lawn was raked clean. "I feel much better," he said to himself as he was about to fall asleep.

And why shouldn't he, for he had not wasted a beautiful day. He had done a task worth while.

Kitty Kills the Time.

Evelyn glanced at the clock and her pretty round face drew down dolefully. "Only nine," she sighed. "And that postman never was known to come until after eleven. That's what we get by being at the very end of his route. I wish I had stayed in bed until ten o'clock.

Kitty, her brow hidden under a white, pinned back cloth laughed. "You were awake at six, you were so excited," she said, "and you the famous family sleepy head."

"Who could possibly sleep at such a time?" impatiently said Evelyn.

"Then what did you want to stay in bed for?" Kitty inquired.

Evelyn ignored her natural enough querry. "Oh," she yawned. "Every five minutes I've interview that clock! It's the slowest poke. What shall I do until time for the postman to come?"

"Have you cleared up your room yet?"

"Cleared up my room? Kitty Powers—haven't you a drop of blood in your veins? How can I clear up my room when perhaps in an hour or so that invitation is coming? Oh, Kitty, do you suppose Helen Newcombe has invited us? Olive said she had but we really do not know her very well and perhaps it is a mistake. But just think how lovely it would be to go to her house party. Their new home in the country is just too lovely for mere words to describe."

"Well, we shall certainly know soon," Kitty sensibly answered. "If I were you I would clean up my room. You know if we should get the invitation there would be lots to do. I have my room all finished and am giving the living room a good cleaning. We ought to get everything done that we can, for if we were away a week it would put a big load on mother's shoulders."

"I'm too excited to work," Evelyn cried fretfully. "Besides, if I count on it then it will not come. I'm not going to do a single thing until after the postman comes. Oh!—I wish the time would fly."

"Is it eleven already?" Kitty asked later in the forenoon when Evelyn came dashing in to tell her she had heard the postman's whistle at last. "I had no idea it was so late. I finished washing the dining-room windows and now I am going to tackle the back porch closet."

"No idea it was so late! It seems about midnight to me! Oh, dear—time is the most provoking thing. Get that cloth off your head and let's watch."

"Well, he is stopping at any rate," Kitty remarked as the blue uniform turned in at the gate.

Evelyn took the two papers and the single envelope silently and then without a word disappeared into the house with them. Kitty followed, a sympathetic look upon her face. She found her sister face down among the disordered covers of her bed, sobbing unrestrainedly.

"There—you see!" she said in a muffled voice. "It is just as I thought! Nothing so nice could happen! And you expected it and cleaned and cleaned!"

"Well, the cleaning needed to be done," Kitty defended calmly. "Don't feel so badly about it, Evelyn, dear. There will be other parties."

"You don't care," sobbed the younger girl. "You were not in the least excited about it even."

Kitty lifted her head. "Evelyn," she said. "I was so excited I could not sleep. I don't think I ever wanted to go to anything in my life so badly as I wanted to be invited. I like Helen Newcombe better on short acquaintance than any other girl I have ever seen."

"How could you work, then?"

"It's a secret," answered Kitty wisely. "Working hard is the quickest way to pass the time. I remember a little poem I once read—

'If you want to kill time
I will tell you in rhyme
How to do it,
It will go in a breath,
If you work it to death—
Now go to it.'

And I have found it to be true. Come on now and I'll help you with your room, and then toward evening we will walk over to Cousin Ellen's and perhaps she will invite us to supper."

For a few moments Evelyn sobbed inconsolably, and then she dried her swollen eyes and commenced to move lanquidly around the room.

"What's the use of time going fast now?" she asked. "There's no other mail until tomorrow and by the time the postman comes it will be too late for us to go. Olive said they were going to leave on the morning train."

"Well, pass the time until bed-time," advised Kitty briskly. "Let's clean the china closet and surprise mother when she comes home."

Evelyn always liked to wash the dainty dishes which were kept secluded for special occasions, and even though she sighed lustily almost every moment she found herself taking an interest in the task. Kitty resolutely hummed a hymn and wiped with a flourish of the dish towels which followed in rapid succession.

Suddenly the door bell jangled.

"You go," Evelyn said. "Oh, dear—I hope it isn't any one. If it is you switch them into the living room quick and let me get away and bathe my eyes. Maybe it is just an agent."

She heard voices at the door, but they soon ceased and there was a rush of mad steps in the hall.

"What is it—what is it?" Evelyn cried out.

"Special delivery from Helen Newcombe," Kitty answered. "You may open it if you like."

Evelyn smiled happily. "She sent the invitation this way because she was afraid it would be too late," she said. "She gave the other to her brother to be mailed the other day and he dropped it in the mud and the address was so inellgible it came back. She wants us to be sure and come."

"So we have our rainbow after the storm," laughed Kitty.

Evelyn glanced at her as she folded the delicate green sheet and thrust it back into the envelope 'I am never going to hang around and wait for anything to happen again as long as I live," she declared. "I feel as if I had been drawn through the proverbial knot hole while you look as cool and sweet as a daisy. What was that little verse about killing time? That's my method after this."

For the Southern Churchman.

AN EVENING PRAYER.

John B. Nichols.

O God, who calmed the tempestuous sea,
Please quell the storms that arise in me;
O Thou who watch the sparrows fall,
Please hear me when on Thee I call.

Please keep me straight, and strong, and true,
Make me do the things Thou wouldst have me do,
Make me patient, and gentle, and kind,
Let me laugh and love and never whine.

Forgive each wrong thought, and word, and deed,
Please give me strength for the things I need,
Forgive all sins in times that have past,
And bring me home to Heaven at last.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

This Way Lies Madness.

Terming Premier Mussolini a "megalomaniac dictator," Bishop George Craig Stewart today called upon Christians of all creeds to test their religion in the present world crisis which threatens war. Under the heading, "This Way Lies Madness," Bishop Stewart in the October "Diocese" says;

"Here it is, Europe twenty years after, plunging into hell. We have seen it coming; the whole world has seen it coming, but has refused deliberately to adventure for peace. Now with more men under arms than in 1914, with armament budgets the largest in history, with jealousy, envy, nervousness, fear, in the saddle everywhere, a megalomaniac dictator runs amuck, defies the world and plunges to his doom dragging all Europe into the melee.

"How real is our Christianity? How vital is our faith? St. Peter and St. Paul were in Rome 1,900 years ago or nearly that. Rome Immortalis claims to be the center of Christendom, of the Christian tradition. Yet, here she is backing up, not Jesus Christ but Herod; following not Peter but Nero. Rome has gone pagan again as she has over and over in her history. She has chosen the fasces and denied the Cross. She has betrayed her birthright and stands before the judgment seat of an enlightened world guilty of high treason against the peace of the world.

"In such an hour it is not for us in America to boast. We should look deep into our hearts to see whether our Christianity is vital or veneer. For, after all, we have an Ethiopia within our own borders. And we have our respectable ammunition makers. And we have our ambitious politicians willing to exploit the weak whenever they get a chance.

"God help us. The whole world needs to act together in this hour to stop even now this war. But that is not enough. The whole Christian world then should repent, turn around, face Jesus Christ and make Him the dictator of all of us."

Study Re-alignment of Dioceses.

A study on the advisability of realignment of the dioceses of the Church in Illinois was launched here this week when the Tri-Diocesan Commission on such met at diocesan headquarters. The commission was set up some months ago on request of the last diocesan convention of the Diocese of Quincy.

Bishop Stewart was elected chairman of the commission, and the Ven. Raymond N. Gunn of East Saint Louis (Diocese of Springfield), was named secretary. Bishop White of Springfield and a delegation from Quincy were in attendance.

After extended discussion, it was decided to name sub-committees to investigate certain phases of the situation with regard to the three dioceses in the state.

The commission will meet again shortly to hear reports of the committees.

Missionary in Chicago.

The Church's impress upon Oriental countries is unquestionable and will play an important part in the future of such nations as China, Japan, and the Philippines, the Rev. Edmund L. Souder, missionary for twenty years, told conferences of clergy and laity meeting at St. James' Community House, September 27. The sessions were sponsored by the Department of Ways and Means in connection with the Program for 1936.

Fr. Souder predicted a unification of the Chinese nation, and said in another generation China, as a result of such unification, would play a powerful part in the affairs of the nations. The depression, in the American sense, has not been felt in China, according to the missionary.

Clergy React to President's Letter.

President Roosevelt's letter to clergy throughout the country, asking their reactions to the social program of the present administration, was greeted in Chicago with varied reactions.

Bishop Stewart commented favorably on the letter, saying he expected to answer it conscientiously after making enquiries as to the feasibility in practice of certain of the projects of the Administration.

Several other clergy saw in the letter a conscientious effort to learn the public mind with regard to the President's policies.

Other clergy, on the contrary, treated the letter lightly and indicated they would not reply. One denominational clergyman referred to it as purely a form letter designed for political purposes.

There is nothing in this case that will save the world but what was once called "the foolishness of preaching."
—David Lloyd George.

"If our prayer life seems withered and dry, perhaps there are 'stony places' in our hearts which have been resisting the Holy Spirit. Perhaps there have been no 'showers of blessings' because the soul was too hard to receive them."

"Let not conscience make you linger,
Nor of fitness fondly dream;
All the fitness He requireth
Is to feel your need of Him."

The rich man is the one who considers the whole universe as his own possession. He keeps the least possible and gives to God the utmost possible. Then the world becomes his possession, since "God in giving Christ gives us all things. . . ."
—Toyohiko Kagawa.

"Oh, what a glory doth the world put on,
For him who with a fervent heart goes forth
Under the bright and glorious sky, and looks
On duties well performed and days well spent!
For him the wind, aye, and the yellow leaves
Shall have a voice, and give him eloquent teachings."

True worship, the love of one forgiven much, inspires moral endeavour, and, facing the foe, temptations can be overcome and their very driving power can reinforce our worship and our love, so that evil indeed has no more dominion over us. —A. G. Ikin.

I do not know that there is any goal for any life that it is either right or reasonable to have or possible to advise than this—the likeness of Christ—no voyage, that is to say, that is not faring deliberately to God, according to the loftiest and loveliest revelation of God that has been given to us.
—Rev. Milner-White.

Lord Christ, when first Thou cam'st to men,
Upon a Cross they bound Thee,
And mocked Thy saving kingship then
By thorns with which they crowned Thee:
And still our wrongs may weave Thee now
New thorns to pierce that steady brow
And robe of sorrow round Thee.
—W. Russell Bowie.

As Dr. Charles R. Brown points out in his latest book, "Finding Ourselves," the greatest optimists are persons like Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, of bleak Labrador, or Evangeline Booth, of the Salvation Army, or the late Jane Addams, of Hull House. Busy with the hard tasks God has given them, they have faith in Him. In the vision that He gives of the greatness of service in His Name there is no room for faintness of heart.

"Like the Rose"

So has Palestine commenced to blossom (Isa. 35:1). More Jews returned in a single month of 1935 than in all of 1929. There is no depression there. Sandy wastes are now orange groves. The Jordan is being harnessed for light and power. Prophecies of 20 centuries are being marvellously fulfilled, with startling rapidity.

In a series of specially illustrated articles exclusively for the TIMES, beginning in October, Mr. Geo. T. B. Davis, of world-wide "Million Testaments" fame, will relate his personal investigations of these marvels this summer.

A 10-weeks' "Get Acquainted" subscription brings the entire series. Only 25c, stamps or coin. Write to-day mentioning "Fulfilled Prophecy" articles, or clip this notice.

"REDEEMING THE TIME"

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED
By
REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 100. RICHMOND, VA., OCTOBER 19, 1935. No. 42.

THE RIGHT REVEREND CHARLES E. WOODCOCK, D. D., LL.D.,
Third Bishop of Kentucky.

There are many expressions of sorrow at his retirement, but there are more expressions of affection and good will from the whole Church.

EIGHTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ATTENTION CLERGY AND TREASURERS.

Mr. Editor:

Under the former Apportionment Plan, the Board of Missions dealt directly with the parishes receiving support immediately from the congregations, and was able to make acknowledgement to them all of sums received for the support of the Missions of the Church.

Since the National Council was created practically all dealings have been with Dioceses. The new plan has great merit as an administrative method, but the direct contact with the parishes and individuals who support the Church's Program has been a real loss to the whole work. Today sums received from congregations are not acknowledged by the National Council and, too often, not even known, since these payments come through the Dioceses and included in a bulk which is sent on the Diocesan Expectancy.

This past year diligent effort has been made to discover which of the congregations have shown unusual faithfulness in generous support of the Church's program. Letters of appreciation have been sent to them from National Council. The replies indicate that National Council is out of touch with those who are missionary conscious and loyal in the support of the Missionary work of the Church. Information has been secured about the parishes chiefly by the study of Diocesan Papers which records standing of the parishes, a method far from satisfactory. Many of the replies express surprise that National Council knows anything about what the congregation has done—all answers express pleasure that this work has been noted.

Officers of National Council are eager to acknowledge these sums which often represent no small sacrifice on the part of those who make them. The present system makes such an acknowledgement on the part of National Council very difficult. Information on the subject is often incomplete and not always accurate. The Council, which administers the Missionary work of the whole Church, desires to acknowledge the faithfulness and generosity of those who support this work of the Church. It is not the size of the gift, but rather the continued loyalty of its people, upon whom the Church depends,—which the Officers of National Council desire to note by direct communication.

If the Clergy will keep this office informed when sums are sent through the Diocese by congregations or gifts made by individuals which deserve special acknowledgement, it will help the Officers to act in this matter. Better still, if the Diocesan Treasurer will itemize the sums that are sent in to the Diocese and the sources from which the sum has been received, National Council will appreciate this co-operation and have opportunity to send its own message of appreciation direct.

Philip Cook,
President of National Council.

QUESTIONS MR. BLACKFORD.

Mr. Editor:

The Southern Churchman of Oct. 5 contains a letter entitled Pacifism and Self-Defense. In his conclusion the author states that he "would personally prefer death to a number of other things he could name," and that he feels "the same way about War." Why not unravel the recondite and clarify the cryptic by naming over just one or two of "a number of other things" Please do let him have the use of your columns for this purpose for we are just "burning up" with curiosity, and we are sure that his reply will be no end interesting for many reaon.

FOUNDING OF INSTITUTIONS IN KENTUCKY.

Mr. Editor:

In order to keep the record straight I am writing to correct a statement in The Southern Churchman of Sept. 28. Referring to the resignation of Bishop Woodcock of Kentucky, the article stated that The Church Home and Infirmary, The Norton Infirmary and The Orphanage of the Good Shepherd had all been built under Bishop Woodcock's ministrations. I would like to say that all of these five institutions were in operation long before Bishop Woodcock came to Kentucky. The Orphanage of The Good Shepherd was built in the late sixties or early seventies, the work being organized and carried on for years by Deaconess Sarah Clayland. The Church Home and Infirmary was built by Mr. John P. Morton in the early eighties as a Home for the Deaconnesses and as an Infirmary for the sick.

It was intended as a memorial to the work of Dr. James Craik who himself laid the cornerstone. Dr. Craik died in July, 1882. The Norton Infirmary was built at about the same time as a memorial to Dr. John N. Norton who died before Dr. Craik, whose co-worker he had been in Christ Church. This institution was undertaken largely by the people of St. Paul's Church who did not approve of Mr. Norton's plan to have a home for the sisterhood or deaconnesses who were to act as nurses for the sick in the infirmary. Also the doctors of Louisville at that time wished to have a hospital not so distant from their offices as the Church Home then was.

For a long time I have felt that the work of Sister Sarah Clayland has not been fully appreciated by Church people. I can remember quite far back and I would like to pay my tribute to her tireless giving of herself, her time, her money and her sympathy. She went about doing good among the sick and neglected wherever she found them. At that time she was probably the only woman in Louisville who was doing what is now understood as social service work.

Mary Craik Morris.

What Things Are Important.

The Laymen's Service League of a well known parish had planned its winter's program. Its officers thought it would be fine to try and educate the members of the league in the various phases of church organization and work. Carefully the program was planned. Women's work was to be explained by the president of the diocesan Auxiliary. Young people's work and their problems were to be taken up by an expert. Missions and the mission of the church were to be explained by the bishop. The program was mailed to the members.

The following letter was received by the president from a prominent layman:

> "I am very sorry to note, however, that the program is going to be confined to the work of the Episcopal Church and the fitting in of the men of the League. In years gone by the thing that first attracted me to the Church and which used to pack the Service League meetings was the class of speakers and the topics on which they spoke. Most Service Leagues are 'deadly,' especially to outside guests when the program is confined to reports of committees and the work of the individual Church. You boil your attendance down to a few of those wonderful men who are interested only in the direct work of the Church."

Of course the good layman had missed the whole point. But he unconsciously raises a problem. Shall men's organizations be confined merely to meetings similar to civic luncheon clubs? Shall orators dealing with political subjects in a harmless way that is sure not to arouse conflicts be the order of the day when we gather the laymen? Or shall the new men's service leagues growing throughout the country really show men that the program of the Church is the program that eventually effects men and the life of mankind?

Our laymen as a whole think of the church as something sentimental at best. Christ died long ago, and the fact that He could be crucified today by war or evil conditions is remote in minds that want religion to be only a pleasant comfort that can be taken on or dropped as the mood strikes one.

Young people's work is looked upon as some fad that a few rectors have thought up to amuse the younger generation and bribe them into Church. Surely it is time that the older members of the Church became aware of the fact that in this important field lies the immediate solution of the question as to whether America is to be a Christian country or not. Religious education to our average layman is a sentimental thing called Sunday School where religion, rather indifferently taught, is presented to children until they are old enough to know better. It is time such men found out that the whole psychological impress of childhood will be determined by whether the spiritual is given an opportunity to develop in the child. Unfortunately in the average home we know spirituality will hardly be developed today.

Do our laymen realize that in the problem of missions there is linked up the whole problem of world peace and decent civilization? We hardly think so. When the gentlemen said the work of the "individual" church was not interesting, did he realize that he was part of a great organization far beyond his home parish? Of course not. And yet he must learn this great truth if Christianity is to add the spiritual note so much needed in our modern world.

Often we think of the latest thing as the only imporant thing. Of course at present the Ethiopian situa ation is most important, but long after history has recorded the present events, men will still be struggling with the problems of brotherhood on this earth and whether man has a soul and whether that soul is eternal.

So if it is properly presented, men can still be shown that even the most ordinary events of church life in an ordinary city are actually the most important things which man encounters.

The church of which we speak had a good president of its Laymen's Service League. He pointed out to his friend what his program might lead to if a few laymen were enlightened and began to take Christianity seriously. We hope more churches have such laymen and that they wil realize that either our religion is our most important fact in life or else it is nothing. When this is properly presented, fair-minded laymen will see that in the Church comes their only real opportunity to be of service in a world that otherwise would be insane.

A New Bookstore.

Visitors to New York will have a new place to gather and browse if they are interested churchmen, for The Morehouse Publishing Company has entered the New York field, and this fine church business house so long connected with Milwaukee has now an important branch at 14 East 41st St.

There is something remarkable and "different" about a religious bookstore. One recalls the old names of Thomas Whittaker, so long the friend of clergy and laity. Almost in the manner in which underwriters gathered around Lloyd's Coffee House and became the greatest center of insurance, clergy would gather around Whittaker's. In more recent years, Gorham's has been the center of clerical life. If one needed a supply for a Sunday, Mr. Gorham was sure to know a good man available for a service or a sermon. Here the mild gossip and shop talk of the clergy, which many a layman could never understand, for it was peculiar to the fraternity, would pass from man to man. The next bishop might be elected or the probable successor of some venerated rector would be discussed. It all added to the charm of the good books that lined the shelves.

Now we have a new gathering place. The Morehouses are really loved by all churchmen—high or low or broad. They deserve the support of all churchmen, and we wish them well on their venture into the great metropolis of New York.

The Woman's Auxiliary Page.

We take pleasure in announcing that, with this issue, a Woman's Auxiliary Page is being inaugurated as a regular feature of The Southern Churchman.

Mrs. W. Shelley Humphreys of Florida is the editor.

Mrs. Humphreys is well known in many capacities; in Woman's Club circles, as President of the Jacksonville Branch of the National League of American Pen Women, as editor of The Royal Cross Magazine for many years, and as a regular columnist for the Spirit of Missions.

Mrs. Loaring-Clark writes of her as follows:

> "It gives me very much pleasure to know that my friend, Mrs. W. Shelley Humphreys, has promised to write a Woman's Auxiliary Page for The Southern Churchman. Congratulations to you.
>
> "For some nineteen years Mrs. Humphreys has edited 'The Royal Cross,' the official magazine of the Order of the Daughters of the King. Her contributions have been most acceptable and have made many friends for her all over the country. Music, and art claim her as their friend through her association with the clubs of her State.
> "Mrs. Humphreys is one of Florida's notable poets. Each year some of her poems are published in a representative collection of poems written by those of the State.
>
> "As regards the Church, Mrs. Humphreys has ever been active in the Woman's Auxiliary and other women's organizations. She is a devoted and loyal Church woman and one of Her best informed leaders.
> "I know your women readers will be helped by the information Mrs. Humphreys will give as to women's activities in our Church and that they will find her well-informed and up-to-date."

It is the earnest desire of The Southern Churchman to make this page as useful to the Woman's Auxiliary as possible, inspirationally and spiritually, as well as informatively. We ask the help and cooperation of the Auxiliary at large in making it an exchange of all that is loftiest, most consecrated and sacrificial in their work, that it may serve a real purpose.

To Mrs. Humphreys the Editors extend a most hearty welcome.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Youth Demonstration for World Peace.

The Christian Century, Oct. 9, 1935.

More than fifty church organizations for young people, located in the United States and Canada, have declared in favor of holding youth peace demonstrations on Armistice Day. With several million members in these bodies, it is planned to stage rallies on every college campus and in every community in North America of a size sufficient to impress public opinion. Both parades and mass meetings are projected, and it is hoped that each demonstration will result in the formation of a permanent local committee to carry on the program for "Christian Youth Peace Action" which the various denominational young people's societies are already formulating. Detailed plans for the Armistice day demonstration, and for the peace crusade to follow it, are being distributed by the Committee on United Youth Program, 203 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago. There never has been a year when the outlook for a worthy celebration of Armistice day has seemed so dismal. But if these young people in Christian Endeavor societies, Baptist Unions, Epworth Leagues and the like really rise to the threat of a world order which is preparing to sacrifice their lives, the day may yet be made a memorable one to the conscience and the thinking of the nation.

Why Not Teams of Pilgrims?

Church of England Newspaper, Sept. 20, 1935.

Dr. Garbett, the Bishop of Winchester, has just completed another walking tour over a section of his diocese. He has tramped about seventy miles, holding services on village greens or in churches, encouraging the clergy and chatting with the laity and especially the children. The posibilities of a tour of this kind are unlimited.

I should like to see bands of trained laymen and women mobilized as pilgrim evangelists going from village to village. I am confident the effect on rural church life would be considerable and such efforts would provide an outlet for the zeal of the laity, who are ready to become "witnesses." It may be recalled that the Archbishop of York said:

> Why should not a team of witness go from one parish to another to join in a campaign of witness, just as they go to play football or cricket?

That is an ideal which should materialize. It is already being done in a few centres. A fortnight ago I had the privilege of accompanying such a team and I was tremendously impressed with the usefulness of such ventures.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

An Important Question Answered

A letter has come to me from one who asks for help in making the venture of faith needed to "discover the Spiritual Universe." In the issue of The Southern Churchman for Sept. 7, there was an article on this page entitled, "Who Will Go For Us?" in which I quoted the words of Dr. Lyman Abbott, Editor of the New York Outlook, written by him shortly before his death. The words were:—"Nothing does this age need more than a rediscovery of the Spiritual universe." There has been great activity in the work of discovering more and more about the physical universe, and my point was that there was vastly more to be gained from the spiritual universe than from the physical, and I appealed to the younger generation to make ventures of faith in this direction to see what comes of it. Some years ago I wrote a letter to Archdeacon Forman, then on the staff of the Church Missions House in New York, and he had it printed in the monthly organ of the Rural Work of the Church. I then thought it might be worth while to have it printed as a leaflet, and as it is closely connected with the question submitted to me in the above mentioned letter, I am using it as the special article for this week's Thousandfold Page. It is as follows:—

The Spiritual Background of the Order of the Thousandfold.

The Thousandfold idea is in itself perfectly simple and easy to understand; namely, that our usefulness may and can be very greatly increased by praying to be made a thousandfold more useful, but the following may help to show the background from which it has come.

I believe myself, that the Church can do her best work by running parallel to Natural Science in developing the resources of the spiritual world just as science is developing the resources of Nature. I would regard Natural Science as a kind of John the Baptist of a new dispensation in preparing the way for it by showing how wonderfully the resources of Nature can be turned to man's account by faith and diligence. The work of the scientists constitutes a challenge to the Church to do a similar work in the spiritual sphere; and it seems as if God is trying to open our eyes to the fact that there are far greater and more wonderful treasures in the spiritual world, which He is even more anxious that we should possess than those in Nature. This, it seems to me, is a much more promising method of procedure than to try and reconcile religion and science by seeking to bring religion within the confines of the natural order.

The question of course arises as to how we can develop the resources of the spiritual world for the benefit of mankind? The answer is that Christ bridged the chasm which separated the natural from the spiritual world. He is the Way to the Father, through whom we can come into direct contact and communion with God. He is also the Way through whom the Spirit of God goes forth to the hearts of men and brings God into living touch and contact with mankind. In making us the members of His Body, Christ is enabled to carry on His work through us just as He used the Body which He assumed when He was born in Bethlehem.

He made this clear to His disciples when He said:—"He that believeth on me (as the Scripture hath said) out of him shall flow rivers of living water. This spake He of the Spirit which they that believe on Him should receive, for the Holy Ghost was not yet given because that Jesus was not yet glorified." It seems clear from this that the New Creation was to be carried out in the same way as the first; that is, through the Holy Spirit, we being the channels through which His power and influence are brought to bear upon the world around us. There is, therefore, something more than our influence at work in our dealings with men. God, Himself, is seeking through us to reach and bless the lives of others. It is evident that our recognition of this fact and our willingness to be used in this way must make it possible for God to do a much greater work than otherwise, because it clears the way for the outpouring of the Divine Spirit according to the promise of Christ,—"Out of him shall flow rivers of living water."

This not only makes the divine resources accessible, but it makes us the medium through which these resources and the needs of humanity may be brought together, and thus the world may be blessed for mare wonderfully than is possible through Natural Science.

To ask to be made a thousandfold more useful, or ten thousandfold, is a practical recognition of the fact that there is a divine work going on through us which we may be entirely unconscious of, but which we believe is actually taking place, because it is God Himself who is at work and not merely ourselves.

We fail to recognize the very important fact that it is God's work and not ours, and that our share in it is similar to the lad's five loaves and two fishes through which Christ fed the five thousand.

To believe that God can do great things through us is not glorifying ourselves but glorifying Him. I expect great things to happen, and though I may not see them I am not in the least discouraged, and the following verses will explain my point of view.

His promise must be true
That He will great things do
Through me if I believe
And thus His power receive.

I may not ever see
All that He does through me,
But yet a tiny part
Will warm and cheer my heart.

And so I go my way
And each day humbly pray
That what He said He'd do
Will in my life come true.

I may say, however, that there is abundant evidence coming in from all quarters to show that the prayer is being wonderfully answered.

The Fall Campaign

Plans of The Field Department of Five Dioceses.

NEWARK.

By George W. Dawson.

THE DIOCESE OF NEWARK commenced its campaign in June, when a Saturday was devoted to a conference of Parish Chairmen of Representatives. Plans for advancement of pariochial life and work were discussed. Stress was laid on the desirability of parish surveys and there was a fine sharing of experience. This led naturally to the Fall Campaign. Canvass methods and organization were gone into thoroughly, and every effort made to develop enthusiasm and efficiency. By means of this conference, canvass leaders from some sixty-five per cent of the parishes and missions were reached. Conference leaders were the Bishop Coadjutor, the Canon Missioner for Missions and the Executive Secretary of the Field Department.

The next step was the preparation of Diocesan publicity material. A booklet was prepared which gives Diocesan Statistics on the cover and states the amount of money required for Diocesan purposes in 1936 and the minimum amount which should be turned over to the National Council. Inside, the items of the budget are set forth and briefly explained, and the whole generously illustrated with pictures. The obligation of the Diocese to the National Council is clearly stated. The Booklet concludes with the list of missionaries from the Diocese who are serving abroad.

Contact with a majority of the Clergy was made at the Annual Clergy Conference in September, when the Executive Secretary of the Field Department urged the fullest possible use of the material being put out by the National Field Department. The Diocesan Booklet was commented on and the campaign briefly discussed. Each Clergyman was given a copy of the Booklet and mimeographed notes on our missionaries and their work. These latter were prepared by Dr. John Wood of the Department of Foreign Missions of the National Council. Each man also received mimeographed copies of notes on canvass methods which were made as the result of the June Conference for laymen. This material was mailed to clergy not present.

In mid-September contact with parish chairmen was made by mail when the Executive Secretary wrote drawing attention to the importance of a chairman's office and suggesting ways of cooperation with the rector.

A direct appeal to vestries and Executive Committees was made by the Bishop who wrote suggesting the amount which each place should endeavor to raise through its canvass for support of Diocesan and General Church Programs.

The Executive Secretary and several lay members of the Field Department are at the service of parishes in organizing the canvass.

Forty thousand copies of the Booklet are printed and will be distributed among the people by the parish committees.

There is a widespread belief that a definite advance from the low mark of recent years will be made this Fall.

CHICAGO.

By Edwin J. Randall.

OUR plans on behalf of the Program of the Church are, in part, as follows:

We had a Conference of the Clergy of the Chicago Metropolitan area Deaneries at St. James' Community House, 666 Rush Street, on Friday, September 27, from 10:30 A. M. until 4:15 P. M.

This was followed by a Conference of Laymen on the same day, and at the same place, from 5 P. M. until 9:30 P. M.

The Conference is to be followed by Conferences in each of the three Chicago Deaneries, and also by Deanery Meetings in the Extra Metropolitan Deaneries.

The Rev. E. L. Souder, one of our Missionaries to China, was with us on September 27, and also at several of the other Conferences, and gave informational and inspirational addresses on Missionary work.

Almost all of our Parishes appoint Parish Chairmen and carry on an organized Every Member Canvass. The degree of organization, however, varies in intensity.

The Publicity Department of the Diocese is cooperating with the Department of Ways and Means in getting out an eight-page folder (illustrated) on the Diocesan and general work of the Church. We shall probably use 20,000 or more of these, and they will be sent free on requisition from the Parishes and Missions. In addition, we plan to have the November issue of the "Diocese", a Program Number, and Mr. Boyle, the Editor, is working on this now.

We plan also to have at our Conference, copies of "The Spirit of Missions," with subscription blanks, and hope not only to dispose of these copies, but also to secure a number of subscriptions. Our Department of Ways and Means passed a resolution several months ago, urging all members of the Diocesan Council and Departments to subscribe for and read "The Spirit of Missions." The Provincial Field Department, of which I am Chairman, is also promoting subscriptions to "The Spirit of Missions" as a part of our Program.

EASTERN OREGON.

By William P. Remington.

EASTERN OREGON is planning a vigorous campaign this fall which will reach every parish and mission with a message of the Forward Movement. A clergy conference was held in the Cove on September 10 and 11. During October teams are to be sent throughout the District to all important centers in order to present the Church's needs and opportunities, as did the teams which were sent out by the National Council last fall after the General Convention. The speakers will stress two things: Recovery and Christian Stewardship. By recovery we mean the discovery of some of the values which are in danger of being lost in American life. There is a precious coin which has been lost on the string of treasures which the householder in the parable had. Perhaps that lost coin in the parable belongs on a string of treasures blessed and consecrated to God. One out of every ten coins which we have should be thus dedicated. The whole string of treasures is spoiled unless there is found one there which belongs to God. This is the only bit of money we can carry with us when we die. It is the symbol of our service and our love to the God who measures what we have gained by what we have poured out in sacrifice and oblations. The Church to which we belong now faces its greatest crisis because some people are withholding their gifts to carry on its work. Recovery will start when we begin to miss the coin dedicated to God from among our treasures. The second step is to call in our friends and neighbors to help us find the coin. We are convinced that there is more money being spent this fall than at any time since the beginning of the Depression. A well conducted Every Member Canvass should be the assistance friends and neighbors give to help each householder find the coin which has been lost.

Christian stewardship is being threatened today by no less a force than Communism. A selfish and greedy capitalism has aroused many to propose new schemes of economy which in the end leave no room for the ownership of private property. A "Share the Wealth" program provides no means whereby each individual is to take responsibility and care of the things which God has given him and takes away from him the privilege of directing the channels in which his gifts are to flow. The Church teaches stewardship which is not a selfish ownership of all that we have but a generous sharing in the appropriate uses to which our possessions should be put.

Groups to discover the duties and responsibilities of Christian Discipleship have been organized throughout the District. They should become the effective agencies whereby the work of Evangelism may be furthered. We are praying fervently, "Lord, prevent us from owning anything which we are unwilling to share with others." This applies not only to our possessions, but to that inestimable gift of God which came through His Son and His teachings.

NORTH CAROLINA.

By David T. Eaton.

THERE is nothing unique about any of the plans which the Feld Department of the Diocese of North Carolina have made for the fall presentation of the Church's Program and the Every Member Canvass. Sensing the sensitiveness of many laymen to continual stress upon financial needs, we have chosen this year in our Diocese to devote ourselves to a campaign of liberal education as to what those needs represent in terms of the church's man power and women power, rather than in terms of the dollars and cents needs for salaries and maintenance in our several mission fields. Not that such figures are not an essential part of the whole missionary picture at the present time, but our Field Department believes that at the foreground of the picture should be made to live missionary heroes and heroines of flesh and blood, valiantly working in schools, and hospitals, and churches, which we at home can visualize in our own imaginations, and not know simply by name.

To this end we are employing all the gifts of modern science, the radio, the motion picture, and the autobile, to paint such a living picture for our people. Our parish chairmen, who are known as Chairmen of the Church's Program, and not simply of the Every Member Canvass, were all chosen in the early summer. They were assembled together with the parsih clergy at a Retreat-Conference on the Church's Program at our diocesan camp centre at Vade Mecum the first of September. There Bishop Tucker furnished us with a vivid and intimate picture of the situation which the church faces in the Orient. A succession of men, many of whom are working in small, inconspicuous missionary fields in our own diocese, gave us all a chance to see what their work was like and what their difficulties and problems are. Departing somewhat from ordinary practice at such gatherings, we invited one of the sainted women of the Diocese to set the spiritual keynote of all our work in a searchingly beautiful meditation. This is the kind of equipment we aimed to give our parish chairmen.

One of our young and enthusiastic laymen with a flair for taking moving pictures has donated his time and equipment and automobile expense to go through the Diocese taking as many reels of moving picture film as he can in our parishes, missions, schools, and orphanage. With these pictures and a "Traveling Team," to consist of the Bishop of the Diocese, a representative of the National Church, a representative of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the Chairmen of the Field Department, we plan to make a two weeks' tour of the Diocese just preceding the Canvass in November, holding public meetings in some twenty centres, of a purely educational and inspirational character. This "Tour" will be climaxed by a Diocesan broadcast from Charlotte by Bishop Penick, which will be the first diocesan-wide broadcast he has made, summing up the objectives of the campaign.

In these plans we are not discounting the importance of reaching our people in small groups. For this purpose a corps of laymen is to be organized, whose function it will be to present in clear, concise form the business and budgetary aspects of the Church's Program in each parish and mission on the Sunday preceding the Canvass.

By way of literature, we are trying to follow the splendid example of the Diocese of Newark by preparing a diocesan pamphlet in attractive form, which will set forth the contribution of this diocese to the world-wide Church in terms of lives that have been offered for service in the field from this diocese, and the places and situations in which they are working.

On the rim of a French 5 franc coin appear the words "Dominus Providebit." We believe that God will provide, if His people are shown the need in terms that they can understand, and in a way which will win from them an answering response of love.

SOUTH FLORIDA.

By J. Mitchell Taylor.

THE Field Department in the Diocese of South Florida is preparing for the most thorough Every Member Canvas the diocese has ever had. In each congregation organizations are being set up and prepared to do the canvassing. Each parish and mission has a canvass committee chairman, appointed by the rector and vestry. The rector and chairmen are selecting helpers, holding study conferences, preparing to do the actual canvassing. Each chairman is required to study The Every Member Canvass Conserving the Spiritual Resources of the Parish. With his helpers, he also studies, The Church Goes Canvassing, Re-Thinking Missions, What Matters in Missions, World Opportunities For the Church and material prepared on our diocesan missions. In congregations where the rector and chairman want help in preparing their canvassers and asking budget we have several capable clergymen and laymen who have volunteered to give their help.

In addition to the local work of clergy, conference will be held in Orlando, October 29. Three Clergy-Chairmen conferences will be held about the middle of November—one each in Miami, Fort Pierce and Tampa. Dr. Reinheimer, chairman of the National Field Department, will be the leader at these conferences. In St. Petersburg, Orlando, and Miami the Sunday before the Canvass begins, three radio broadcasts will be given. The talks will be on Missions in the Diocese and in the World. We believe so much that "in missions is the life of the church," that we are purposely avoiding, as much as possible, any talk about local budgets. It is interesting to note that the congregation that always pays its missionary obligations has very little trouble paying its own bills.

Several of our parishes are using what we call The Group System. That is, zoning the parish and assigning a man in the captaincy of ten (more or less) families in his own community. He will canvass his zone, and during the year do other work in his zone, as may be assigned him. The method is proving very successful in the larger parishes.

Spiritualizing the Every Member Canvass

By H. J. MILLER.

Rector of St. George's Church, Clarendon, Virginia.

THIS is your birthday and since I feel it my duty to do so, here is a gift for you. Best wishes." Such words accompanying a gift from a child to a parent or friend to friend are scarcely to be thought of, but is not a great deal of our giving to further the boundaries of the Kingdom of God here on earth controlled by much of this sentiment—a sense of obligation and duty—rather than a privilege and a delight? Our giving to be acceptable to the Heavenly Father must be "an outward expression of an inner and spiritual grace," if our weekly contributions to the parish, the diocese and the work of the National Church are not to bear the tinge of the unspeakable sentiment of the first sentence of this account.

St. George's Church in Clarendon has always sought to cooperate as far as possible with Diocesan plans in the Every Member Canvass. Every suggestion and plan has been used, the fullest cooperation the objective. The evolution of the Every Member Canvass during the present rectorate can best illustrate the experience of this church.

The Fall Campaigns of 1929 and 1930 were conducted in this spirit. Every effort was made to instruct and enthuse not only the canvassers but also the members and friends who were to be contacted with a view to securing pledges which would meet the required budget needs. Each year additional funds had to be raised either through special efforts or collections or group activities.

The Campaign of 1931 was different. Severel members of the Vestry were strongly of the opinion that a personal canvass of the communicants of the church should be avoided, loyalty to the church and its program should be sufficient incentive for the voluntary placing of the pledges for the following year in the offering-plates on designated Sundays of November. Missionary speakers and special sermons as well as literature sent through the mails sought to make the appeal for loyalty. But success did not crown this experiment. It was necessary for the Vestry to conduct a campaign in December in order that sufficient funds might be pledged to meet the obligations of the following year.

The effort the following year (1932) took on a different complexion. Special cards with a series of questions concerning the life of the parish and its activities were used by the canvassers as a basis for a conversation between the parish representative and the communicant approached. In addition speakers and sermons and literature were used to instruct and prepare for the Canvass. The results that year were better than the previous three years, but not satisfactory.

Everyone who was concerned for the growth and development of the parish both financially and spiritually felt the need of a changed method. Our giving had not been sufficiently spiritualized, the sense of duty and obligation was very strong both on the part of the canvassers and membership. This was felt to be most unwholesome and devitalizing. Where such giving is involved, usually the "Gift without the giver is bare." Where the weekly contributions of a parish take on the complexion of dues or assessments to be met, the spiritual content of such giving is usually very low and therefore not helpful to the giver and surely not acceptable according to the spirit of Jesus Christ.

IN 1933 a complete change was made. The emphasis was placed entirely on the spiritual plane. A rededicated and reconsecrated life to Jesus Christ, it was felt, would change the motive of giving and help the giver in his spiritual pilgrimage toward living the Christ way here and now. In cooperation with the churches in the community of other communions, the parish entered into a campaign to secure definite pledges from the communicants to increase their spiritual life and demonstrate their aspirations through the suggested program of the Church. More regular attendance at the Lord's Table, increased regularity at Morning Prayer, establishment of the Family Altar in the home, personal and private devotional periods, serving the parish in special ways not heretofore performed, such as serving on committees, affiliation with service groups in the parish, attending the Church School as scholars or teaching a class, making a pledge of financial support where that had not been done previously, or increasing present pledges; all these and other items were suggested as ways and means of increasing the personal and individual spiritual lives of the members of the parish. It will be noted that the financial was only incidental. These spiritual pledges were signed by the individuals, placed in sealed envelopes addressed to the rector. Canvassers were instructed to secure both the spiritual and financial pledges of their prospects. Financial pledges were placed in sealed envelopes addressed to the Parish Treasurer. Canvassers did not know the amounts which their prospects had been subscribing nor the pledge for the following year. Every effort was made to emphasize the spiritual and the results are most gratifying.

In 1934 the campaign was conducted in the following manner. Four weekly bulletins were mailed during the month of November, the burden of each bulletin being a particular phase of the work of our Church, Diocesan or National. Usually there was an enclosure of some piece of printed matter prepared by the National Council or the Field Board of the Diocese. Attention was called in the bulletin to special features of the enclosure. The budget for both parish and diocese were distributed in this manner.

The last bulletin contained the spiritual pledge cards and the financial pledge cards with envelopes addressed to the rector and treasurer. Special services of prayer and meditation were held each Wednesday evening of the month, attended by the canvassers and communicants. On the First Sunday of November twenty men took half-hour periods each, kneeling at the prayer desk in the quiet church between 12:30 and 10:30 P. M., using prayers prepared by the rector for the spiritual redidication and reconsecration of themselves and their fellow communicants to a fuller and richer life of service and devotion to Jesus Christ. The second Sunday twenty women entered into a similar day of Prayer. The Third Sunday twenty young people had their half-hour periods of prayer and the last Sunday another group of twenty women knelt in the church during the above hours. A total of eighty persons who at their appointed time prayed for the spiritual growth and development of the parish.

The first contact of the canvassers (carefully selected and instructed) with their prospects was that of securing their attendance at Morning Prayer of the Sunday which opened our ten-day Campaign (closing on Thanksgiving Day). The service was planned to enthuse and inspire spiritual growth and development and participation to the fullest extent in the suggestions made on the spiritual pledge cards. Those persons absent on this Sunday were again contacted, to secure their attendance at the following Sunday service. In these two services the canvassers succeeded in bringing almost 90 per cent of the communicants into the church in actual attendance. Spiritual and financial pledge cards were returned in their sealed envelopes to the team captains who were the vestry-men of the parish. These twelve captains presented the pledges at the Thanksgiving Day Service in a special offering at which time was used the prayer—"And here we offer and present unto Thee, O Lord, our selves, our souls and bodies to be a reasonable holy and living sacrifice unto Thee." Finances or the budget were never once alluded to at any time during the church services, the mails were used to acquaint the people with the need, but the effort was entirely spiritual, knowing that a rededicated and reconsecrated follower of Jesus Christ will without urging or high pressure salesmanship methods give that which he can afford to give to the broadening of the boundaries of the Kingdom of God.

THE RESULTS—a very definite increase in attendance at the services of the Church, in organization meetings and activities and a total pledged which exceeded the amount asked for to such an extent that the Vestry was enabled thereby to make several additions to the budget which were sorely needed but which it was felt would have to be postponed to another time. The collections for 1935 for nine months of these pledges have enabled the Vestry to meet all its obligations, including the additions made after the canvass. Spiritualized giving is possible.

For our current campaign next month, plans are completed and work is going forward along the lines suggested above, with one noteworthy exception. The year 1936 will be a "Venture in Faith" for this parish. This church, which has never sought to raise funds by the questionable method of card parties and dances, will conduct an experiment, by going out of the business world, and eliminating any activities for which tickets are to be sold or admissions charged. We will seek during 1936 to place all the finances which may be secured for the parish obligations on a voluntary basis and avoid ticket selling in any form. Organizations heretofore devoting their entire time to money-raising will now have opportunity to increase their efforts for the missionary work of the parish, diocese and general church. Christian Culture and inspiration will now have a greater part in their group meetings which previously has not been possible because of the primary necessity of raising funds for the parish. The social program of these organizations and the parish as a whole will be increasingly stressed. We hope and pray for the success of the venture, laying claim only to the promise that by genuine faith even financial mountains may be removed, the rough places made smooth and the crooked places made straight, that the Spirit of the Living Christ may dwell in the hearts of the communicants of this parish.

We venture boldly forward, seeking and praying only for His Blessing.

Forward Movement-Is It Coming?

By ARTHUR M. SHERMAN,

Member of the Forward Movement Staff.

"WATCHMAN, tell us of the night." This is the cry which has arisen from many hearts throughout Christendom in these days, as they have looked out upon the great pagan areas of life—areas economic, social, racial, national and international, as well as geographic, in the lands across the sea where Christ's Church is in the beginning of its service. In the face of desperate world needs we have realized the fact that we Christian people, to whose keeping has been committed the Gospel of Christ, the power to solve every ill of mankind, have not moved forward with faith, conviction and unity to our task of building a new and better world. Today we may thank God that there are signs that "the morning cometh." There are signs that our own Church is coming to a new understanding of its task and a new dedication to it. One of the evidences of this new spirit was the calling into existence of the Forward Movement to "reinvigorate the Church's life and to rehabilitate its work." Out of the great longing heart of the Church this movement came. It came from God and it looks to God for its success.

When the Joint Commission on the Forward Movement met in Chicago last December in its first session after appointment by General Convention, faced with this tremendous responsibility laid upon it, it spent the first morning of its wo-day meeting in prayer. At least one member of the Commission went up to this meeting intending to resign his membership because of the pressure of parish duties. When he saw, however, that this was not just another organization or campaign, but a determined search for spiritual revival, he gave up all thought of his resignation and threw himself wholeheartedly into the task. It was in a spirit of penitence and waiting upon God that the Forward Movement began and is carrying on its work.

Cheering evidences that the Church has determined to go forward, come in the reports from the diocesan clergy conferences on the Forward Movement which have been held in September throughout the Church. These have witnessed great searchings of heart for the cause of our inability to make the Church such an instrument as Christ can triumphantly use, a spirit of courage and determination and much thought of the way to move forward. These conferences are the forerunners of others in which the implications of the Forward Movement will be further considered. At the close of one conference, the Bishop said, "We are at the beginning of a new day in the life of the Church in this diocese." At the annual Convocation of the District of South Dakota, the great event of the year in the life of that missionary district, Bishop Maxon presented the cause of the Forward Movement. Bishop Roberts writes of it, "We had a very large attendance present and every one is saying that it was the greatest Convocation we have ever had. I am sure that clergy and laymen alike are going home with a clearer vision of our Church membership, which is discipleship. I have a big faith that it is going to result in a deepening of the spiritual life and an enlargement of our Church life here in South Dakota." This report is typical of the spirit of all the conferences.

Definite Diocesan Programs.

Definite recommendations for diocesan programs and methods of going forward have been drawn up. In the Diocese of Western Massachusetts for example, following the conference on the Forward Movement, it was recommended there be Pre-Lent missions for men with the object of initiating a crusade campaign to bring the indifferent, the back-sliders and the unchurched to missions of conversion to be held during Lent. The dioceses of Washington and Rhode Island are among those planning diocesan missions in the spirit of a forward movement. Other dioceses are recommending a definite rule of life for their communicants.

Another hopeful result has been the development of wider plans for the use of the lay membership of the Church in the work of evangelism and other forms of direct Christian service. Not the least among these have been the renewed emphasis on the opportunities and duties of vestrymen and the exhortation that part of each vestry meeting be set aside for the instruction and consideration of the meaning of the Church of Christ.

The attempt of the Forward Movement to bring the Church back to habits of daily Bible reading and prayer have also met with much hearty cooperation on the part of the clergy. The response in purchase and distribution of the Bible reading pamphlets has been such that they have now reached a total of 1,761,233. In many cases these have been carefully distributed with some word of personal exhortation. There is still a great group in the Church who need to be reached and won to the life of daily devotion. We must not slacken our efforts until the pamphlets are not only wisely distributed but used and the whole Church helped back to the Bible and a life of prayer. A decided movement toward it has begun.

In response to a widespread demand, the Forward Movement is continuing the Bible Reading with comments for the coming year. A conference of a group of men who will be asked to write these will be held at the College of Preachers in Washington the week beginning November 11.

These are some of the reasons for the hope of an awakened Church. More than this, outside of our own communion, outside our own nation, the Spirit of God is moving the hearts of men. Calls which have come to the office of the Forward Movement in Cincinnati from Christian men and women, pastors and laymen outside the Episcopal Church, asking for the literature and distributing it to their congregations, evidences the same heart-hunger for revival. From a diocese of the Church in Canada a letter came saying, "We are initiating similar action to the Forward Movement and we want to know how our sister communion is going about it, especially as you are getting results."

In addition to the Kingdom of God Movement in Japan and the Five Year Movement among the Christians in China, word has recently come that a Forward Movement in Evangelism has been inaugurated by the National Council in India. It aims at enlisting all the Christians of India in one great army of evangelistic volunteers, each bringing his or her own special gifts and grace into the task of witness-bearing. Believing that India arises to a new national life, Christians must supply the regenerating and reconstructing factor for the individual and society.

Beginning With Me.

It is encouraging to note that in all these movements the emphasis is placed upon the revival of religion as the one hope for a reconstructed society. There must always be emphasis on personal discipleship, but it is never an end in itself. If religion ends with the individual Christian it ends. The Church of Christ is not simply a haven for the weary and the troubled —it is that and the only sure haven—but it is far more than that; it is the force which is to build a happier world where wars shall cease and opportunity for abundant living shall be given to all. The elimination of greed, ruthless competition, exploitation of the under-privileged, the spirit of ill-will and suspicion and of fear; the things which handicap human life and make our world the troubled place it is today, can come only as individuals get rid of this same spirit in their own hearts. If the Kingdom is to come around us it must first come within us. Hence the need for our conversion and for a religious basis for the better world life. We make our prayer for revival of the Church the prayer of the Chinese Church, "Lord, revive Thy Church, beginning with me."

And then for each one of us our part in the great task! God will make clear to us what it is as we look to Him for guidance and let Him make us ready for it. It may be doing more unselfishly, whole-heartedly, and less critically what we are doing. It may be seeking to bring back nominal church members in our own parish—it surely is more faithful and regular use of prayer. It may be right in our own homes. In one parish after the rector had preached a memorable sermon on the Forward Movement one woman communicant was stirred to seek the members of her own household and brought her husband and four others in the home into the life of the church, through confirmation.

If we are going to have a Forward Movement which will get somewhere we can learn much from the zeal of the communists who are groping for world salvation. We are told that they work at earning their living until five o'clock or whatever the time for going home may be and they then begin each day the real work of their lives which is to spread the principles of the cause in which they believe and to win others to it. No wonder with such sacrificial service this movement grows as it does. What would be the power of the Christian Church if you and I were as earnest for our cause, the bringing of the Kingdom of God and all its joy to a needy world?

BOOK REVIEWS

THE FATE OF MAN IN THE MODERN WORLD: By Nicholas Berdyaev. Cloth. Pp. 120. Morehouse Publishing Company, New York City, New York. Price, $1.25.

The author has already written his "The End of Our Time," along the line of the present issue; so we are prepared for his convictions herein set forth. It is a challenging call to the recognition of our changing situation.

We are not surprised when he declares that the present economic and social conditions are not better than in the feudal periods of history. Instead of barons and serfs, we have capital and labor, the rich and the poor, notwithstanding our age is crowned by such marvelous provisions for the good of all. Our author asserts, "that liberty in social life is a paradox, that it easily transports into its opposite, and becomes distorted into a conditional falsehood." "The world is caught, just now, between this sort of false, decomposing liberty on the one hand, and the complete denial of liberty, the dictated world-view, on the other." There is one striking chapter on Dehumanization. It tells the tale.

And yet, to abolish personal initiative, which is our synonym of freedom, and of personal acquisition, is to surrender to the State, in the complete loss of individuality. "In Germany, radicalism has taken the form of collective religious insanity." Being a Russian and fully cognizant of conditions in his native land, he has no small measure of contempt for the Marxian world of the Soviets. So again, "The world is entering an epoch of Caesarism."

The author is a Christian, being a member of the Orthodox Eastern Church. But his remedy for the ills he so acutely outlines is in the practice of the ethics of Christianity, which this professing Christian world (Germany and Italy, for example) is rejecting. Can he not see that the Word of God has provided a program of restoration in the coming of the King of kings and Lord of lords, whose advent the really spiritual believers of the centuries have looked for and longed?

However, this thought-provoking book should be read by every student of history and economics. It is packed with valuable suggestions which drive the mind of the reader to deep contemplation.

WAR IS A RACKET: By General Smedey D. Butler, The Round Table Press. New York City. 52 pages, price $1.00.

General Butler gives his interpretation from the military point of view as to "Who Makes The Profits"?, "Who Pays the Bills"?, "How To Smash This Racket," and ends with "To Hell With War" he believes that war is a racket. "It has always been. It is possibly the oldest, easily the most profitable, surely the most vicious." And this true and most thought-provoking statement, "It is the only one in which the profits are reckoned in dollars and the losses in lives." This is a stirring little book in a stirring time.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mrs. W. Shelly Humphreys

Woman's Auxiliary Executive Board Holds Fall Meeting

No question confronting the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary at its September meeting was felt to be more urgent than that of methods for working toward world peace. It was introduced, as at previous Board meetings, by the committee on Christian Citizenship, of which Mrs. Edward M. Cross has been chairman. Convictions among Board members vary widely, but all agreed in the action as finally adopted in a statement which reads:

"The women of the Church at Atlantic City in Triennial Meeting assembled expressed themselves as opposed to participation in international conflict, and we, the members of the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, in the face of the critical condition in international relationships, believe that as Christians we must work for the prevention of war, and we believe in the power of united action." The Board therefore resolved: "That we hereby urge diocesan and parish officers to bring this statement before the women of the Church to the end that we may stand together for the cause of peace."

It was further recommended, "That after taking this position we do all in our power to strengthen ourselves to be true to our conviction and avoid succumbing to propaganda and emotional appeal; we suggest specifically that we, the women of the Church, spend a period of time each day in home or church in prayer for peace and in meditation, seeking the guidance of God toward our individual responsibility."

The Board secured the research director of World Peaceways, Mr. J. Max Weis, for an address at luncheon, to tell about the efforts for peace education made by World Peaceways. The Board recommends that women take out membership in this society, World Peaceways, Inc., 103 Park Avenue, New York City; that they secure and sign the pledge issued by Peaceways which promises support to the federal administration in its efforts to maintain peace.

After the Holy Communion service on Saturday morning the Board remained for a half-hour intercession for peace, remembering especially the families of men in Europe who have been called out for military service.

Day of Prayer.

The Quiet Day for Prayer, which is to be observed again this year on Armistice Day, is to be shared by the men's organizations, such as the Laymen's League and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. The Board's committee, of which Mrs. H. H. Pierce has been chairman, asked Bishop Hobson for advice as to how the Forward Movement might regard the Day of Prayer. He commended the plans and suggested asking the men's societies to cooperate.

Relation to Church's Program.

The relation of women to the Church's program and the aims and methods of Auxiliary field work, were two subjects discussed at length in the Board meeting.

On the first question the Board felt that more recognition should be given by the Auxiliary branches and by parishes, to the work of some professional women who are communicants, regular attendants, and contributors, but who may not be connected with any parish organization; women whose work may be as vital as any other in building up a Christian world, women whose work is an expression of their religion. The Board recommended that the Auxiliary should try to make contact with every such woman, recognizing her contribution to the Church and hoping to win her personal interest in the Church's whole program. This is already done in some parishes and dioceses.

Another question in connection with the relation of women to the Church is, What responsibility have women for the Church's program, for the budget, for the various projects of the Church? The Board felt that the women's responsibility is definite and should be re-emphasized. More systematic education is needed, working toward the ideal of having every woman, every Church member, in fact, a contributor to the Church's program. This is no new question, of course. The Board felt it worth-while to call attention again to the "Message" issued by the Auxiliary Triennial which met in New Orleans in 1925, which reads:

We are dedicated and committed to:

1. The payment in full of all general Church quotas.
2. The overcoming of luke-warmness by deeper spiritual understanding and greater consecration through prayer and the sacraments.
3. The awakening of the women of the Church to more effective service for Christ.
4. United parish effort.
5. The strengthening of our rural and foreign-born work.
6. Closer relationship with the missionaries in the field.
7. Furthering in every way the spirit of united Christian effort.
8. The carrying out of a constructive program of education for peace, and the right use of our best efforts and strongest influence toward the promotion of international and interracial good-will.

Whereas: Realizing that only through personal dedication to Jesus Christ, our Lord, can we hope to bring to fruition our human endeavors, be it

Resolved: That we rededicate ourselves to the service of our Lord Jesus Christ, to making the strength of our deeds the measure of our faith, to a sincere and simple effort in our daily living to follow with humility the example of our Saviour.

Auxiliary's Field Work.

The second general question discussed by the Board concerned the Auxiliary's field work. The leading thought brought out was that field work must aim increasingly at the intensive training of local leaders, in parish and diocese, and in the development of local responsibility for follow-up work. The Board now has a committee on field work which will present a program at the December Board meeting and which will at all times cooperate closely with the National Council's Field Department.

United Thank Offering.

The United Thank Offering Committee, of which Miss Sallie C. Deane has been chairman, reported that while the U. T. O. for the current triennium is below that of the same date in the last triennium, increases are reported by some parishes and dioceses, and the welcome point about the increase is that they are usually due to a greater number of givers rather than to larger gifts. It is also reported from several parishes that more effective work results from a U. T. O. Committee than from a custodian alone.

MISSIONARY WORK IN ANKING RESUMED UNDER DIFFICULTIES

Past Year Has Been Especially Hard Because of Closing of Banks and Famine Refugees.

Anking, China.—Missionaries have returned from brief vacations and the regular routine of house work, teaching, visiting, grading papers, entertaining company, nursing the sick, planning meals, and trying to do something for suffering humanity when so little can be done, has started again in earnest.

The whole year past has been especially hard. There has been more sickness than usual, the Red Army has been too near for comfort, and the streets have been constantly full of famine refugees whose food consists mainly of bark and roots. Fortunately for these poor people the weather has been good in recent months, and there has been a little more to eat since the harvest of wheat. It is earnestly hoped that the coming winter will be a mild one.

Money is very scarce, particularly so since the closing of the banks where the missionaries had their small funds on deposit. To make the situation more difficult the value of gold has decreased from between four and five dollars to $2.37.

However, in the face of all the difficulties the work is making progress. This year, the first in nine years, our Nurses' Training School had a commencement when nine girls and one young man received their diplomas. One significant fact is that every girl in the graduating class is a Christian, and the young man is expected to be confirmed soon. A larger graduating class is expected for next year.

THREE NEW BUILDINGS OPENED IN NEVADA DURING PAST YEAR

Reno, Nevada.—Building has been going forward in the Missionary District of Nevada during the year. A chapel has been completed at Yerington, the county seat of Lyon county.

At Wadsworth, on the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, the Bishop purchased an abandoned school house from the Government at a cost of $25, and by spending $400 tore down a part of the building and used the lumber to remodel and repair the remaining part, put on a new roof and painted the building, inside and outside, and provided necessary furniture. The new place of worship and service was ready for dedication on St. Michael's Day.

In the northeast part of the District at the little desert town of Contact where in one year three school principals resigned because of the depraved conditions, and where finally the Bishop was asked by the teachers to send in the Deaconess, residing some sixty miles distant, to see if she could do something to raise the standards, a fine old stone building and the lot on which it stands and on which is a good well were purchased at a small expense and put in readiness for services.

Deaconess Fracker has week day services and religious instruction, and in two years has gone a long way toward evangelizing the entire community.

There is no such thing as Domestic and Foreign missions; these are only geographical designations. There is only one field—the world.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

Prayer for Cuba.

O Lord, without whom our labor is but lost, and with whom Thy servants go forth as the mighty; we humbly beseech Thee to prosper all works in Thy Church undertaken according to Thy holy will, especially in the Missionary District of Cuba, and grant unto Thy laborers a pure intention, patient faith, sufficient success upon earth, and the blessedness of serving Thee in heaven; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SPECIALIST IN AGRICULTURE APPOINTED TO SOUTH INDIA

Mr. Brinkley Snowden of University of Tennessee Gives Services and Pays Own Expense.

Dornakal, South India.—Mr. Brinkley Snowden, a young graduate of the University of Tennessee, who has specialized in agriculture, has volunteered for service in South India, and has been appointed by the National Council.

Mr. Snowden has wanted for some time to work in India, and the Bishop of Dornakal has wanted him to come, but the National Council having no funds has not been able to accept his offer, and it was not until Mr. Snowden was in a position to finance himself that the National Council was able to give him an official appointment.

The arrival of Mr. Snowden in Dornakal adds a third missionary in this District from the Episcopal Church in the United States, the Rev. and Mrs. George Van B. Shriver having come in October, 1933.

The Church in Dornakal is growing very rapidly, the Christian population having increased in the past ten years from about 100,000 to 200,000. The missionary staff is quite inadequate for the task, there being only about 150 clergy. An addition therefore to the staff is very much needed.

We know of no parish which is doing good work locally that is not actively interested in the program of the church throughout the world.

NEWS FROM THE FRONT WANTED.

The Southern Churchman, believing that missions constitute the life of the Church, hereby invites the missionaries of our Church to write articles to this paper describing the work they are doing in an interesting way, so that our people may know more of what is going on in the mission field. CHAPEL OF OUR REDEEMER IN OSAKA BEING REBUILT

Funds in Hand for About One Half of Cost. Additional Help Needed to Complete Building.

Osaka, Japan.—The Chapel of Our Redeemer, of the Widely Loving Society, destroyed by the typhoon which hit Osaka on September 21, 1934, is being rebuilt, and funds are now in hand for about one half of the cost. Ground was broken in the early spring, and at the present time work on the foundation is well under way.

Raising funds for the building of this Chapel has been and is a great undertaking. Mr. Katsuno Kobashi says: "Our friends have lovingly responded in steady and prayerful contributions, and with renewed strength and deeper consecration we wait on His wisdom."

The work cannot proceed unless additional funds are received. The congregation realizes that help must come as a result of consecrated and sacrificial prayers. Mr. Kobashi continues: "We will trust in the Lord, and continue steadfastly in His love; He knows our every need and will supply it."

The mission is located in a splendid community, being only a seven minutes walk from the station. A new paved street has recently been built by the mission leading to the main gate.

(Note: A letter recently received by Bishop Tucker asks for prayers that the mission may be completed without undue delay. Let us join with the Bishop in prayer for this worthy enterprise, and anyone wishing to make a contribution in money may sent it to the Southern Churchman which will immediately forward it to Osaka.)

DISTRICT OF PUERTO RICO REPORTS STEADY PROGRESS

San Juan, Puerto Rico.—Despite devastating hurricanes, famines, depressions, poverty and cuts in missionary appropriations, the District of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, according to a report recently issued by the Rt. Rev. Charles B. Colemore, D. D., the Church moves forward.

Last year there were 38 adult and 728 infant baptisms, which brings the total number of baptized persons to 11,964. There were 564 confirmations, the present number of communicants being 5,605. Church school pupils number 4,700.

A high level of missionary enthusiasm has also been maintained. Contributions from the mission stations for local, diocesan and general Church objects totaled slightly less than $15,000. The Good Friday offering was $101, Every Man's Offering $65, nearly $400 was given for diocesan missions, and the District paid its full quota of $1,520 to the National Council.

After many other cuts to meet reductions in appropriations from the National Council for 1935, the Puerto Rico and Virgin Islands staff accepted an additional salary cut of four and one half per cent in addition to the previous ten per cent cut.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

The Work of an Army Chaplain

Leader: About fifteen hundred years ago there was stationed in the city of Tours, France, a Roman Captain named Martin. On one occasion, when riding home from church, he saw a poor beggar shivering from cold who asked him for alms. Captain Martin, having no money, but pitying the man's nakedness, immediately drew his sword and cut his soldier's coat in half and handed half to the beggar. Then, so runs the legend, the beggar straightened up, and his face changed and the Christ stood before Martin. Later Martin gave up the army and went into the ministry. But he always kept the half of the coat and displayed it whenever he held services as a precious relic. After his death it was still kept with great care and was called "The little coat," or simply "Capella," the Latin for it. It was still shown at religious services, so that people said, we will go to the capella or chapella, or later to the chapel. The minister who had charge of the coat was called "Capellain" and later "Chaplain." In the army he often had no church in which to have services, so army services were especially associated with chaplains.

Today in the American army the chaplains have a branch of the Service of their own. They dress as do other officers, except that the insignia of their branch, a silver cross, is worn on his collar, as an infantryman wears his crossed rifles. A Chaplain may have the rank of 1st lieutenant, captain, major or lieutenant colonel. The rank is shown on his shoulders by the single bar, double bar, or leaf of gold or silver, as the case may be.

His duties are not only to hold services, but to be the adviser in spiritual matters to every officer or man in his regiment. There are two chaplains to a regiment usually. Officers are divided into line officers and staff officers. Line officers have charge of troops, but staff officers are advisers to the commanding officers and collect information for them. The chaplain is a staff officer and has the duty, in addition to his religious duties, of advising the colonel of the morale and spirit of the men of the regiment.

His duties are slightly different in time of war from those in peace, as he has more to do and less to do it with than in time of peace. But the same duties he has in peace are simply extended.

As soon as a man enters the army he is sent to the chaplain, who sympathetically explains to him the difference between civilian and army life and tries to win his friendship, so that in time of need he will come to the chaplain for advice. Later on, if a man gets in trouble and is sent to the guard house, the chaplain will pay him a visit to see what he can do for him. Very often the man in trouble will want the chaplain to be his lawyer, so the chaplain has to be up on all the fine points of the law of military life. This is a part of his duty.

Another duty of the chaplain is to try to see that his men are supplied with note paper and to see that they keep in touch with home. This is very important, as many a man in the army will not write home unless his chaplain urges him to do so. If a man is hurt or wounded or dies, it is the chaplain's job to see that the man's family is notified and his property sent home.

The chaplain must, of course, be a regular minister of some denomination, but once in the army he is responsible to his superior officer primarily, just as any other soldier is, but he is expected to keep in touch with his denomination, so that it will be sympathetic with the work he is trying to do among the soldiers. He is the minister of all the soldiers in his command, regardless of their denomination or religion. Thus a certain Protestant minister gave Confession to a Jew.

Another job of the chaplain is often to look after the recreation of his men. Thus, he runs the movie show, gets up the baseball, football and basketball teams, arranges dances and fishing and hunting parties, and helps them to have all sorts of good times that are healthy recreation.

Again, the chaplain has to look after the welfare of the soldier population. This not only means soldiers, but the wives and children of soldiers. Thus, in a certain army post, an enlisted man was found to have stolen a great amount of goods from the government. So he had to go to the Federal military prison. But he had a wife and several children, so the chaplain had to take up a collection to see that they did not starve.

Then when time of war comes the chaplain is to go with the soldiers as one of them into the trenches and over the top. A great number of chaplains were killed in action during the World War, not fighting, for the chaplain may not wear arms, but simply encouraging the men and especially helping them when they fall.

Another very pleasant duty of a chaplain is what are called his "Morale Classes." In them he is given the duty of telling his regiment its history, so as to make them proud of it and anxious to keep up its good record. By this means he can be most influential in shaping a regiment into one that will be loyal to its history and to the commanding officer. He also represents the men to the commanding officer, and the commanding officer to the men, so he should be warm friends of both.

What we have been speaking of are the duties of the chaplains with Regular troops. But Chaplains, like other officers of the army, may be said to be of three groups, the Regulars, the National Guard and the Reserve.

The Guard Chaplains are not in the Service at all times, but usually hold a Parish in some place where there is a company of the National Guard. His usual duties are to attend drill nights, for which he is paid, and to be of assistance to any of the men of the command that he may serve. Then he goes to Camp for a couple of weeks each year, when his duties are those of a regular chaplain when on active duty.

The Reserve Chaplains are assigned or attached to skeleton regiments, or hospitals on paper, but do not have as much service as the Guard Chaplains. They hold parishes in their denomination just as any other minister would. In peace time they hope for two weeks of active duty training every year, but this is a privilege that can be given to only a few, on account of the sparsity of funds usually given for training of the Organized Reserve of the Army.

Reserve Chaplains have one privilege that comes rarely. It is the service with the Citizens Military Training Camps. These are groups of boys of high school and college age who give a month of their time to the Government in order to prepare themselves for an emergency, so that if war should be declared, they could be used as non-commissioned officers. Those who complete the four years of training are given commissions in the Reserve.

In these Camps the Chaplain usually serves only two weeks, but his opportunity is a great one in that time. Sometimes he is called in to talk to a homesick boy, and he visits the sick daily, as well as the prison. Then, too, there are often groups of young people who have been active in their churches at home, and he is at times called on to have "Vesper Services" or informal meetings for them, at which they like to exchange religious experiences with each other.

In one such camp a chaplain was asked by the Commanding Officer to take a page from Military Schools and to secure some young ladies who would act as sponsors to the Companies. This proved to be a great morale builder for the drills, and, of course, gave the girls that were selected almost, if not quite, as much a thrill as the boys.

Thus, we see that a Chaplain is a Clergyman who simply has a peculiar charge, in that his parishoners are men and in uniform, so that he, too, wears it. And, in that he can be of great assistance to men in a group and as a group, as few clergymen in civilian life can.

RELIGIONS COMPARED.

Here is a striking and illuminating comparison between the various faiths of the world.

Greece said: "Be moderate—know thyself."

Rome said: "Be strong—order thyself."

Confucianism says: "Be superior—correct thyself."

Buddhism says: "Be disillusioned—annihilate thyself."

Hinduism says: "Be separated—merge thyself."

Mohammedanism says: "Be submissive—bend thyself."

Judaism says: "Be holy—conform thyself."

Modern materialism says: "Be industrious—enjoy thyself."

Christianity says: "Be Christlike—give thyself."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

KANAWHA CONVOCATION.

The Forward Movement Committee of the Kanawha Convocation, meeting in Charleston, W. Va., drew up the following objectives as an outcome of the round-table discussion on the Movement led by Canon Gilbert P. Symons. The objectives will be used by all thirty-four parishes and missions of the Convocation.

Spiritual Objectives for Kanawha Convocation.

The Diocese: An effort towards a joint clergy conference.

The Clergy: 1. Spend 30 minutes each morning in prayer and meditation. 2. Greater familiarity with the Bible through constant reading and 30 minutes each day on some particular subject. 3. More diligent preparation of sermons. 4. Emphasis on regular parish visitation; at least ten visits a week and where feasible have prayers. 5. So living as to set an example of the Christian life.

The Congregation: At least one week day service in each church with emphasis on Advent and Lent.

The Vestry: 1. Service of induction and other efforts to inculcate sense of responsibility to Church in other things than temporalities. 2. Some effort at each meeting towards a spiritual end.

Lay People: 1. To use and diligently the literature of the Forward Movement. 2. In Church at least once each Sunday. 3. Attendance at week day service and use of the church for private meditation and prayer. 4. Every member a worker in some parish organization. 5. Grace at every meal. 6. Subscribe to a national and diocesan paper.

Organizations: A spiritual objective for each.

Ultimate Objective: A mission in each parish and mission in 1936.

Forward Movement Committee for the Convocation comprise: the Rev. Frank Cady, the Rev. George Shirley, the Rev. John Gass, the Rev. William Meade, the Rev. Carroll Brooke, the Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt.

THE ONE DAY'S INCOME PLAN STILL IN USE.

The National Council's treasurer has received a check for $500 to be sent to Hankow for relief of Chinese sufferers in recent floods. Five other checks, from $2 to $25, has been received for the same purpose; also $150 and $7 for the "One Day's Income Plan," and $22.80 to be divided between Alaska and Puerto Rico for the current year.

When Newton D. Baker was Mayor of Cleveland he had an idea which resulted in gifts of thousands of dollars to the Church. In January, 1915, he suggested that citizens of Cleveland give one day's income for relief of the city's destitute. Mr. E. Walter Roberts, who was then assistant treasurer of the Board of Missions, saw a report of the Mayor's idea in a New York paper and shortly afterward the Board had adopted it as a means of securing a necessary emergency offering. The One Day's Income Plan was announced in The Spirit of Missions for March, 1915, and at once found a ready response. The idea appealed to all sorts of people, to men and women with large incomes and to children selling eggs and berries. Gifts of one day's gross income are still received and help to meet the Church's budget. Some donors have made it a regular annual gift for many years. The $7 above mentioned was sent with a note saying, "I still enjoy sending my one day's income and I hope I shall be able to continue doing so."

MEMORIAL SERVICE TO FORMER LEADERS.

A memorial service to four leaders of Church Mission of Help was held recently at the biennial Conference of the Society, at St. Mary's Hospital, New York.

The Rev. Robert Scott Chalmers, one of the charter members of the Baltimore CMH; Father Huntington, founder of the Order of the Holy Cross and, with Bishop Manning, one of the founders of the first CMH—that in New York; Bishop Booth, President of the Vermont CMH, and Mrs. Lewis Seymour, President of CMH in Central New York; all died suddenly within the past few months, each leaving a distinct and wide gap in the ranks of the Society.

The Rev. Shirley O. Hughson, Superior of the Order of the Holy Cross and Chaplain of the New York CMH, was the celebrant.

The Louisville Council of Churches: Action of the Committee on International Peace and Good Will.

Whereas, The public press of October 3 quotes the Secretary of State as having said before a public gathering in the National's Capital:

"Present dangers are a challenge to the Church to engage in what should be nothing less than a flaming crusade.

"The Church is a sponsor and advocate of peace and at this moment when there is a menace of war that may not be confined to any two nations, but spread among several nations, there is a weighty obligation resting on the church to exert itself in every conceivable manner to impress the people with a hatred of war and a love of peace," and

Whereas, One of the prominent American Generals of the World War said that every dollar spent, and every drop of blood shed in another war could be laid at the door of the Christian Church; and,

Whereas, By modern inter-communication and transportation, the whole world has been compacted into a neighborhood, and war anywhere almost inevitably means a conflagration spreading everywhere; therefore be it

Resolved, That this committee on Inter-National Peace and Good Will calls upon the pastors of our churches constantly in public worship to implore the God of Peace to remove from our troubled world the threat and danger of war, and that they exhort their people in family and private devotions to offer like petitions.

In the interest of the preservation of peace we would remind ourselves, and our pastors, and exhort them to impress upon their congregations the great danger of insidious and often false propaganda in furtherance of the spirit of strife and bloodshed; and of the solemn warning of our National Government and citizens traveling on vessels of belligerent or any carrying munitions of war do so at their own risk and peril; and that injury to them, or to their property, should not be considered sufficient cause to involve our country in war, and the sacrifice of the flower of our young manhood.

That we recommend that Sunday, November 10 next, preceding Armistice Day, be known as Peace Sunday, and that appropriate sermons be preached in the morning in our churches, and that in the afternoon a public mass meeting be held in which all churches and synagogues shall be invited to unite.

Resolved, Further, that this action be presented to the Louisville Ministerial Association and its endorsement and cooperation be asked; and that copies of the same be sent to the Honorable, the Secretary of State, and to the public press.

Jubilee Year.

In this year 1935 the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lake Charles, is celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of its beginning.

In May the Church started its Jubilee celebrations. The Church School presented a "Grand Entertainment," which consisted of a cafeteria supper, a play written by Mrs. Harry Chalkley and Mrs. George F. Wharton, reproducing the first meeting held in May, 1885, by nine faithful Episcopal women in the effort to establish a Church and a Church School for their children and ending with a Virginia reel and a bazaar.

A choral evening song was held—there being present the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. James Craik Morris, D. D., two former rectors, the Rev. C. B. Weed and the Rev. Ernest N. Bullock; visiting clergy, the Rev. Robert P. Johnson, the Rev. George F. Cameron of Beaumont, Texas; the Rev. William Meade Brown of Port Arthur, Texas, and Dr. Warren Kearny of New Orleans. The Rev. Mr. Weed read the Psalms, the Rev. Mr. Bullock the Lesson, Bishop Morris preached the sermon, and Dr. Kearny brought greetings from the diocese.

On October 20 will be held a Celebration of the Holy Communion, commemorating the first Celebration held in the parish on October 18, 1885.

In the month of November will be presented the anniversary class of this Jubilee Year for Confirmation, remembering the first confirmation class presented in the Church of the Good Shepherd, on November 12, in the year 1885 by the Rt. Rev. J. N. Gallagher, D. D., Bishop of Louisiana.

During this anniversary year a goodly sum has been realized toward the reduction of the debt of the church. The Parish of the Church of the Good Shepherd is grateful for this fifty years of growth. "A Jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you."

Bishop Ferris Requests Coadjutor.

Bishop David Lincoln Ferris today asked the Executive Council for a bishop coadjutor.

The matter was referred to the standing committee and if the request is acceded to, Bishop Ferris will call a special convention of the diocese which will elect the coadjutor bishop.

Bishop Ferris said his move in asking for a coadjutor was prompted by advancing years and the welfare of the diocese.

Layman's Forward Movement Banquet.

The Rev. Alexander C. Zabriskie, S. T. D., professor of Church History and secretary of the faculty of the Virginia Seminary, Alexandria, Va., was the speaker at the annual laymen's banquet of the Diocese of Rochester, October 16.

Professor Zabriskie, who returned last month from a three months' trip through the South American mission field, addressed the western New York laymen on the Forward Movement. The banquet, in the Masonic Hall of Rochester, N. Y., is sponsored by the laymen's Forward Movement Committee of the diocese. Upwards of 1,000 reservations were made, a record attendance.

Professor Zabriskie is a member of the National Commission on Evangelism appointed by the General Convention of 1934, and is intimately identified with the leaders and purposes of the Church's nation-wide effort for deeper discipleship.

Included in his Rochester visit will be a visit to the Colgate-Rochester Divinity School, luncheon with prominent diocesan lay and clerical leaders, and meeting also with the laywomen's Forward Movement Committee.

The energetic strides made in the Diocese of Rochester in enlisting parishes in the Forward Movement are credited to a group of laymen who worked together on the 1934 Laymen's Offering campaign. S. Park Harmon, former All-American basketball star, is chairman.

Clergy Guests of Bishop.

The Bishop of Washington, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., had as his guests on Monday last the clergy of the diocese. The occasion was a luncheon meeting of the clericus, which was held in the refectory of the College of Preachers, ideally adapted for such a gathering. Plans for the fall work of the diocese were discussed and the Forward Movement received considerable impetus. This was a sort of "echo meeting" consequent upon the recent clergy conference held at Camp Overall, Va.

Expenditure of PWA Funds Meets With Set-back.

The plan which called for expenditure of some five million dollars annually from PWA funds for recreational projects among Chicago churches and synagogues met with a set-back this week when the Board of Trustees of the Chicago Church Federation adopted resolutions opposing the proposal.

The governing board of the Federation takes a stand against the proposal on grounds that it may be construed as a violation of the principle of separation of Church and State. The resolutions as adopted were agreed upon unanimously by the board and met with little or no opposition when they came up for discussion, according to the Rev. Walter R. Mee, executive secretary of the Federation. They follow:

"As the Board of Trustees of the Chicago Church Federation representing the Protestant cooperative work in the Chicago area, we cannot see our way to participate in the proposed PWA project for the financing of recreational programs through the churches, because to do so would, in the judgment of the board, possibly be interpreted or construed as a violation of the principle of the separation of Church and State."

The Federation represents eighteen denominations and 1,083 churches in metropolitan Chicago.

Under the plan as proposed by the Chicago Recreation Commission, approximately five million dollars of government funds would have been expended annually to set up recreational centers in churches and synagogues of the city. These projects would be supervised by recreational experts and thus would provide employment for several hundred recreation instructors. It was planned to use parish houses already available among the various churches and the centers were to be distributed among Roman Catholic, non-Roman Catholic Churches and Jewish Synagogues. It was widely hailed as offering a proper use for millions of dollars worth of equipment, much of which, officials claimed, is idle because of lack of funds on the part of the churches.

Brotherhood Secretary Speaks.

If half the professing Christians of the world practiced their religion and honestly endeavored to apply its principles there could be no war in Ethiopia or elsewhere, Leon C. Palmer, executive secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the United States, declared before Chicago laymen at the Central Y. M. C. A. Tuesday of this week.

Mr. Palmer charged there is within every church what he termed a "pagan fringe," defining these as "nominal Christians and practicing pagans."

Youth in America has grown tired of the materialistic and cynical attitude of his elders, Mr. Palmer told the group and is "consciously or unconsciously seeking to discover for himself a vital religion."

"America and the world needs a vital religion today as never before," declared Mr. Palmer. "Our so-called intelligentsia are among the worst offenders when it comes to leading the trend away from religion and to the cynical attitude toward the church."

Monday night Mr. Palmer was one of the speakers at a large meeting sponsored by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew at Cleveland, in Emmanuel Church there. Dr. William S. Keller, Cincinnati layman, was the speaker on this occasion also.

Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Coming Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The forty-fifth annual meeting of the Virginia Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary will be held at St. James' Church, Richmond, the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., rector, on October 29-30-31. The opening mass meeting will be held in St. James' Church at 8 P. M. Tuesday, October 29, at 8 P. M., at which time the Rt. Rev. F. W. Creighton, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of Long Island and formerly Bishop of Mexico, will be the speaker. An informal reception will follow in St. James' Parish House.

The session on Wednesday opens with a preparation service at 9:15 A. M., conducted by the Rev. Henry E. Batcheller, rector of Christ Church, Gordonsville. This will be followed by the celebration of the Holy Communion, at the close of which service the business meeting will begin.

At the afternoon session Mrs. Alexander C. Zabriskie will give an account of her recent trip to Brazil. There will also be addresses by several mountain missionaries, including Miss Edna Browning, Mission Home, and Miss Walton, Tanner's Ridge. The Ven. Frederick W. Neve, D. D., Archdeacon of the Blue Ridge, will give the concluding address of the afternoon general session.

At the mass meeting that evening the preacher will be the Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D., rector of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, Maryland, whose topic will be The Forward Movement. Speakers at the closing session on Thursday morning will be the Rev. R. Cary Montague, D. D., the City Missionary and rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Richmond; Dr. Walter Pott, of St. Luke's, Shanghai, China, and Miss Sallie Deane, member of the National Executive Board from the Province of Washington. Closing prayers and adjournment will be followed by lunch.

Besides the sessions for the whole group there will be a meeting of the Executive Committee and Diocesan Officers on Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 at the Mayo Memorial, a conference for members of the Junior Woman's Auxiliary at 4:15 P. M. on Wednesday, and a mass meeting for the Junior Auxiliary at the same hour. It is hoped that every branch will find it possible to have a delegate present throughout the meeting.

Stone Pulpit Erected on Occasion of Anniversary.

A most unusual service was held Sunday afternoon, September 29, on the lawn of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Richmond. It was the Sunday nearest to September 30, which was the twentieth anniversary of the ordination to the priesthood of Rev. R. Cary Montague, D. D., rector of the church and City Missionary of Richmond.

The Business Women's Service League of his church planned to commemorate the occasion by erecting a stone pulpit on the lawn, where Dr. Montague has been holding his Sunday night services for the past three summers, which attracts large congregations.

An appeal for funds had been made throughout the city, as Dr. Montague's work for the past eighteen years has included persons of all denominations and in every walk of life. The amount necessary was over-subscribed by his friends in the city and state, contributions coming from as far south as South Carolina and as far north as New York.

The dedication service was in charge of Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, assisted by Rev. Hugh Sublett, D. D., of St. John's, and Rev. Ernest Van R. Stires, of All Saints' Church. The speakers were Dr. Churchill J. Gibson, rector of St. James' Church; Rev. J. N. Latham, pastor of Monument Methodist Church; Rev. G. Edwin Osburn, D. D., pastor of Hanover Avenue Christian Church, and E. Randolph Williams, Chancellor of the Diocese of Virginia. They all spoke very beautifully of Dr. Montague's work, and in conclusion Dr. Montague himself was called upon to respond. He did so in a rather witty vein, saying that it was not often that the corpse on such occasions had an opportunity to talk back.

The memorial is constructed of Virginia granite and consists of a base, eight by ten feet, with a solid stone pulpit on one corner, to which is to be added a stone prayer desk and two stone seats. When finished it will present a very unique and beautiful appearance, and makes an ideal equipment for the open-air services at which it will be used. The lawn of the church is covered with fine trees, and appropriate shrubbery and vines are to be planted around the pulpit.

The church and rectory have recently been painted white, with dark grey trimmings and green shutters, and give the impression of a lovely country church in the midst of the city.

Clergy Conference at New Center.

The first over-night conference to be held in the new Diocesan Center near Richmond, which came to the Diocese under the will of Miss Annie Rose Walker, convened October 1 and was attended by the clergy of rural parishes east of the Blue Ridge. The bishops of the diocese were the hosts, and conducted the discussions on the problems of the unmanned sections of many rural parishes. The success of the conference, which lasted two days, foretells many others of like kind.

Teachers Hold Weekly Conferences.

An interparochial teachers' conference is held each Wednesday evening at the parish house of All Saints' Church, Atlanta, when the different grades meet to discuss the lessons for the following four Sundays in the Christian Nurture Series. At these graded conferences, led by Mr. W. W. Davison, Director of Religious Education, problems are solved of discipline, home cooperation and lagging interest. Teachers attend from College Park, Decatur and Marietta, as well as all the churches in the city.

Silver Service Presented as Token of Esteem.

The parish of Holy Trinity, Decatur, celebrated the tenth anniversary of the incumbency of the Rev. Charles Holding with a surprise party, which was attended by the entire membership of the church. The Rev. and Mrs. Holding were presented with a five-piece silver service as a token of esteem for their work.

The Woman's Auxiliary, of which Mrs. W. S. Williams is president, sponsored the party.

The Church Congress.

The Rev. Canon H. Adye Prichard, D. D., rector of St. Mark's Church, Mt. Kisco, N. Y., owing to many pressing engagements, has, with sincere regrets, been obliged to resign as General Chairman of the Church Congress in the United States.

By vote of the Executive Committee, the plans for the future of the Church Congress are in the hands of the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent, D. D., of St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City.

There is imperative need to have a comprehensive Congress, and it is hoped that every one will rally to the support of its future program.

Clergy Conference.

The Annual Conference of the Clergy of the Diocese met at Lake Mahopac on October 16 and 17. The subjects on the program were:

The Bishop of the Diocese, "The Real Meaning of this Gathering."

The Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, Bishop of Tennessee, "The Forward Movement and its Meaning to the Clergy."

Dr. John R. Mott, "The Christian Religion and the Present World Outlook."

The Rev. W. M. V. Hoffman, S. S. J. E., "The Youth of Today and the Church."

Professor Wilbur M. Urban, Yale University, "The Christian Church and the Modern World—The New Erastianism."

Dr. William S. Keller, Cincinnati, Ohio, "What We Mean by Social Service."

The Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, Bishop Coadjutor of West Virginia, "The Work of the Ministry at This Time in Which We Are Living."

Archbishop of Canterbury Sends Greetings.

The Rev. Dr. Washburn, rector of Old Christ Church, at the commemoration service October 6, read a greeting from the Most Rev. and Rt. Hon. Cosmo Gordon Lang, Archbishop of Canterbury and Primate of all England, to the bishops and other clergy and laity of the American Church, which he had given to Dr. Washburn to be presented at the commemoration while the latter was the personal guest of the Archbishop at Canterbury recently. The Archbshop's greeting read as follows:

"Lambeth Palace, S. E. I.

"I have heard with great interest of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary to be held this autumn in the Diocese of Pennsylvania. I well remember my own feelings when I found myself some years ago in Christ Church, Philadelphia, with all its memories, and I willingly join in the tributes which will be offered to the ability, vision and devotion of the founder of the Diocese, Bishop White, consecrated here in 1787, and I pray that every blessing may be given to the Church in the United States in the reorganization of which he wielded so great an influence, and trust that it may have an ever increasing place of its own in making the Christian religion the chief foundation of American life.

"Cosmo Cantuar."

Subsequent to the commemoration service in Christ Church, the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, Bishop of Pennsylvania, at the meeting in Christ Church Neighborhood House, read the following reply to the Archbishop of Canterbury's greeting expressing the profound respect and affection of the assembled bishops, presbyters and laity for the evidence of the Archbishop's interest.

The reply to the Primate's greeting read as follows:

"Your gracious greeting has been received with deep appreciation by the bishops, priests and laity assembled on this seventh day of October, 1935, at Christ Church, Philadelphia, in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the significant convention held here to reorganize the post-Revolutionary remnants of the historic church. For approximately one hundred and fifty years preceding the Declaration of Independence the 'Church of England' had thriven and served with immeasurable benefit to the colonists under the nursing care of your predecessors. The unprecedented crisis precipitated by the war then confronted its leaders here and in the homeland.

"The divinely guided group of thirteen priests and twenty-six laymen representing seven of the new States wrought notably in that initial General Convention, fashioning a Constitution, anticipating the like document which is still the inviolable charter of our government's existence, revising the Book of Common Prayer for American usage, resolving to seek Episcopacy at the hands of Canterbury, and furthering plans for a truly General Convention of the prospective National Church.

"The blessed outcome of those adventurous undertakings was, under God, in due course brought to fruition through the magnanimous sympathy of the then Archbishop and the King and Parliament, permitting 'the consecration of persons being subjects or citizens of countries not on his Majesty's dominions'. That extraordinary manifestation of overcoming readiness to set forward the cause of Christ in the New World is gratefully recalled by us today.

"The Church in these United States is forever indebted to Canterbury. And your kind message is a timely incitement to us to strengthen the ties between the English-speaking peoples.

"We beg your grace to accept the assurance of our profound respect and affection for this evidence of your interest, and for the very distinguished leadership which you are giving to the entire Anglican Communion through these testing times."

Unseen Forces of Good All Around Us.

The Rev. Charles Townsend, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Providence, is conducting a department in The Diocesan Record, the official organ of the Diocese, under the caption "Truths to Live By". This month he writes on Angels, suggested by the festival Michaelmas and the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels, and quotes a noted American astronomer: "Both reason and revelation indicate to me that it is highly probable that there may be and indeed are finite and created beings whose existence is based on a higher spiritual level than that of men." Using this scientist as corroborating authority, Fr. Townsend went on to argue: "In the God-given scheme of the Christian Faith, the belief in angels is a protective bulwark of that central citadel of religion, namely, that we live in a personal universe; that we are not mere cogs, playthings of blind forces, in a vast soulless machine. It tells us that there are unseen forces of good all about us, like the electro-dynamic waves of the radio, to motivate and inspire our lives if we will but link ourselves with them. It tells us that obedience to God's Will is the normal fact in His Creation, that the sin and disobedience of our world is abnormal, that when we put ourselves on the side of Righteousness we have the power of the universe behind us."

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D. Bishop.

Two Hundredth Anniversary of First St. Paul's, Petersburg.

St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, Va., the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, rector, on Sunday, October 6, celebrated the two hundredth anniversary of the erection of the first St. Paul's Church in 1735. The service was held in the original edifice which stands in Blandford Cemetery and is now owned by the City of Petersburg. This ancient building was lost to the Vestry and Congregation of St. Paul's under a law of the State of Virginia made after the Revolutionary War alienating church property not actually used for religious services. It was acquired for a nominal sum by one John Grammar, Clerk of the Courts and a Vestryman of St. Paul's, who at his death willed it to the City for a Cemetery. The church is now commonly known as "Old Blandford Church." The Vestry Book of Bristol Parish dating back to 1720 is in the possession of the present St. Paul's Church, the fourth building erected by this parish, and interesting minutes from the old Vestry record dealing with the erection of the original church building were read at the commemoration service. The service was conducted by the rector of St. Paul's and the rectors of the Episcopal Churches of the city were in the chancel. The sermon was preached by the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop of Southern Virginia. The Rev. Mr. Gill, rector of St. Paul's is a native of Petersburg and a direct descendant of the Bolling and Banister families, both of which were represented on the Vestry when the first St. Paul's was erected two hundred years ago.

Two Members of National Forward Movement Commission Address Convocation.

Bishop Thomson initiated the Forward Movement in Southern Virginia by inviting two members of the National Commission to explain the Movement to the clergy at the two fall Convocations.

At the Tidewater Convocation, which met in St. Peter's, Norfolk, October 8, the Rev. Dr. Oliver Hart of Washington, D. C., was the guest speaker. Mr. Lewis C. Williams of Richmond, Va., addressed the Southside Convocation at McKenney, Va., on October 9.

The Bishop announced the appointment of a diocesan Forward Movement Commission with the Rev. Theodore St. Clair Will of Hamptou, as Chairman.

October 10 and 11, the Rev. Mr. Will and the Rev. Taylor Willis of Norfolk attended the conference on the Forward Movement at the College of Preachers in Norfolk. N. E. Taylor.

Dr. Gwathmey Lectures at St. Peter's, Roanoke.

From October 7 to 11, inclusive, the Rev. Dr. Devall L. Gwathmay of Wytheville gave a series of evening lectures on the Prayer Book at St. Peter's Church, Roanoke, of which the Rev. Marshall N. Bacot is rector.

The lectures really represented a regular course on the Prayer Book such as those conducted at summer conferences and, although the congregation is not large, there were several who took notes and turned in papers looking to the award of N. A. L. A. credits on the course. Each evening there were two fifty-minutes periods with an intermission of ten minutes.

Next week is "Apple Butter Week" at St. Peter's, when the members of the Woman's Auxiliary will make wonderful apple butter for sale to those who are so fortunate as to have tried their product in recent years.

In the week beginning November 4 the Rev. Richard A. Beasley will preach a series of sermons in the evenings. During the summer of 1932, immediately following his ordination to the diaconate, Mr. Beasley was in charge of St. Peter's. Then for about a year he took a special course at Oxford, England. Since August, 1933, he has been rector of Emmanuel Church at Bristol, Virginia. T. A. S.

Bishop Hobson in Maryland.

The Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio, conducted a Quiet Day for the Clergy of the Diocese of Maryland in connection with the Forward Movement.

In the evening, in the Great Hall of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, Bishop Hobson addressed a large gathering of lay men and women on the Forward Movement.

The Committee on the Forward Movement in Maryland has been very active and has accomplished a great deal.

The Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, has just been completely renovated and re-decorated, both inside and out and the work done is a great improvement. This was made possible through the will of Miss Florence Hutson, who had been a parishioner for many years.

The Rev. Henry B. Thomas has taken up his residence in Kingsville, Maryland, and on Friday, October 4, the congregation of St. John's Church gave him a reception. Bishop Helfenstein was present.

Rev. William Page Dame, D. D., Called to Maryland.

St. John's Church, Worthington Valley (Western Run Parish), Maryland, has called the Rev. William Page Dame, D. D., back to Maryland.

Dr. Dame was formerly rector of Memorial Church, Baltimore, having succeeded his father, the Rev. William Meade Dame, D. D. He left Memorial Church to become headmaster of Christ Church School, Middlesex County, Virginia, and later was rector of Trinity Church, Upperville, Virginia, from which Church he comes to Maryland.

Besides being rector of St. John's Church, Dr. Dame will be Chaplain of the Hannah More Academy. He took up his new duties on October 15 and Maryland is very happy to welcome him back. N. Evelyn Parsons.

Day Nursery Instituted in Parish House.

St. Paul's Church, Savannah, the Rev. Geoffrey Horsfield, rector, has loaned a part of the parish house for a day nursery, a FERA project that is about to be transferred to WPA. Thirty neighborhood children from three to five years of age, have been enrolled. A teacher, with two assistants, a maid and a cook will look after them from nine to three o'clock every day except Saturday and Sunday. The teachers have had to "find" the necessary kindergarten equipment, but the Government supplies a hot midday meal, cod liver oil, orange juice and milk to these undernourished children whose fathers are not making a living wage.

Clergy Conference.

The clergy of the diocese met in a two days' conference at Grand View, the first week in October, under the leadership of the Rt. Rev. William G. McDowell, D. D.

The Church's Program was ably presented by the Rev. Messrs. Clingman, D. D., R. Bland Mitchell, D. D., and James M. Stoney, secretary of the diocese. It was announced that, prior to the annual canvass, a representative of the executive council would visit each parish and mission, to confer with and assist the rector and vestry in preparing an effective presentation of the Church's Program.

The Forward Movement was a determining factor in all the discussions of the conference, and its first fruits were evident in the presence of two aggressive young deacon, the Rev. Thomas J. Byrne and the Rev. George P. Pardington, who are engaged in missionary work in rural fields near Mobile, the latter as assistant to the Rev. J. Hodge Alves, of Spring Hill.. An other forward step was visible in the person of Captain Charles L. Conder, of the Church Army, who is doing effective work in the mountains of Northern Alabama, near Scottsboro, of unhappy fame. Bishop McDowell announced that he is planning a far more extensive use of the Church Army in the mountainous and other rural sections of the diocese.

BROTHERHOOD.

O brother man, hold to thy heart thy brother!
Where pity dwells, the peace of God is there:
To worship rightly is to love each other,
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer.

Follow with reverent steps the great example
Of Him whose holy work was doing good;
So shall the wide earth seem our Father's temple,
Each loving life a psalm of gratitude.

Then shall all shackles fall; the stormy clangour
Of wild war-music o'er the earth shall cease;
Life shall tread out the baleful fire of anger,
And in its ashes plant the tree of peace.

—Whittier.

The Respect for the Past.

Dean Inge, former Dean of St. Paul's, in a recent sermon preached in Oxford, said something that is worth repeating. "The greatest setbacks that humanity has ever suffered have been due to ruptures with continuity. A generation arises that can see nothing to respect or admire in what it has inherited from the past. And so it often destroys the outward symbols and monuments of the earlier culture, or allows them to perish." We are specially in danger of this rupturing our continuity with the past in these days when all things are plastic and fluid, and it seems easy to mold them nearer to our hearts' desire. We may lustily sing and shout, "Ring out the old," as though it should all be swept away, when the past has provided us with the very bells we propose to ring. But after such an upheaval and reconstruction of the old framework of things we must often go back nearer to the original foundation and shape and rebuild on the old lines; not exactly on the old lines, but nearer to them than the radicals reconstructed them.

Many wild schemes have been and are still being proposed to us for the rebuilding of the social order, and while every plan should receive due consideration, yet we cut loose from our past at our peril. Our trouble often is that we have not lived up to our past, have not appreciated its work and wisdom and especially have not developed its principles and substantial progress into their full form and realization. The old house may have a stately spaciousness and simplicity and dignity that are far superior to the new bungalows we are building, but it needs to be reconditioned and improved and enriched. We build more stately mansions, not by trampling upon the old shell our fathers secreted out of ther life, but by adding new ivory chambers to it and enlarging it in the direction of its ideal. All this applies to our social order and government, our politics and economics, our literature and art, and to our religion and creed and worship. "I came not to destroy, but to fulfill."

OVER THE HILL.

A Poem With an Obligato.

Charles Ballard.

There's a dream just over the hill,
(What is the hill hiding behind his green shoulder?)
Caught from a feather of cloud and a strip of blue
(My heart is tugging at its anchor-chain, tugging with its white cloud sail!)

Into an opal rill
Singing down to the plain below—
(In the plain ten thousand flower-cups are catching the wine of the sun!)

Old joy made new,
The dearest that man may know
(What is the hill saying—did I hear the grasses whisper?)

I dream as I climb
(My soul lives by dreaming)
Of a glad, near time—
(Over the hill.)

Our Heritage and Hope.

Since I learned to know the Episcopal Church in England in the deep blazing days of war, something deep within me has responded to its sweet and tempered ways. Its atmosphere of reverence, its ordered and stately worship, its tradition of historic continuity linking today with ages agone, its use of those symbols which enshrine the faith of the past, and the hope of the future, its wide and wise tolerance, its old and lovely liturgy—like a stairway worn by many feet, whereon men climb to God, and still more, the organized mysticism of its service and sacraments—all these things of beauty and grace move me profoundly. But more vital still, if possible, is the central and strategic position which the Episcopal Church holds in the confused religious situation of our time. It is the roomiest Church in Christendom in that it accepts the facts of Christian Faith as symbols of transcendant truths, which each may interpret as his insight and experience explore their depth and faith—midway between an arid liberalism and an acrid literal ism, it keeps its wise course, conserving the eternal values of faith while seeking to read the Word of God revealed in the tumult of our times. If its spirit and attitude were better understood it would at once be the heaven and the home of many vexed minds torn between loyalty to the old faith and the new truth.—The Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D. D.

The Human Touch.

There are born solitary souls who find solace in seclusion, but these are rare. The millions want human fellowship and every-day living calls for a commingling of small and large groups playing together, working together, studying together and achieving together in perfect unison. Such living would be society at its highest level. The world has not yet learned to live in such a way, neither have individuals learned to think of themselves as a part of humanity as a whole. Here is where barriers have arisen to separate men and women, communities, clans and countries. Individuals gather their resources about them to satisfy personal ambitions, to feed personal tolerance and become intolerant of their neighbors. Soon there are no dealings among them and the same barrier exists as between the Jews and Samaritans.

Difference in financial rating is the commonest social barrier. Frequently people develop a sense of responsibility only for those within a certain social strata. Those without are unsought and unknown. Many come into the cruel and bitter experiences of life, watching others with apparently everything to use and enjoy, and yet there is no sharing; many hearts break for the sympathetic touch. Oftentimes one of small means feels that there is no contribution he can make to the rich and distinguished, and yet riches often go with heart-hunger and often bring a sense of aloofness to create loneliness that longs for the touch of a friendly hand.

The human heart cries out for the touch of a brother's hand as they walk in the same way of joys and sorrows, inescapable longings, continuous strivings and anxieties.

The Master was never more beautifully portrayed than when He was pictured in the midst of the crowd that thronged about Him, putting His arms about little children to bless them.

The invalid who had been sick twelve years felt that if she could but touch Him she would be made whole.

And so it is when the heart is crushed and the spirit weary, the gentle, loving touch of a friend's hand will bring strength and courage and hope for a better day. The potency of the personal touch becomes evident again and again in the life of Jesus as He went about doing good. Would that we might follow Him in all things at all times.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

VICTORIOUS LIFE.

Grace French Smith.

All hail, victorious life—
Released from sin and fear,
Above the sound of strife
Above—where the light is clear.

How long we stumble in vain
On a noisy faltering way,
And tramp the road with pain,
So often led astray.

How long we clamber for things,
For power or fame or gold—
When God would give us wings
To rise above the mould!

Fellowship and Criticism.

We cannot have fellowship with persons whom we criticize. Nor can we hate a man when we pray for him. Evidently that is one reason our Lord teaches us to pray for our enemies. The Apostle John teaches, "If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another." That is, if we follow the Lord blamelessly we shall not be at variance one with another, nor keep on criticizing our brethren. But there are few of us who can claim that we invariably walk in the light of the sinless presence of Christ. Therefore, we need to put a guard on our lips. If the heart within feels an upsurge of bitterness or sensoriousness that wants to get by the tongue, stop that tongue before it wags its foolsh words, and pray the Lord to give victory over the sinful impulse. And mark this: an aptitude to see and advertise the faults of others is an unwitting self-revelation to others that there is something wrong spiritually on the inside of the person who allows himself to be mastered by this aptitude. "By their fruits ye shall know them." A Christian is not blind to good or evil in others. But he is under obligation to see and believe in the good, and if he has Christ's love in him there will be in him compassion that will make him glad to forget the fault of another and, if possible, to cure it.—Christian Recorder.

COMMUNION SONG.

If I should watch no further morning break
Its dawn-thin shell of sleep; if I should see
No more an early steeple rise to take
From the sun its lifting polychrome, from me
Its proudly lyric heart . . . this much is certain:
Bitter lament would not gangrene my song
And little I should mourn the closing curtain
Before the altar rail. How glad and long
All yesterdays appear! How sadly brief
Tomorrow seems! But today's the fullest time
In all the moving world; and if no leaf
Blow up again, and if no further rime
Fall from my lips, today at least is mine—
Today I broke Your bread, drank of Your wine.

The Hoppywood Honor Pole.

Major Muskrat stood in the center of a large group of Hoppywood inhabitants. Walter Woodchuck was there; so were his brothers, Billy and Willy Woodchuck. Rufus Rabbit and the Red Squirrel family were there; also Morris Mink and Calvin Coon and Willy Weasel—in fact, nearly all the animals in Hoppywood.

Perched up above them on reserved seats in the branches of the old oak-tree were different members of the Woodpecker family. And last, but not least, in the highest seat of all, perched Bobby Blue Jay, decked out in his gorgeous blue feathers. For once in his life, Bobby Blue Jay was not scolding. He was listening to Major Muskrat, and was looking with great curiosity at a long pole Major Muskrat was displaying.

"This pole," said Major Muskrat, "is called the honor pole. Do you see that odd carving at the top? That stands for the honor won by Walter Woodchuck. Just below it is another honor won by Rufus Rabbit. Sammy Squirrell has the next honor. Now, who will be the next to win an honor and have a beautiful carved emblem on the honor pole? Honors are won by well-built homes and neat dooryards. Build your homes well; gather your nuts, acorns and provisions, and have your storehouses filled before the snow flies."

Major Muskrat's speech was ended, and, as it was nearly dark, all the animals scurried off to their homes.

During the next few weeks, Hoppywood was a busy place, for all the animals wanted a carved emblem on the honor pole. Even the woodpeckers were building better nests and carefully storing away acorns for future use.

Bobby Blue Jay seemed to be working for honors with the rest, for he was making a well-built nest of twigs and grasses, and lining it with fine roots and fibres. But Major Muskrat saw something which surprised him very much. So, every day, the major kept his eyes open very wide. And it was a good thing he did, for what do you suppose Bobby Blue Jay was doing?

The day to bestow honors arrived, and Major Muskrat was again the center of all the dwellers in Hoppywood. Again Bobby Blue Jay occupied the highest seat of all, decked out in his brilliant blue feathers. He was a pretty sight, indeed, and Major Muskrat could not help admiring him, but he remembered the old proverb, "Handsome is that handsome does," and he knew that Bobby Blue Jay's actions did not match his beautiful feathers.

The honor pole was again brought out, and many interesting emblems were carved on it. The Woodpecker family pecked a circle of hole around the pole and wedged in acorns, this making an original emblem. Every one could see at first glance that it belonged to the Woodpeckers.

When it came to Bobby Blue Jay's turn, he preened his feathers and looked very proud, for he knew he had built a fine-looking nest. But Major Muskrat said that Bobby Blue Jay would receive no honors that day. Bobby Blue Jay may have thought he was earning honors, but he did not know what honor meant.

All the animals in Hoppywood stopped chattering. There was a dead silence while they listened to Major Muskrat. Bobby Blue Jay had been seen taking acorns from the Woodpecker family's storehouse. He had been seen going into Sammy Squirrel's home when he was not there and helping himself to nuts. He had been seen taking eggs from other birds' nests. And, one day, he was followed when he flew into Mr. Farmer's garden with a number of his friends when Mr. Farmer was planting potatoes, and as soon as the farmer went into his house at noon, they were seen to dig up a lot of those potatoes and eat them. So Bobby Blue Jay had got his food by stealing it from the neighbors instead of gathering it from the forest trees.

As soon as Major Muskrat ceased speaking, all the animals in Hoppywood looked up in the high branch where Bobby Blue Jay had been perching, but Bobby Blue Jay was perching there no longer. All they saw—or heard—was a flash of brilliant blue and a sharp, scolding squawk.

He was the only one in Hoppywood, however, who did not have a place on the Hoppywood honor pole. Major Muskrat's honor pole was a long one, but it was filled from top to bottom with honors.

"Three cheers for Major Muskrat and his honor pole," shouted little Billy Woodchuck, and all the dwellers in Hoppywood cheered: "Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah!" All but Bobby Blue Jay, and he was far, far away from the Hoppywood honor pole.

Why All Traffic Was Held Up.

"Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord" (Golden Text). A morning newspaper of London recently printed a picture taken the day before near Buckingham Palace. A policeman was holding up the busy traffic with his white-gloved hands. The buses throbbed and simmered, the big horses in the drays champed their bits and stamped their feet. The motor vans and taxis all stood obedient; the boys on bicycles put one leg to the ground and held on to whatever was nearest to them; all the work of that busy street was stopped. All the people wondered who was coming, and many craned their necks to see if it were the king about to drive through the big gates of the palace. Then came a surprise indeed. On that empty street so carefully guarded and protected there walked across, looking very proud and clever, a mother duck with her ten little ducklings in single file behind her! There they waddled—all the little necks on the stretch, all the little beaks a-twitter, all the little eyes wide open. When they got safely across, the big policeman lowered his arm and the waves of traffic surged on once more. "That was just like Moses and the Israelites crossing the Red Sea," said a little girl, showing the picture to her father, "only there were no Egyptians following after!"

THE REALLY POOR MAN.

A man is poor:
If he is without friends.
If he has lost his self-respect.
If his morals are questionable.
If he has lost his grip upon himself.
If he is selfish, uncharitable or cruel.
If his mind and soul have been neglected.
If he has traded away his character for money.
If making money has crowded out the cultivation of his spiritual life.
If all his investments and possessions are laid upon earth and he has no treasures in heaven.

THE LITTLE LEADER.

A True Story.

Rev. Frederick W. Neve.

"Mother, we'll play that you're blind and I'm your little leader," said the child. So the game was played, and after a while Mother was led into the parlor and made to lie down on the couch. Then the child went out. Soon she came back and said: "Mother, here's someone come to see you." The mother tried to guess who it was: "Is it the piano tuner " "No." "Is it the man to see about putting the weather "Is it the piano tuner?" "No." Then after several other guesses the mother said 'Is it the King of the Belgains?" "That's more like," said the child. Without saying more, the child went out and the stranger was supposed to be brought in to see Mother. She was lying on the couch with her eyes closed. A little hand was placed in Mother's, and the child said: "This is Jesus." And then the hand stroked Mother's eyes, and the child said: "Now you can see."

Martha and Mary.

In his New Testament in Braid Scots, William Wye Smith gives a most delightful translation of a passage in Luke. Here it is:

"Noo, as they gaed on, he came intil a certain toon; and a certain wumman named Martha bade Him intil her hoose.

"And she had a sister ca'd Mary, wha was aye sittin' nar-by the feet o' Jesus, hearin' His words.

"But Martha was unco pernickity aboot mickle service, and comin' doon till Him, quo' she, 'Lord, div ye no heed that my sister lea's me to ser by my lane? Bid her that she help me!'

"But Jesus answers and says till her, 'Martha! Martha! ye are put-till't, and fashed wi' a hantle o' things.

"'But thar is ae thing aye needit; and Mary waled oot the gude pairt, and it isna to be taen awa frae her!'"

No self-centered, self-serving life ensures satisfaction. In the very nature of things it is imperative that we look beyond our personal interests, and take thought for the welfare of our neighbor. Unselfishness is a fact in human nature and life, as truly as the self-regarding instincts are.

FOR THE CHILDREN

THE ONE WHO WINS.

A three-year-old child was having difficulty moving a table. "Baby, you can't move that table," said her mother, trying to discourage her. "It's as big as you are." "Yes, I can," was the child's response. "I'm as big as it is." The difference between success and failure, often lies in your viewpoint of the things to be done.

If you think you are beaten, you are;
If you think you dare not, you don't;
If you'd like to win but are sure you can't,
It's almost certain you won't—
Life's prizes don't always go
To the stronger and swifter man;
On a thousand fields the one who wins
Is th one who is sure he can.

Shooting Stars.

Jack and some of his friends had gone out into the country for a hike. After a while they came to a hole in the ground with fresh dirt thrown out around it.

"It must be an animal of some kind," Jack suggested.

"Let's dig it out," said one of the others.

They dug it out all right; but what they found was far more interesting than any animal. They found a curious rock—small, but very heavy. Just twenty-four hours before, this same rock had been more than three million miles away from that spot. That is so far away that if Jack's father had gone after it in his automobile and had been able to drive a thousand miles a day, it would have taken him twenty years to make the round trip.

But Jack's father could never have gone after it, for this strange stone came not from any place on earth at all, but from millions of miles out in space among the stars.

In fact, it was a piece of a star or a smaller heavenly body that had exploded a long time ago and still continued to travel through space. There are untold millions of these heavy rocks flying through space all the time. The earth travels through showers of them constantly; and it is estimated that thousands of them strike the earth's atmosphere every day. Only a few of them are seen, and still fewer are found. They travel so fast that most of them burn up when they strike the earth's atmosphere. Indeed, they travel as far in a second as you drive a car in an hour, or about thirty-six hundred times as fast as you go when you're out for a brisk drive with your father and mother.

The ones that burn up as they speed through the air are called meteors, while those that strike the earth are known as meteorites.

Some of these meteors appear to be small points of light traveling across the sky. They look like lightning bugs flying high, or like stars falling from the sky. But others streak halfway across the heavens like great skyrockets, leaving brilliant trails of sparks behind them.

You are liable to see these meteors or shooting stars on any clear, moonless night during the year. I have seen them while on a sleighing party in January and while camping out under the stars in August. One night a group of us counted nearly five hundred of them in a single night. Another night not long ago a friend and I had climbed a hill to watch the sunset. The stars were out when we started back home. "It ought to be a good night for meteors," my friend said. Hardly were the words spoken when a brilliant meteor shot out of the east and blazed across the northeastern sky. It left a dazzling trail of sparks behind it, and a bright path of light that glowed for several seconds It seemed almost to hiss through the air, though it was probably fifty miles high.

But while you may see meteors any night during the year, your chances are much better in late summer or fall. The middle of November is probably the best time of all, for that is when the Leonid meteors appear. Some of them are seen each year, and about three times in a century thousands of them can be seen. A hundred years ago there were such great numbers of them that people who saw them said the stars fell as thickly as snowflakes all night. It was estimated that more than two hundred thousand of them were seen that night.

This November, astronomers will be watching again for another great shower. There is no way of being sure about it, but it is too thrilling an adventure to miss.

A shower of shooting stars is likely to occur this year, the night of November 13, 14 or 15. Many boys and girls will be looking for them all three nights; but if you can watch only one night, the fifteenth is the best.

Astronomers will be watching with expensive equipment, such as great telescopes and special cameras. But you need no equipment except a pair of eyes that can stay wide awake. A good plan would be to have your family go out for a picnic the night of November 15 and stay out a while after dark. Still better, arrange to camp out that night.

Let me repeat that there is no way of being sure of a meteor shower; but if one occurs I guarantee you will have no trouble keeping awake. And even if you see only a few dozen shooting stars, it will be a night you will never forget.—Ray M. Johnson, in Advance.

Just Like a Parrot.

Not long ago there was a great deal of fuss and bother in Berlin. The cause of it all was surprising. What do you think was causing all the commotion? Just a parrot.

It all happened right in the heart of the city, at one of the busy cross-roads, near which the parrot lived. You know how busy cross-roads in the center of a great city are, and what a job it is to regulate the traffic. Well, it seems that in Berlin, or at least at this particular crossing they don't regulate the traffic by automatic lights—green for "Go" and red for "Stop", nor yet by a policeman signaling with his arms. They do it by a voice.

Some one, I suppose, is watching the traffic from a place of vantage, and to each stream of motors and things he says "Go" or "Stop", according to how he thinks it should be controlled. The voice comes out loud and clear through a loud speaker of sorts, and the drivers of the vehicles must do as the voice says.

Well, it was near this crossing that the parrot lived. And, when the windows of the room where he was were open, he could hear this voice saying all day long, in German, of course, "Go", "Stop". He heard the voice say this so often that after a time he also learned to say "Go", "Stop". That was all right, of course, and quite what you would expect a parrot to do, and as he was not speaking so as to be heard in the streets, it caused nothing but amusement.

But one day the door of the cage was left open. The parrot thought he would do a little exploring. Perhaps he wanted to make closer acquaintance with the voice outside which he had heard so often. At any rate, he flew over in the direction the voice came from and then, perched in a tree, he began to let the voice know there was some one else who could say "Go", "Stop". And not only did the unseen voice soon know this, but many other people became aware of it also. Drivers of motor-cars and others who wished to navigate that busy crossing in a safe and orderly way now heard two voices saying "Go", "Stop", in a most confusing fashion, and all the traffic was soon in a hopeless tangle. So they sent for the fire brigade. Why the fire brigade, I do not know, except that the fire brigade had ladders which could reach up the tree where the parrot was.

So the firemen brought their ladders, but as soon as they reached the branch where the parrot was, the parrot hopped on to a higher branch. This was repeated from branch to branch, and it continued for quite a time, and all the while the parrot kept up his "Go", "Stop". But at length he had had enough, and he flew back to his home on his own accord, and in through the still open door of his cage. And peace and order came again to Berlin.

Now, what I want you to notice about this parrot is this: No doubt he was a very clever bird to be able to learn and repeat words; but, nevertheless, he he really did not know what words he used meant, and he certainly did not think of their effect. But I fancy he is not the only one who has used words sometimes in that way. Have you, for instance, ever found yourself saying words which are supposed to be prayers, and then, all of a sudden, you have discovered that you really did not know what the words meant, or at least you were not thinking of what they meant? It is easy to do that. It is easy to repeat that Lord's Prayer and not think what it means. But that is not really praying. It is only using vain repetitions. We should think it very rude to talk to some one and not to know what our words meant, or to think of what they meant. How much worse is it to talk of God in that way!

Then sometimes we may make glib promises, we may say "Yes" or "No" when some one asks us to do something, or not to do something. We may say it without really knowing what we are saying, and then, when we are expected to be as good as our word, we find ourselves in a very awkward position. Or we may say unkind things to people, or careless things about people. Afterwards, when we discover how our words have hurt, or what mischief they have done, we say, "Oh! I really didn't mean anything. I wasn't thinking what I was saying."

So a great deal of trouble and confusion in the world comes because boys and girls talk like that parrot, not knowing what they say or what God will think about it.—Russell Thomas, in The Australian Baptist.

Kittens in the Cradle.

Poor old Tabby had had hard luck. She had started in to raise two or three families of baby pussies and every time somebody would slip them away out of the nest when she happened to be out, and she never found out what became of them. So Tabby determined to find a safe place, and went up into the attic under the roof and found a little old-fashioned cradle which she thought was just the place to keep her babies safe.

There had not been any babies in that cradle for a long time. A dear old grandmother lived there, but the children and grandchildren had gone far away, and the grandmother and her old bachelor brother lived a very quiet life. One day the old lady went up into the attic to look after some herbs, when, happening to look across the room, she saw that the cradle under the eaves was rocking! It would swing to and fro very fast for a little while, and then almost stop, when, as if some fairy were rocking it, it would begin to rock furiously.

The little old grandmother was a brave woman, but it gave her such a turn that it was quite a while before she could muster up courage to cross the attic and find out what made the cradle rock. When she looked down into the cradle she was astonished. There were three pretty, plump little kittens.

They were having a great frolic; and as they rolled over each other and jumped up on the sides of the cradle they kept it rocking quite as it used to do when it had a sure-enough baby in it and grandpa sat beside it.

Just then old Tabby came up and rubbed herself against grandmother's dress, and jumped, purring, in among the kittens, who gave her a joyous welcome.

Grandmother's eyes had tears in them as she looked down into the old cradle, and she stroked old Tabby on the back and said: "Your babies are safe, Tabby."—Selected.

ONE THERE WAS.

One there was who, passing by,
Touched all life with alchemy,
Grass of field or birds of air
Made His heart of God aware.
Of comon salt or smooth-worn yoke
A figure patterned for eager folk;
Of wayside spring or granary
Symbols He made which never die;
From mustard seed or branching vine
Similitudes of things divine,
Meaning to leavening dough He lent;
He made, of bread, a sacrament.

The Romance of Names.

Touching evidence of generations of isolation is found in many of the given names, particularly on the distaff side, in use among the Southern mountain people, those descendants of early English settlers who sought liberty and security in the Appalachian highlands two centuries or so ago.

One's first thought would be that in a remote and scattered population the number of names in use would diminish. But a study of the names of nearly two thousand of these American highlanders reveals an extensive variety, though in many instances it is a variety of only slight differences. Diminutives are much used, even for middle names. Shortened forms are found to some extent among masculine names, but here there is larger use of family surnames and names of Biblical and historical character.

One of the chief reasons for variety is that large families have been usual among these descendants of the pioneers. Where there are a dozen or more children, which is not an infrequent progency, the supply of ordinary names becomes scanty, especially if neighbors have drawn on that supply for their own numerous sons and daughters.

Again, in the monotony and hardship of their lives, parents, especially the mothers, have found satisfaction in giving to their newborn such names as are not too common, or names that may be new, even if the difference from others may have been only in a single letter. For example: Alba and Alta; Oda, Ola, Oma, Ona, Ora, Ova; Ila, Ina and Iva; Neva and Neta; Olive and Oline.

Greater variety is found in Bevvie, Callie, Dovie, Dona, Drusy, Leeta, Lutie, Litha, Sudie, Sytha, Seema, Tina, Twila, Verlie, Vergie, Vingie. These are the full baptismal names. Among others still on the feminine side are:

Alpha, Aldawillda, Authelia, Delca, Erlene, Eurla, Ioma, Lona, Dalia, Lellia, Leola, Monie, Merlie, Nola, Netsy, Opal, Olva, Oleta, Orphemia, Phyla, Perlea, Talitha, Pressie, Vola, Vina, Vensu and Zella.

Note the affectionate sound of many of the names. Family affection is strong among these people. Parental love expresses itself freely and clearly in a second name discovered in one case—Precious.

Among the baptismal names of boys are found such diminutives as Ben, Bige, and even Doc. Omer and Uless tempt one to guess that their originals were Homer and Ulysses. And surely there is a distinction about such first names as Arlo, Claybe, Cofer, Darse, Enlo, Irby, Hargus and Printis.

Hundreds of names, unusual to most of us, are available. Among surnames the evidence of the Anglo-Saxon heritage is, of course, especially pronounced. And here one finds names which suggest those of the type used by Charles Dickens in various novels—Bobbit, Grizzle, Grubb, Riddle, Sparks and Tuggle.

It is in the given names, however, that the effect of generations of detachment from the outer world is impressive. In them something of the history of our Southern mountain neighbors is written.—Southern Mountaineers' Odd Names, from The Sun.

Knights of the Overall.

"Wish I could go to a lake cottage this summer!" said Jim White crossly, coming in just at dinner-time.

Mother—standing at the stove frying sausages, her face very flushed and her eyes a bit tired—looked up quickly. "Why Jim!" she said, "what made you think of that?"

"'Cause Mark Benson's going, with his uncle, and Ned and I have to stay here all summer and work in the field."

"Mark has money," said Mrs. White thoughtfully. "We used to have, Jimmy, before Father—"

"Yes, yes," said Jim quickly, looking ashamed, for he saw a tear fall into the sausages. Mother looked up quickly, to see if he had noticed; and he was looking out the window, so she wouldn't think he had.

"I know, Mother—before Father died, you were going to say. I'm a regular bear, I'll feel better after dinner."

Just then Ned came in, whistling like an oriole, his hair rumpled up like a haystack, an his blue eyes shining with a great idea.

Mother looked up smiling. "What now, Ned?" she said.

"I'm going fishing before sunup tomorrow. May I, Mother? Come along, Jim?" he said, sousling his face in the wash basin and scrubbing it till it shone like a looking-glass.

"Of course," said Mother, looking pleased. "Sure," said Jim, looking ashamed.

Ned's haystack was smoothed down nicely now, and Jim, too, was spick and span—all but the patched and faded overalls. Dinner was on the table, and the boys closed their eyes and folded their hands while Mother thanked God for the "many blessings" God had sent them. When she had finished, Jim looked at her out of the tail of his eye; but her face was turned away.

"Funny thing," said Ned, between gulps of potatoes and gravy, "about Mark Benson. He's going away for the summer, to have a splendid time with his uncle—but he's just as grumpy and uncomfortable-looking as ever. Think I'd rather stay home and work for you, Mumsy, if I had my choice."

"Why?" cried Jim, looking surprised enough to fall out of his chair. "Why, Ned?"

"'Cause I think it's a—lot—more—fun," said Ned slowly, looking straight at Jim with his laughing blue eyes. "Now look at those lily-white hands of Mark Benson's. He never dug a potato or weeded an onion row in his life. I like to get good and dirty once in a while—feels all the better when I get clean again. Besides, dirt's healthy—that kind. Poor old Mark is always sick—stays cooped up in that big library reading books all day. That's all he'll do at the summer cottage, too—he won't fish, or row ,or swim. And we can do all that right here, can't we Jimmy?"

"Yes," said Jim faintly, "we can."

"And, besides, I like to be needed," added Ned importantly, looking very much like his father. "Nobody ever needs Mark Benson. You need us, don't you, Mother?"

"Need you, Ned! I should say I do," she cried, and shook hands with him across the table.

Just then a timid knock came at the door. "Come in," called Jim, and they all looked a little sheepish when Mark Benson opened the door and peeped in with a frightened look.

"Glad to see you, Mark," said Mother kindly—"have dinner with us?"

"Oh, may I?" cried the lad eagerly. "I'd love to."

Mother soon had a place set for him, and Ned was talking fast to make "the company" forget his bashfulness.

"That's more than I've eaten for a month," said Mark when he had finished, as he pushed back his plate. Then, with a frightened look, he suddenly remembered why he had come.

"Wh—what I came for," he stammered, his face growing very red, "was to ask you, Mrs. White, if—if I could stay with you this summer."

Ned threw back his head and laughed, and Jim actually fell out of his chair with the shock. "You see," Mark went on, talking very fast, while Mother telegraphed with her eyes to Ned to be quiet, "I had a chance to go with Uncle Mark to the cottage on the lake. But it's so—so poky out there, so I just begged Mother to let me come and board with you instead. Mother'll pay you well," he added eagerly. "I told her I would like to learn to swim and row and fish, and I—I would like to work in the field and get dirty.'

Mother smiled at the lonely lad and said yes on the spot. Ned shouted and danced a jig, and Jim said, "We'll help you, Mark."

"That's my good boys," said Mother softly, beaming on them all. "It's what Father would call the Knights of the Overall."

Our religion is filled with joy, and we do less than our best if we give the impression that it is doleful. God has crowded our world with beauty; he wants us to enjoy it. He has given us a sense of humor to help us over the rough places. We cannot deny or ignore the hard experiences of life, but they will be softened wonderfully if we carry in our hearts the sure conviction that God lives and cares.

DEATHS

ENTERED INTO REST.

At the hospital, Charles Town, W. Va., October 4, 1935, WILLIAM BAINBRIDGE PACKETTE, born February 14, 1854. Son of John Bainbridge and Lucy Washington Packette of "Locust Hill," Jefferson County.

Mr. Packette was the last member of his immediate family. His father was son of Lieut. John Packette, distinguished in the War of 1812. His mother was a great-granddaughter of Col. Samuel Washington of "Harewood," Jefferson County.

Mr. Packette married first, Drusilla Rutherford of Charles Town; they had a son, W. B. Packette, Jr., of Staunton, Va. He married second, Annie, daughter of the late Col. John T. Gibson of Jefferson County, who survives him, with a daughter, Mrs. A. J. Todd of Washington, D. C.

Mr. Packette was a lifelong member of and an active worker in Zion Church; for over 41 years a vestryman and at time of his death, Senior Warden.

He was buried in Zion Church yard on the 7th of October.

MRS. SALLIE SIMMERMAN EWALD.

Entered into Life Eternal September 13th, from her home at Marion, Va., after a brief illness, MRS. SALLIE S. EWALD, widow of Thomas Ewald.

True in all the relations of life, she was noted for her kindness and friendliness to all, but above all else for her intense devotion and unswerving loyalty to her church, and her joyous and unstinted work in all of its activities. She took an active part in the Sunday School and Auxiliary, and was never absent from a service, unless prevented by illness. She will be greatly missed in our little congregation, and each member feels a personal loss in her passing.

She never spared herself in the labor of Christian service, always counting it a joy and privilege to be spent in the Master's use. Truly, as was said by one of her friends, "Her character was woven into her work."

"Well done, good and faithful servant, Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Cotinued from page 17.)

Each evening, gathered around an open fire in the assembly hall the question box was opened, and suggested themes were discussed with zest. Some of these were: What should be done with the President's letter? Unemployment insurance of the clergy. How to make vestry meetings more profitable. Are Church (Sunday) schools worth while? How should the Church face the threat of war?

The "Argus," a conference news (?) paper of two issues, edited by the Rev. Joseph Harvey, and read at the conclusion of the evening meal, afforded a pleasing contrast to the more serious business of the day.

The Diocese to Celebrate Thirty Years of Progress.

In celebration of the thirty years of progress made by the diocese since its creation in 1905, a special issue of The Harrisburg Churchman, official newsmagazine of the diocese, will be published late this month. Feature stories telling the history of the diocese, of its organizations and of a great many of its parishes will be carried in the issue, the first of its kind ever published here. The issue is expected to have three to five times as many pages as the regular issues and it will be profusely illustrated. Contributors will include the Ven. Alun A. Hughes, registrar, who is compiling the history of the diocese; the Rev. Robert F. Gibson, D. D., of Charlottesville, Va., rector of Monticello Parish and the first editor of The Harrisburg Churchman (1905-1915), who has prepared an article telling of his regime, and Miss Albertine Batzle, secretary of the diocesan Woman's Auxiliary.

Fiftieth Anniversary of Choir Celebrated.

The boy choir of St. Luke's Church, Kalamazoo, the Rev. A. Gordon Fowkes, rector, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of a vested boy choir in the parish the week of October 13. A banquet for all former choir boys was held on October 14, and the presentation of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" is planned for Sunday, October 20. This oratorio will be sung by a choir of 80 voices, assisted by guest soloists. George J. Shaffer, eminent Pittsburgh and Detroit baritone, will sing the role of "Elijah."

This famous choir has achieved something of a national reputation under the direction of Henry Overley, organist and choirmaster, and each year gives a number of out-of-town concerts. A short illustrated history of the choir is being compiled.

Canon Bernard Iddings Bell will be the principal speaker at the annual fall dinner of St. Luke's Parish on November 4.

Personal Notes

Calls Accepted.

The Rev. Frank Damrosch, Jr., of Newark, N. J., rector of St. Andrew's Church, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Paul's Curch, Doylestown, Pa., and took charge October 15. Mr. Damrosch succeeds to the vacancy caused by the death last May of the Rev. W. Reese Scott. Mr. Damrosch is a native of New York City, where he was born in November, 1888. A graduate of Yale University he received his theological training in the Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, Conn., and the General Theological School, New York City. Ordained to the priesthood in 1914, Mr. Damrosch first served as a Curate at St. Ignatius' Church, New York City, following which he served as rector successively at St. Luke's, Mechancsville, N. Y.; Trinity, Bristol, R. I.,; St. Luke's, Brockport, N. Y. St. James, Brooklyn, and St. Andrew's, Newark, N. J.

The Rev. Harry Walker will be installed as rector of Trinity Church, Columbus, Ga., on October 20, by Bishop H. J. Mikell. A pageant will be presented by the Church School, "A Vision of the House of God." Mr. Walker received his training at Kingston, Jamaica, at the school which is a branch of Durham University, the English Theological School. His early ministry was spent in England, and he returned to this country during the World War, where he took an active part in civilian and war work. He comes to Columbus from Daytona Beach, Florida, where he has been active in all phases of the community and diocesan work, especially is he interested in the work of the Young People.

The Rev. Walter W. Clem will take charge of St. Paul's Church, Macon, Ga., coming from Waynesboro, Va. Mr. Clem is a graduate of Worcester Academy in Masschusetts, the University of Virginia, and the Virginia Seminary at Alexandria.

The Rev. Henry P. Krusen, deacon, has been received from the Diocese of Pennsylvania, and has been given charge, under the Bishop, of Holy Trinity Church, Manistee, Michigan.

The Rev. Albert Linnell Schrock, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Allegan, Michigan, has been appointed priest-in-charge of All Saints' Church, Saugatuck.

The Rev. Howard Harper, who has been called as rector of Grace Church, Waycross, Ga., assumed charge on Sunday, October 6. Grace Church has been without a rector since the Rev. John B. Walthour resigned January 1, to accept the rectorship of St. Andrew's Church, Tampa, Florida.

The Rev. William P. Dame, D. D., rector of Trinity Church, Upperville, Virginia, has accepted a call to St. John's Church, Worthington Valley, Maryland, and will also serve as Chaplain of Hannah More Academy. Mr. Dame assumed his new charge October 15.

Ordinations.

The Rev. Franklin Harris Spencer was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop White in St. Thomas' Church, Salem, Illinois, October 6, the Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity. The ordinand was presented by Archdeacon Cluver of Belleville. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Samuel E. Arthur of Mattoon.

Mr. Spencer is in charge of some eleven Missions of the Church in the large mission field of the Diocese of Springfield in Southern Illinois.

Previous to his ordination as deacon, Mr. Spencer served the Diocese of Springfield as Executive Secretary for some nine years. Mr. Spencer was for a number of years one of the secretaries of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Honor Norman Hutton.

Many Chicago friends of the late Dr. Norman O. Hutton gathered at St. Chrysostom's Church, where Dr. Hutton was rector for twenty years, Sunday morning, October 6, and paid tribute to his work there. The Rev. Dudley Scott Stark, present rector, officiated at the memorial service and delivered an appealing address on Dr. Hutton's life and work. Dr. Stark attended the funeral for Dr. Hutton in the East a few days previous.

DEATHS.

Philip Knox Edwards, D. D.

The Rev. Philip Knox Edwards, D. D., died suddenly September 20, 1935, in San Diego, California. Dr. Edwards suffered a stroke in September, 1932, while rector of St. Mark's Church, Casper, Wyoming, and was unable to continue his ministry. He went to San Diego to convalesce and retired from the active ministry. A cerebral hemorrhage on September 20 was the immediate cause of his death.

Dr. Edwards was born in Niles, Michigan, on December 7, 1879, the son of George F. and Mary (Knox) Edwards. He graduated from Seabury Divinity School, Fairbault, in 1905. He was ordained deacon and priest by Bishop Edsall in 1905 and 1906. He married Miss Iabel McMillan Cole in 1907.

His charges were: St. John's Church, Mankato, Minn.; All Saints' Church, McAlester, Okla.; and St. Mark's Church, Casper, Wyoming. He was rector of St. Mark's Church, Casper, fifteen years and built the beautiful church there.

Funeral services were held in San Diego and the interment of his ashes will be in Casper at a later date. He is survived by his widow and four children, who reside in California.

Mrs. Walter Mitchell.

Susan Glass Baker Mitchell, wife of the Bishop of Arizona, died in Phoenix on September 16. The funeral was held in the cathedral with Dean Lane, Archdeacon Jenkins, and Bishop Bratton (who had come out for the annual fall conference), officiating; interment was in Winchester, Va., with the Rev. R. B. Nelson, officiating.

Mrs. Mitchell came of colonial stock. Her paternal ancestors settled in the Shenandoah Valley on land which was a grant from the Crown and her maternal forebears on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. She and her husband were married in 1902. Possessed of an indomitable spirit, her frail body was never equal to the demands she made upon it and more than once during her life, seemed about to give way.

She was always closely associated with her husband in his work and will be sorely missed throughout the District of Arizona for that reason as well as on her own personal account.

The service in the cathedral was made notable by the fact that all the clergy of the district were present but two, who were unavoidably detained at home by circumstances beyond their control.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

We are Christians because someone brought us the gospel.

God, who made the butterfly,
Wills that not one soul should die.

We do not know God as He is until we know Him as a Comforter.

No Christian should ever doubt the power of Christ's spirit and teaching to transform both the individual and society.

Be spiritual in your natural life, and natural in your spiritual life.

No scholar attains the highest of scholarship if he be a stranger to Christianity.

"Only a sinner recognizes a Saviour."
—Dr. W. Hersey Davis.

The other day I attended the funeral of a negro minister and I was struck with one phrase in a song they sang. I wish I could bring it to mind now in full, but the phrase was:

"'Oh! Thou who never lost a battle, Stand by me."
—Dr. John G. Truitt.

Kind words do not cost much. They never blister the lips. They make other people good-natured and produce their own image on men's souls, and a beautiful image it is.
—Pascal.

God works in a mysterious way in grace as well as in nature, concealing his operations under an imperceptible succession of events, and thus keeps us always in the darkness of faith.
—Fenelon.

The soul grows into lovely habits as easily as into ugly ones, and the moment a life begins to blossom into beautiful words and deeds, that moment a new standard of conduct is established, and your eager neighbors look to you for a continuous manifestation of the good cheer, the sympathy, the ready wit, the comradeship, or the inspiration you once showed yourself capable of. Bear figs for a season or two, and the world outside of the orchard is very unwilling you should bear thistles.
—Kate Douglas Wiggin.

No nation has ever been made secure by arms. Preparation for war leads to war, not from it. It is friendship, understanding, good-will that guarantees peace. Security lies in the realm of spirit. When people learn brotherhood, then they will be secure from their fellows; and when they know God as Father they will be secure from all the powers of evil.

The sun does not shine for a few trees and flowers, but for the wide world's joy. The lowly pine on the mountain-top waves its sombre boughs, and cries, "Thou art my sun;" the little meadow-violet lifts its cup of blue, and whispers with its perfumed breath, "Thou art my sun"; and the grain in a thousand fields rustles in the wind, and makes answer, "Thou art my sun." So God sits effulgent in heaven, not for a favored few, but for the universe of life; and there is no creature so poor or so low that he may not look up with child-like confidence, and say, "My Father, thou art mine."
—Beecher.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED
By
REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

THE BEGINNING OF ST. JOHN'S GOSPEL
Coverdale's Bible

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Bible Continued.

Mr. Editor:

A friend whom I honor, always replies when I call attention to a new book on religion, that he never reads books of that kind, that the Bible is the best Book on Religion and the only Book that he needs and reads. True. The Bible is able to meet every need. The Bible tells us of sinful, erring men, who were all made over, who were completely changed by the grace of God.

But these miracles are happening today. I love to read about them. These are peculiar times, times of difficulty, of perplexity.

Jesus gave a promise that He would never leave us, never forsake us. Here and there, lights are shining, movements are starting and growing. There are men who are proving that material gain is the last thing they consider. Little phrases come to me. A minister said, "The only success is to be like Him." Is not that true? If we have lost the sense of nearness to Him, if our souls have become dull, unresponsive to things spiritual, what happiness can we have? We all want happiness. Another minister said, "Neither success nor failure—simply Himself." He never disappoints.

Books by two English clergymen have meant so much to me. And here in America are a number of clergymen whose writings have brought me great delight. One of them has classes where tired and discouraged souls bring their problems and are taught how to live. This pastor, the Rev. John Bunting, of Cates Avenue, St. Louis, Mo., invites perplexed people to write him. He has helped many by personal interview, by letters, and by his books. Nineteen centuries ago the early Christians found that nothing could separate them from the love of Christ. St. Paul cries out that time would fail him to tell of those who out of weakness were made strong. And time would fail me!

I might use quarts of ink, and wear out scores of pens, and I could not tell all the wonderful stories of lives I have have known.

That is one blessing one finds when one is seventy-five!

I turn from the daily papers where I find news of accidents and crimes, and I take up the books of several English and American pastors, and I find refreshment. "The Bible has it all." Indeed it has, but these modern writers about modern miracles are showing that in the year 1935, even today, nothing can separate us from the love of Christ. In Him we may be more than conquerors. I have also my own eyes, and my own memory! I have my saints! Looking back over the years, I see their lives as in an open book. They live! They call me on! But not only the dear ones who are "over there." There are also my saints who are here, those with whom I talk today, those whose faces are glowing.

It is the "Bible continued" that I am finding, not only in the books some pastors have written, but in the lives and in the faces of men and women whom I meet every day.

Grace W. Harrison.

God's Little Ones, the Church of Tomorrow.

Mr. Editor:

I am writing to you as one who has known you through your work among the children and through "The Thousandfold Page" of the Southern Churchman to which I have been a subscriber for many years.

I love children and this work is the big thing in my ministry, for I feel that what the Church is tomorrow will be due to the care we give to God's little ones in this generation.

All during my ministry, as exercised in the Sunday school (not Church school, for I attended a Church school five days a week for nine months of each year, and continued to do so for a number of years), I have been conscious of the fact that the little ones loved and do love Hymn 360, but I have always been conscious of the fact that when the hymn was sung in the Sunday school service that the right note was not being sounded.

I love the hymn and the setting as well. After many years I decided to "tamper with it—possibly to mutilate it"—and I give the result below. The children here sing it, and it has been passed on to a number of other schools:

"Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me;
Bless Thy little lamb today:
Through the darkness Thou hast led me,
Keep me safe along the way.

"All the night Thy hand hast led me,
And I thank Thee for Thy care;
Thou hast warmed me, clothed and watched me;
Listen to my morning prayer."

The third verse is the same as that in the Hymnal.

I shall appreciate any attention you may give this and any suggestions in setting by the side of this beautiful Evening Prayer for children, one that is suitable for the morning hours.

With all best wishes for you and your great work.

One Interested in Children.

A Ten Point Program.

Bishop Hobson in some of his addresses on The Forward Movement has stated that, after conference with many clergy and laity in many parishes, there seem to stand out ten things that are weaknesses in the average Episcopal Church. It is the duty of each parish to check itself on these points, and it is a task of the Forward Movement Commission to aid parishes in attaining the ideal in each of these points.

The ten points are as follows: a deeper spirit of fellowship between church members; a more adequate Church school program; a new and greater emphasis on confirmation and confirmation instruction; a renewal of religion in the home; a carefully prepared program for youth; an effective program of adult education; a challenging and interesting program for men; more adequate teaching of the place of The Holy Communion; restoring church attendance; a sense of community responsibility.

It would be a fine thing if every parish could challenge itself honestly on each of these points. We know one parish which has—and justly—the reputation of being unusually effective, that can only claim to be adequate in five of these points of program. And where parishes are interested there is often room for great improvement.

Does not this ten point program center down to the main point that many parishes are carelessly running along without regard to the interests and needs of the people in general? Are we not, in contrast to such a program, expecting the rector to urge all of these things from the pulpit, and yet not expect him to engage the participation of groups studying these vital points?

Of course, as Bishop Hobson brings out, there are many other matters that are important. There will probably be letters written stating that the most important matters have been left out entirely. One criticism was that the missions were neglected in this program, revealing our weaknesses, but we wonder if that criticism took into consideration that in a religious sense the world was the community and a sense of community responsibility extended far beyond a parish boundary. But if each of these ten points were strengthened in each parish there would be adequate interest aroused to meet any other weakness.

In the modern world we need more and more the sense of strength to acknowledge our weaknesses and the ability to enlist the members of the church to realize their own inadequateness. Surely The Forward Movement and Bishop Hobson are meeting our needs and pointing out to us a real solution.

Canon Law and Practicality.

In the ignorance that is natural and yet is appalling in our average layman, we probably would be sure to find the greatest ignorance in regard to canon law. To the great majority of our people there is not even a knowledge that such a thing exists. The average vestryman realizes that there is such a thing, and the average delegate to the diocesan convention votes on such laws, but seldom ever hears of them in between sessions of the diocesan legislative body. Consequently in ignorance he fails to obey canon law and is extremely surprised when it is called to his attention that either he or a friend has broken one.

Do we not need a complete revision of our canon law? We feel that we do. In the changing years the canons have been constantly revised with the hope of keeping up with changes of a developing church and nation. Many of the old have been retained, but additions have been made and in many cases the canons are not known because the individual clergy feel that they do not take into account the way people are actually living, and it would be more harmful to call attention to the canon law than to ignore it.

The tendency more and more in the law has been to turn to the bishops as the final place of discipline. Though our forefathers declared for a constitutional episcopate, the hope that the bishops might be able to enforce law and order has resulted in turning to them for many of the judgments.

The canons on marriage and divorce are typical. No trust has been left to the parish minister at all. For the most trivial things, such as whether a clergyman might waive the three-day notification, must still be referred to the bishop. Though the bishop may live hundreds of miles away and not know any of the people involved, he must nevertheless, in company with the chancellor who is a lawyer, pass on the validity of a divorced person.

The utmost foolishness comes in the treatment of persons who have been remarried contrary to the teaching of this Church. Many bishops have instructed their clergy to ignore this canon completely. As a matter of fact if literally carried out many of our church people would be excommunicated automatically.

Our plea is to turn many of these episcopal decisions over to the clergy who know the facts in the case and should be intelligent enough to know how to deal with them. Of course we will always have to be careful whom we admit as clergy. But granted that we live up to our ideals in education, let us restore the bishops in a sane canon law to spiritual pastors and masters

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

The Value of The League of Nations.

Ex-Secretary of State H. L. Stimson, in The New York Times.

Really the only sure way of keeping America out of war is for the world to prevent war from coming. Of course, that cannot be done by any nation alone. It can only be done by cooperative effort, and that cooperative effort is a most difficult performance.

Organized efforts in the world have reached the stage which we are now watching in the action of the League of Nations at Geneva, and we should be very foolish if we failed to recognize how far collective action has developed. Most of us confine ourselves to laughing at its failures. On the contrary, we should recognize and applaud the progress it has attained and pray for its complete success. Let us note what has happened in this present war between Italy and Ethiopia. For the first time in the history of the world the fifty-nine nations who constitute the League have been able to organize a public discussion of the matter before the war actually started. The two nations, Italy and Ethiopia, have been called before the bar, so to speak, of the League and there have been presented publicly in the face of the world all the facts which underlay their quarrel. The whole world has been given an opportunity to see how flimsy was the excuse for any war.

The whole world has been able to make up its mind as to which of these nations was at fault for this breach of the peace, and finally, after the matter had been fully heard and discussed, the nations constituting the Council of the League have unanimously agreed that the fault lies on the doorstep of Italy and not Ethiopia. They have solemnly decided that the government of Italy is the aggressor which has forced this war upon the world. Never before in the history of mankind has the world had the benefit of an impartial preliminary investigation by the neutral nations which has resulted in a unanimous verdict against one side and in favor of the other.

Can there be any doubt that such a situation represents an enormous progress in cooperative action on the part of the world, and has it not great possibilities for benefiting the world in the future in the prevention of war? And can any of us have any doubt that it is the duty of every one in every peace-loving nation throughout the world to throw his sympathies with the men and the nations and the League which has accomplished this great clarification of the rights and wrongs in this lamentable breach of the peace?

Church and State.

The Churchman, October 15, 1935.

The refusal of eight-year-old Carleton Nichols of Lynn, Mass., to salute the American flag in school is another illustration of the difficulty of segregating religion and politics, church and state. His father belongs to a religious sect which rejects all human governments as of the devil. Incidentally, we wonder that no one has pointed out the close similarity between the attitude of this youth and that of the early Christians who would not drop the incense before the image of the Roman Emperor. For after all, that meant little more than saluting the flag. We offer no defence of this boy and his father, and we sometimes have our doubts about the wisdom of the early Christians. But our greatest doubt is of the wisdom of school authorities who imagine that compelling children to recite an oath of allegiance to the flag is likely to have any material influence over their fundamental loyalty and patriotism. Just what good would be accomplished if the boy should yield to the threats of the school authorities? In the state and in the church we have not yet escaped from the superstition of the magic of recited formulas.

The World Not Going To The Dogs.

Rev. J. M. Rowland, D. D., in the Christian Advocate, October 10, 1935.

No not all of it. Much of it is going and much of it has always gone that way. I am not prepared to say whether a bigger per cent of the race is headed poochward than when I was a boy or not. I do believe it is making more fuss as it goes and running over more people on the way, and I believe the dogs are howling more than they used to do when they see what they have to deal with. We didn't have the gas and the horns years ago and we couldn't cut up such a racket going to the dogs.

I am still optimistic about the young generation. I still believe in the girls—some of them. I get peeved with them for sifting their cigarette ashes in my soup every time I go in a restaurant and for smoking on the bus until my face feels like a hog jowl. I get a little sick when I am crowded in close quarters with them, for it always did nauseate me to smell fresh paint. But I still believe in the girls and believe that out of this rush and roar many of them will come as fine women and lovely mothers.

The Present Strategy of Christian Advance.

Federal Council Bulletin, October, 1935.

There was a time—and not long ago—when there was a great body of Christian conviction and passion, but too meagre recognition of the social tasks to which spiritual resources should be harnessed. Today the situation is reversed. We see clearly great causes of human welfare to be served but lack the religious faith and energy which are essential to high achievement.

There was a time—and not long ago—when it was generally assumed that Christianity is necessary for the highest morality and character. Faith in God was regarded as the foundation of "the good life." Today the situation is radically different. A point of view prevails (commonly described as secularism) which denies the very thing that was formerly taken for granted. It is now widely held, most obviously in Russia, but also in our own country as well, that the best social living has no connection with religious belief.

In this new situation, the whole strategy of the Christian Church is altered. The point of primary emphasis has shifted. Once it was of crucial importance to arouse Christians to action. That need still remains, but the thing of most crucial importance today is to rebuild the foundations of Christian faith.

This consideration gives impressive significance to the movement for spiritual awakening which is being launched by the Federal Council of Churches under the general title of the "National Preaching Mission," about which a full announcement will soon be made. It is to be a united effort to bring about a revival of religion—in the deepest sense of the term. It is to be directed to restoring faith in God, as revealed in Jesus Christ, to its true place of primacy. It proceeds upon the belief that until there is a fresh grasp of the Christian understanding of life and a rebirth of basic Christian conviction, we cannot hope for any great triumph of any Christian cause.

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

The Spiritual Stratosphere

Our Lord taught us in His parables that even the most ordinary and commonplace things can be given a spiritual significance. Thus for instance, He said:—"The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a grain of mustard seed." And again:—"The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal till the whole was leavened." These are but instances of the way in which He illustrated His teaching of the Kingdom from natural objects, with which His hearers were familiar. In modern times the discoveries which have been made by our men of science have greatly enriched our store of illustrations which can be used to bring heaven and earth nearer together.

A Parable From Aviation.

For instance, the stratosphere has of late years been brought within our ken by the daring of our aviators in seeking to use it as a new highway for an easy and more rapid means of communication with the Old World. The stratosphere provides a more rarified atmosphere which offers far less resistance than in the lower altitudes, that is, those nearer the earth. Moreover the stratosphere is free from clouds and also, we believe, from winds and storms. Now we may compare the spiritual world with the stratosphere, as it is free from so many of the things which disturb our peace of mind in this present world, and offer resistance to our efforts towards the attainment of a higher life.

"The world is too much with us late and soon, Getting and spending we lay waste our powers."

A Babel of Ideas.

There is so much confusion of thought caused by the mingling of so many different interests, political, economic, scientific, and philosophical, that we seem to be driven hither and thither by the chance winds coming from many different directions. Or we may say that we are more or less in a fog all the time, because there does not seem to be any clear road ahead; no definite objective towards which we can guide our steps. Nor do there seem to be any great World Leaders who have a clear vision of an upward path which will lead us onto higher ground, far above all the confusion and uncertainty which seem to be characteristic of our day and generation.

The Only Way of Escape.

It is a great relief to know that there is a world near at hand to which we can betake ourselves and find an atmosphere of calm and peace such as this world cannot give nor take away. For on the wings of faith and prayer we can rise above the clouds and storms which beset us here and can contemplate the Eternal Realities which cannot be disturbed or shaken even by the rise and fall of nations, or by any of the calamities of war or revolution, or any other catastrophe which may seem to threaten our existing civilization. The spiritual stratosphere is a safe refuge from all that threatens our happiness and peace of mind here on earth. There the sun always shines because that sunshine is none other than the consciousness of the Love of God, the knowledge of which fills the soul with the assurance that all must be well no matter what may seem to be against us.

"Why should we dwell 'midst clouds of fear
When glorious sunlight is so near,
Or in the gloom of doubt be found
When love encircles us around?"

The Confusion of Our Religious Ideas.

Our religious life here on earth is so closely interwoven with thoughts and desires connected with that which is merely temporal that it is almost impossible to distinguish between the mere outward appearance of things and the underlying reality which is only to be found in the unseen world. Even in matters of religious belief there are so many different opinions current among Christians, and there is such an intermingling of secular and religious questions that it is hard to realize how wonderful the truths of Christianity are.

"Life like a dome of many colored glass
Stains the pure radiance of eternity
Until death shivers it to atoms."

The Temporal and the Eternal.

If we could do as St. Paul did:—"Look not at the things which are seen but at the things which are not seen," then we should not be blinded and deceived by the merely temporal but see clearly and continuously a vision of the Eternal. In other words, if we would escape from the shadows and false lights of the life of the world, we must accustom ourselves to contemplate with undistracted mind and attention the Presence of God, for that is really the spiritual stratosphere where the atmosphere is pure and clear from clouds and mists and the Light of the Love of God is always with us.

The Omnipresence of Love.

If God is Love, then love is everywhere,
And sheds the glow of dawn on black despair,
Turning the night of gloom to daylight fair.

If God is Love, then love doth ever wait
Upon man's need; it is fair Eden's gate
Through which he flees and finds a happier state.

If God is Love, then sins that bar the way
To His own presence, soon must pass away
When man doth humbly turn to God and pray.

If God is Love, then love doth seek to share
The sorrow and the burden of man's care,
For Christ the King of Love, the cross did bear.

If God is Love, then death itself must be
Not foe, but kindly friend to set us free,
That man the blessedness of God may see.

The Outbreak of War

By WILLIAM T. MANNING,

Bishop of New York.

On earth peace, good will toward men.—St. Luke 2:14.

WE ARE SEEING at this time with deep dismay a new outbreak of War in the World. It is a striking and an humbling fact that this situation exists at a moment when we are commemorating the four hundredth anniversary of the Translation of the Bible into our own tongue. If the teachings of that Book were received and followed, War in this world would be unknown. But today War again confronts us, and as Bishop of this Diocese, and from the pulpit of this Cathedral, I feel that I must speak of it With the vast tragedy of the World War still fresh in our minds, with not only its memories but its effects still weighing tragically upon us, it seems incredible that we should be witnessing another outbreak the consequences of which no one can foretell. The War in Ethiopia is not remote from us here in America. Today the whole World is one World. Whether we wish it or not, we are all members of one World Family. No nation today can sit secure in its own fancied isolation. What is done today in China, or in India, or in Africa, affects the life of all of us. As one of the Family of Nations, we cannot escape our share of the moral and spiritual effects of this War nor our share of moral responsibility in regard to it. If the United States were bearing its rightful share of World responsibility as a member of the League of Nations, the situation at this moment might be a different one. And if th outbreak should lead to a European Crisis, which God forbid, we shall inevitably become involved deeply as we wish to avoid this. As the world stands today we cannot separate ourselves from the issues and the consequences of the situation in Ethiopia. Even if this War should be localized and confined to its present field its moral and spiritual principles and effects are of deep concern to us. We do not wish to be unfair in our judgment of the action of Italy. We feel great regard for the Italian people and appreciate their noble contributions to the world. We know that all the nations, including our own nation, have sinned in this matter. We recognize that Italy has suffered hardship and injustice in the terms of the Versailles Treaty, as other nations have also. We know that Italy is in great and real need of opportunity for her increasing population. We know that our present political and economic system, national and international, is imperfect, and that there is great need of juster arrangements, and of a juster sharing of opportunity, among the nations of the world. These considerations and others must be taken into account but, giving these considerations full weight, nothing can justify this unprovoked attack of Italy upon Ethiopia and its people. The leading nations of the world, Italy among them, have solemnly pledged themselves that such attacks by one people upon another shall no longer be made. They have agreed not to use military and naval force as an instrument of national policy. The violation of that agreement by Italy is a step backward in the progress of humanity, it is a blow to the efforts and movements for the ending of War and to the sacredness of International agreements; it is a threat to the peace and security of the World. In this action Italy is forgetting the Law of God and her own honour, and is committing an immeasurable wrong and crime against the Ethiopian people. On Christian principles this action cannot be defended or excused. Christians and Churches in all lands should lift up their voices in condemnation of this wrong to Ethiopia and offer their prayers that juster counsels may prevail and that the strife may speedily be ended. And let us hope that to the Italian people and their leaders their own great Church both in Italy and elsewhere will make its voice heard unmistakably for justice and peace.

This deliberate and ruthless act of aggression should stir all of us to redouble our efforts for the ending of War and the establishment of peace among men.

WHAT CAN we do to promote the cause of Peace? We must not allow ourselves to become discouraged. Great progress has been made in the Peace Movement. The War Spirit is powerful, but the Peace Spirit is growing stronger and stronger. More has been done for the promotion of Peace in the past fifteen years than had been done in the preceding fifteen centuries. There is a public sentiment and a public conscience in the matter today which did not exist twenty years ago.

Our Leagues and pacts are far from perfect, but they have accomplished much.

They have fostered a sentiment against War more powerful than ever before, and that sentiment will grow.

We must more thoroughly and fearlessly face the economic causes of War. If we are to have Peace in this world we must have human society built for Peace, built on the principles of Justice, Brotherhood, and Mutual Service.

We must use our influence, to the utmost of our ability and opportunity in creating and strengthening public opinion and we must give our full, active cooperation and support to all wise efforts and movements for the establishing and upholding of World Peace. Can we say that we are doing this as a Nation? Not one of us wishes to see our Country drawn into War anywhere. But America has some duty and responsibility in this world beyond playing the part of an "unofficial observer."

We must not be guided by mere emotionalism in our work for Peace. We must face the hard facts and think clearly and justly on this great question. We must not talk as though the use of force is always immoral, or as though there is no difference between those who engage in police action for the preservation of Peace and those who wage deliberate and aggresive War. Confused thinking of that sort does not help or strengthen the cause of Peace.

Ramsay MacDonald who has stood all his life for Peace, asks this question:—"If a nation insists upon being the aggressor, refusing to negotiate and defying every consequence, and exercises its will by military force, what is our duty? Can pacifists stand aside and say, Because I do not believe in force I will let those who do believe in it exercise their destructive will on nations? Or are we driven by hard facts to accept the view that when an aggressor arises to smash the world's peace machinery, International opinion must unite to protect the world against him?" This, Mr. MacDonald says, is a question for peace makers the world over to study and settle.

The world is asking today how we can establish and preserve Peace on earth. Our movements and measures are helping. But there is only one sufficient and adequate answer to that question and the stern logic of facts and events is compelling us to see this. The one full and adequate answer is that given by the Christian Gospel, the bringing in of the Kingdom of God on earth. There is no other answer. There is no other world-wide call to Peace and Brotherhood except that

The Bible and the College Student

By WALTER LEE LINGLE,

President of Davidson College.

COLLEGE students cannot afford to leave the Bible out of their reading and thinking. From a literary, historical, ethical, and spiritual point of view no man's education is complete without a knowledge of the Bible. The Bible is not a single book. It is a divine library, which is noted for its comprehensiveness and infinite variety. John Richard Green illustrates its charm and variety in an eloquent paragraph in his "Short History of the English People." He says: "When Bishop Bonner set up the first six Bibles in St. Paul's, many well-disposed people used much to resort to the hearing thereof, especially when they could get any that had an audible voice to read to them . . Sunday after Sunday, day after day, the crowds that gathered round Bonner's Bibles in the nave of St. Paul's, or the family group that hung on the words of the Geneva Bible in the devotional exercises at home, were leavened with a new literature. Legend and annal, warsong and psalm, state roll and biography, the mighty voices of prophets, the parables of evangelists, stories of mission journeys, of perils by sea and among the heathen, philosophic argument, apocalyptic visions—all were flung broadcast over minds unoccupied, for the most part, by rival learning."

Sir Walter Scott was one of the greatest of all the novelists who have ever written in the English language. He wrote many books and knew books as few men have ever known them. His great library is still intact in his beautiful old home known as Abbotsford. As I went through his library this past summer, I was struck by the large number and scholarly character of the books which it contained. One of the most conspicuous books in that library is a handsome copy of the Bible, which bears this inscription in the handwriting of his mother: "To my son, Walter Scott, from his affectionate mother, Ann Rutherford"; and this additional inscription in his own handwriting: "This Bible was the gift of my grandfather to my mother and presented by her to me."

He prized that Bible not only as an heirloom, but as a book of literature and a book of life. His son-in-law and biographer, Lockhart, who is buried at his feet in Dryburgh Abbey, tells of a striking incident that occurred while Sir Walter was on his last bed of illness and only a few days before his death: "He expressed a wish that I should read to him, and when I asked from what book, he said: 'Need you ask? There is but one'." As that great man surveyed his whole library and the whole field of literature, there was one book that towered above all others, and that was his Bible. I wonder if it was his mother's Bible that he was calling for. At any rate, there is the estimate of a great man whose library was crowded with all manner of great books. Is it too much to say that no man's education is complete without a knowledge of this Book of Books?

WHAT has been the attitude of college students toward this Book? One day Martin Luther, a student at the University of Erfurt, ran across a copy of the Bible in the university library. It was the first complete copy of the Bible that he had ever seen. It laid hold of his heart and mind and transformed his whole life. That copy of the Bible had more to do in making Martin Luther a great Christian leader and a great world figure, than any other influence that ever entered into his life.

William Tyndale was an unusually brilliant student in the University of Oxford. His biographer tells us that he became so skilled in Latin, Greek, Hebrew, French, Spanish, Italian, and English, that whichever he spoke in you would suppose was his native tongue. The Bible came into his life with all its transforming power. It completely captured his heart and mind, and he yielded himself to it without reservation, and finally gave his life for it. Today we think of him as the father of the English Bible. As we celebrate the four hundredth anniversary of the printing of the first complete Bible in English, let us remember that of it the New Testament and the Pentateuch were practically Tyndale's translation with a few revisions.

John and Charles Wesley, and George Whitefield, students at Oxford University, became interested in the methodical study of the Bible. It became a transforming power in their lives, and they went out to turn the world upside down. Through the power of the Word of God, John Wesley became the greatest force of the eighteenth century in England.

Thus we might come on down through the centuries and call the roll of a multitude of college and university students whose lives have been transformed and made great by the Word of God. But what about present-day college students? Of course, it is not possible to put all college students together in one group under one label. There are just as many different kinds of college students as there are of older people, and there are at least fifty-seven varieties of the older ones.

Some college students shrug their shoulders at the Bible. Others are indifferent toward it. There are still others who are woefully ignorant of it. But, after all this has been said, there are many college students who approach it with reverence and find rich treasures in it.

NO ONE person knows the hundreds of thousands of college students in America well enough to speak with certainty about their attitude toward the Bible. Let me speak definitely out of my own observation and experience. I have the privilege of being connected with a college which has a student group of 650 young men representing more than twenty-five different states. For nearly fifty years courses in the English Bible have been a required part of the curriculum. Freshmen and Sophomores are required to take three hours a week. Elective courses are provided for Juniors and Seniors. The English Bible itself is studied and not simply books about the Bible. After fifty years we ought to be in a position to form some estimate of the attitude of our college students toward the Bible.

First of all, it is our observation that the great majority of college students who study the Bible find it an interesting book. The late United States Senator Albert J. Beveridge wrote a book entitled: "The Bible as Good Reading." The majority of students studying the Bible will concur in the idea expressed in that title. By the way, in that book Senator Beveridge says: "Surely this book has not held sway over the human mind for two thousand years without having engaging qualities—something that appeals to our interest."

The majority of those students who study the Bible find it a profitable book. Its teachings enter into their moral, ethical, and spiritual ideals and thus help to mold their characters. Not only so, but its simplicity and beauty help to mold their English style. We won-

The Humanity of a Tree

By STAMO S. SPATHEY,

Editor of the Book Reviews.

WE ALL love to repeat the words of the singer, "Only God can make a tree." We may also conclude that only God can make a man. This is the claim of all religious waiths of all ages, more so of Judaism and Christianity. God has made man. This is final, but the method He used to make him is another matter that shall be discussed in some future article; however, there is a very close affinity between men and trees. Trees play a conspicuous part in Divine revelation as we find it in the Bible. There was the forbidden tree in the midst of the Garden of Eden. We read in Genesis 1:11, where God created grass and trees before He had created life. This was necessary because most living creatures, including man, cannot live without grass and trees. Then we think of the Tree of Life guarded by the flaming sword of the Cherubim, keeping the first man from eating of its fruit and living for ever. Then we turn to the last book of the Bible; there we find that man who was expelled from the garden of his childhood by disobedience has received an invitation, "And the Spirit and the Bride say, Come"—the echo is picked up from the Spirit and the Bride, "and let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst Come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Rev. 21:17). The Cherubim, with their flaming sword, stand at the gate of Eden wondering at the progress of redemptive love. Man left the Garden with its talking serpents and forbidden tree never to return. Man has eaten of the Tree of Life in Jesus Christ and lives for ever. The former expulsion is changed into an invitation, the condemnation into a benediction, the curse into a blessing, and the right to the Tree of Life is restored. This is a picture of the Bible concerning man and trees. There are other instances where trees were used by Jesus Christ to teach lessons of fruitless human lives. This we have in the cursing of the fig tree. As a matter of fact, by careful observation of the text as was reported by the eye-witnesses, Jesus did not curse the tree as we think of cursing, He just spoke of the tree's nature. When the tree was found withered, Peter thought Jesus had cursed it, but He did not. "And Jesus answered and said unto it, 'No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever'" (Mark 11:14). The key to the interpretation of this passage is that it was barren, "Having leaves." Externally dressed but no fruit. This is true of human lives. We see them in every nook of life. They are worthless and are bound for destruction. A wonderful lesson! The fig tree is a fruit-bearing tree and is responsible because of its peculiar nature. Jesus did not say this to any timber tree. All trees were not made to bear fruit, as we well know. The fig tree is good for nothing else, and if it fails in this particular and only destiny, might as well wither away and cease to be.

HAVING these few instances from the Bible in mind, we ask why trees have played such a prominent part in Divine revelation? We will find the answer in the fact that there is humanity in trees. Most of the virtues of human life are found in trees. Trees are mute philosophers, carrying on the laws of their own life accurately and with a marvelous constancy. A tree is born like a human being. It starts with a tiny seed that contains its particular life characteristics. Its life is inherited from its ancestors, so is human life. We inherit life. Anything that is inherited bespeaks of an eternal Source we know as God. There are instincts in a tree. Self-preservation is very pronounced. It directs its roots down into the soil because there it finds its necessary food to sustain its life, but does not depend on its roots alone, it shoots upwards and develops leaves. The leaves are the tree's nostrils by which it breathes air and the rays of the sun, for this reason no tree can grow where there is no sunlight. On high mountain tops where there is snow the year round, no trees can thrive. The tree's first characteristic is dependence on other forces for its existence. We human beings are like trees in this respect. We get our sustaining elements from the same old earth, but we must cultivate it. It will not yield food unless we work it. This is a law of existence for both men and trees. The tree cultivates the soil that sustains it by dropping its old leaves around its circumference and thereby enriches the soil to supply its needs.

Besides dependence and constant activity, the tree is subject to disease and death as we are. Germs and insects prey on trees. Some are destroyed early in life as children, others in their youth, still others in old age. This inner decay exposes the tree to the violence of the wind and some day the stately old tree that has withstood many violent attacks tumbles over. This is a human characteristic of trees. We are like trees in this respect. Trees are subject to epidemics. So are we. We contract each other's diseases as trees do.

PASSING to the last and perhaps the greatest human characteristic of the tree—this looks more like Divine than human, e. g., the tree's sacricial service for men. Trees die to give men lumber to build houses and to make furniture. Every time we sit on a chair or open a door we must realize that we touch the bones of a dead tree. When we sit in a church pew to worship God, we must think of the trees that supplied the wood to make the pews. Walking on the floor—only if the dead trees could speak They are burned up in flames to keep us warm in the winter and to cook our meals. Of course, today we do not use as much wood to cook and heat our houses as in olden days, and therefore we must save trees from destruction.

Trees also supply lumber for building ships to navigate the seas, rivers, lakes and oceans. Until recent years, ships were made entirely of wood. The old wooden sailing boats, who can forget them? Even now all small craft is made of wood. Someone ought to write a book on the service of trees to humanity. I think it is far greater than of animals. But I must close with an earnest plea to everybody to be careful not to cause forest fires now in the fall season of the year, when trees will drop their leaves and prepare to rest for a while until spring. Thousands upon thousands of trees are destroyed every year by fires that could be prevented. If only God can make a tree, men, please do not destroy what you cannot make. Trees are human, like you. Do not commit murder. Hear the plea of the poet George Perkins Morris to save trees:

"Woodman, spare that tree!
Touch not a single bough!
In youth it sheltered me,
And I'll protect it now.
'Twas my forefather's hand
That placed it near his cot;
There, woodman, let it stand,
Thy axe shall harm it not!"

Just one more thought: It was a tree that died to supply the two beams of the Cross upon which Jesus Christ died to give life to dying humanity. If that tree could have spoken on Calvary when it felt that innocent blood flowing from Emmanuel's veins—Oh, if only it could have spoken to tell the story of man's cruelty, of his brutality and of his sins that crucify the noblest and best, what story it would be! Every tree has its Cross.

Evangelical Truth and Apostolic Order

By FREDERICK WARD KATES,

Rochester, New York.

ONE hundred and five years ago this fall died John Henry Hobart, third bishop of the Diocese of New York, who has been called by some "the greatest Bishop of our Church in this land."

Bishop Hobart is a monumental figure in the history of the Protestant Episcopal Church, eclipsed in the value and extent of his contributions to the Church only by Bishop William White of Pennsylvania, Presiding Bishop from 1795 to 1836.

In the annals of our Church Bishop Hobart's name will be forever memorable because of his tremendous accomplishments and influence on the Church at home and because of his very considerable share, until lately but little realized, in the Oxford Movement.

Hobart's death, September 12, 1830, in the rectory of St. Peter's Church, Auburn, New York, marked the end of an epoch-making episcopate. The Rt. Rev. Richard Channing Moore, second bishop of Virginia, read the burial service at his funeral in Trinity Church, New York City.

From 1811-1830 Bishop Hobart was an indefatigable worker in his diocese, at that time the entire State of New York. Church membership increased three times faster than the population of the state. In 1811 he found Davenport Phelps the only missionary west of Utica in a region of about 300,000 population. He left thirty-six missionaries within the same limits out of fifty-two in the whole state.

He found twenty parishes and missions with five churches, two of them unfinished, and less than 500 communicants in 1811. At his death there were sixty-six parishes and missions, with thirty-six churches built and consecrated, and 2,331 communicants and about 1,000 children under religious instruction.

He found no provision for the support of the episcopate except the salary of an assistant minister of Trinity Church, New York City. He left an episcopal fund of $46,474.

Besides these accomplishments and even more noteworthy was his vigorous championship and clear and persuasive setting forth in his preaching, addresses and books, of the distinctive principles of our Church, until that time, frankly, slurred over and kept out of sight.

"My banner is Evangelical Truth and Apostolic Order," declared Hobart, and with this watchword, he awoke the Church to new life, to a fresh awareness of her genius and mission.

He was rightly called a "Soldier of Christ"; he was a soldier for Christ and also for His Church. In 1804 he published a widely-circulated devotional work entitled, "A Companion for the Altar," in which he declared his belief in the divine nature of the Church, the distinctive marks of which he claimed to be "primitive faith and apostolic order."

"Could I send my voice," he said, "into every part of Zion I would send it with this holy watchword: 'The Church in her faith, her ministry, her order, her worship, in all her great distinctive principles'."

His views met with opposition and he was accused of "disturbing the peace of the Church." But within his empire state diocese there was singular harmony and universal acceptation of the point of view and opinions of the forceful, energetic and beloved Bishop. New York, due to his influence, became what was known in his time as a "High Church" diocese. Bishop Hobart rooted in the hearts of Episcopalians throughout the growing state a high estimation of and loyalty to the Church, her mission and principles, which have never been lost.

In his style of preaching Hobart anticipated John Henry Newman by combining evangelical fervor with Catholic doctrine. All contemporary accounts call attention to the warmth and moving power of his sermons. "They knew not whether to call him High Churchman or Methodist."

Not least of Bishop Hobart's contributions to our Church was the deep impress he made not only on the laity of his diocese but upon the clergy whom he gathered round him for the hard and self-denying missionary work in Western New York and who became largely what they were through the stimulating and guiding personality of their leader.

Canon C. P. S. Clarke, prebendary of Salisbury, England, and one of the Church's foremost historians, credits Hobart with anticipating Newman's famous argument of the via media; that, whereas Evangelicals and Liberals had taken from the original deposit of faith, and Roman Catholics had added to and corrupted it, the English Church alone had preserved it pure and undefiled.

"Hobart was certainly the precursor and possibly the inspirer of the Oxford Movement," says Canon Clarke, who traces a close and highly significant connection between Hobart and the Oxford Movement.

In 1824 Hobart was in England and visited Oxford. He dined with Newman and won his admiration. By Hobart's celebre dictum, "Evangelical Truth and Apostolic Order," Newman understood the American bishop to mean a combination in due proportion of Church tradition and order with Evangelical fervor.

The idea of Tracts as a means of propagating Catholic doctrine was derived by Newman from Hobart. "Newman owed to him the idea of Tracts which were to be aggressive, outspoken, recalling their readers to first principles. In their general aim and scope the Tracts for the Times closely resemble the productions of Hobart's Tract Society founded in 1810.

Hobart early recognized the missionary value of the printed word and established in 1808 in New York "The Churchman's Magazine," later the tract society, wrote considerably himself, and fostered the foundation and encouraged the fine success of "The Gospel Messenger," diocesan church newspaper founded in 1827, his most effective agency of instruction.

Hobart's leadership and success in rooting Christ and His Church in the hearts of upstate New Yorkers lay in the power of his spoken word—preaching—and in the ability of his written words, coming to his people through different channels, to persuade, win and teach.

His example and success suggest the latent power for spreading the Gospel that lies in the printed word, an agency too little used and developed in our Church today. The Church has a strong right arm in its press; and every Churchman by his support of a Church paper can further strengthen this proved effective agency of spreading Christ's message and God's Kingdom to men.

BOOK REVIEWS

BIBLE LIGHT ON EVERYDAY PROBLEMS: By Marie Lemoine Harrison. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. Pp. 245. Price, $2.35.

This book's aim is, in the language of the author, "to help turn the leaves of the Bible for those to whom it might remain closed and sealed—To encourage them to seek in the Bible for guidance for everyday life, and to make it a simple thing for this guidance to be found."

Grouped under such headings as Everyday Laws, Everyday Needs, Everyday Duties, Everyday Faults, Everyday Experiences, Everyday Guidance, Everyday Peace, are arrayed almost innumerable problems that confront anyone trying to lead a life upward from the humblest triumph on to higher conquerings.

Arresting is Mrs. Harrison's statement of the raison d'etre of the work: "During many years, in daily contact with children, and in meeting all sorts of problems common to most men and women, there has been growing a desire for guidance, but guidance of a special kind, and a longing for support and strength outside of one's self, or one's immediate circle. . . Highways and byways were searched —those who would pause were questioned—books were made to give of their treasure—but the sense of an unfulfilled need continued. . . . Slowly, one sure lead after another appeared, was tested, and was never found wanting. But whence came these leads? . . . How was it possible they never failed, when everything human withered and decayed and ended? . . . They were what appeared to be distinct instruction, received in prayer and meditation; they were the unraveling of tangles which had been placed in God's hands; they were the chance words of friends, the acts of kindness that quickened one's pulse; the art of God in the sunsets; the peace of God in the night season. But where to find these leads in black and white, and the prestige they needed back of them to satisfy the questioning? At long last, be it said with shame, after all kinds of writings had been read with care, the Bible, the Book of God, was opened and looked into, with no high thought that the quest was ended—but it was. Here, in letters clear and golden, were the simple, kindly words telling how to make life beautiful."

Each of the numberless problems considered has its Biblical text, followed by comment. The style is simple, clear, direct, and very brief. With hardly any illustration or reference, yet a wealth of experience of life and the fruits of world-wide reading of worth-while books are sensed in prolific background. The book has been translated into Chinese at the university of Pekin for the use of mission work in China.

A valuable piece of work to fill a vital need.

THE CERTAINTIES OF THE GOSPEL: By William Childs Robinson. 150 Pages. Price, $1. The Zondervan Publishing House, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

This book is an expanded form of a series of addresses given to young people, but it is by no means the usual platitudinous, well-meant and ineffectual counsel one might expect in such. The author is the outstanding younger theologian of the South, both in training and experience, a former teacher of the reviewers, and more familiar with European religious thought than any one else we happen to know. He is a professor of Historic Theology in Columbia Seminary, Decatur, Georgia, a Presbyterian school, but Churchmen will find in the book a stimulating certitude which fits in well with our emphasis on the historic Christian faith. He begins by noting that the Catholic today has more assurance and certainty than the Protestant, calls Certainty "the lost chord in modern Protestantism", and insists with the reformers that "God cannot be worshipped in doubt". The Certainties he devotes chapters to are the certainties that God is the Author of the Gospel, that Jesus Christ is the substance of the Gospel, His Death and Resurrection, Grace, Faith, and the Certainty of God's Love and Care, the Comfort of the Gospel.

The book is written in the main in popular style. Yet the author is to be commended for not surrendering to his readers by "writing down" to them; instead, he writes so that a wide range of reading and culture is assumed, and the reader must use his intelligence—a rarely used faculy in religious reading. Karl Adam, Karl Barth (more criticized than commended), Paul Elmer More, Walter Lowrie and Gogarten, Forsythe, Moffatt, Streeter, Clement of Rome, Gregory Nanzianzen troop across the pages with many others. The book is strongly Evangelical in tone, and reading it will deepen the religion of the heart as well as stimulate the intelligent study of the certainty of the everlasting gospel, as proclaimed by the historic Church.

THE BIBLE AND THE COLLEGE STUDENT.

der sometimes where Abraham Lincoln ever learned the use of the pure and beautiful English of his Gettysburg address and his second inaugural. He probably lets us into the secret when he tells us that the two greatest events in his life were when he borrowed a life of George Washington and when he opened the Bible and read the life of Christ.

When I question alumni who have been out for years, practically all of them tell me that they are glad they were required to take the courses in the English Bible, and that they have found these courses among the most profitable of all the courses they took during their college and university days.

The present-day college student probably does not look upon the Bible as an authoritative book in the same sense in which our fathers did, and yet, after they have studied it, the majority of them would agree with Coleridge when he said: "In the Bible there is more that finds me than I have experienced in all other books put together; the words of the Bible find me at greater depths of my being, and whatever finds me brings with it an irresistible evidence of having proceeded from the Holy Spirit."

THE OUTBREAK OF WAR.

of the Gospel of Christ. There is no other power great enough to break down the barriers of race and caste and colour and unite our whole race in one great family of God. There is no other Who shows us the Way, and Who can speak to the heart of all humanity except Jesus Christ. And His Kingdom will come—for He reigns at the right hand of God. It may be through great tribulation, but His Kingdom will come. Whatever may happen in this world—whether we believe in Him or not—whether we do our part or not—whether our present civilization is to be saved or not—Jesus Christ reigns—His Kingdom will come, and His Will will be done, here on earth as it is in Heaven.

HIS WITNESSES: By Andrew Sledd. The Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn. 240 pages with the bibliography. Price, $1.25.

This is a brief but good study in the Acts of the Apostles by Dr. Sledd, professor of New Testament Language and Literature in Emory University. It is a historical exposition on the real historical book of the Christian faith. It is not technical, as one would expect, but explanatory and inspirational. It is accurate in its outline sections. The book can be used by Bible classes and teachers for class study with much helpfulness. The style is not difficult, that makes the book of the Acts understandable to laymen. This is a timely book on the subject. S.

IN MEMORIAM.

Thomas Frank Gailor.

His voice was as the surges of the sea
Chanting their praises to the ocean's Lord,
Vibrant with power-throb of prophecy
To bear strong witness to the Living Word.

Not mean in stature, nor of little soul,
He stood above the ranks of common men
Giving his greatness, not with meagre dole,
Wholly to serve for sake of others' gain.

In that long line of leaders strong who bore
The flag of faith he marched, nor failed in aught
To match their strength who trod the path before,
Nor with less ardor in the combat fought.

Leader of leaders, called to higher place,
Stand now, unshamed, before thy Leader's face!

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mrs. W. Shelley Humphreys

Going Forward

It is the desire of this page to become an avenue for the thought, the hope, and the work of the women of the Church. Its twofold purpose is to inform and inspire those who are already actively identified with the work, and to create and stimulate in others an active and continuing interest in the broad field of activity of this Auxiliary to the National Council of the Church.

This twofold purpose will appeal, in one or both of its divisions, to active members who are able to support all phases of the work, and to those who find it possible to make but the one contribution of interecssory prayer.

A vision of what our page, yours and mine, may become, is near in thought and viewed as attainable. If our contributions reveal not only the nature and challenge, but also the privilege and joy of this manifold service for our Lord, the desired end will be attained. Only in this way can this work become one of the effective instruments in hastening the time when the entire womanhood of the Church will be avaliable for prayer and gifts and service through the Woman's Auxiliary.

The privilege of being used through these columns as a channel for our Lord's service, is undertaken, "Realizing that only through personal dedication to Jesus Christ, our Lord, can we bring to fruition our human endeavors."

Importance of Completing Plans for Quiet Day for Prayer.

Observance of Armistice Day, November 11, as a day of intercession in our parishes, is a work peculiarly that of the Woman's Auxiliary. Shall we not bring the attendance back to that of two years ago, or beyond that attendance? Then the day was observed so generally that the report last year of fewer people making their intercessions, was disappointing. May it not be that in many cases it was taken for granted women knew about the plan?

Special effort to arrange, with the rector's approval, to have the church open, to have leaflets ready for use, and to arrange for the attendance of those in charge of each period, are important. But that is not all. Equally important is spreading the news of the plan, that all may hear not only of the day but also of the fact that their attendance is included in the plans. Inform them of the periods of prayer, that even the busy one with but fifteen minutes to spare, may know that this gives time to enter and intercede.

Let us not fail to remind the one in charge that the day is to be shared this year by men's organizations; she may not have read the report of the recent Executive Board meeting.

Earnest, thorough preparation will insure an observance worthy of the cause and worthy of the Church.

Leaflets to be placed in the nave of the Church the morning of November 11, may be secured from diocesan headquarters.

All-Day Meeting Ispires Several Parishes.

An inspiring account of the annual all-day meeting of the branch of the Woman's Auxiliary at St. Mary's, White Chapel, Lancaster County, Virginia, is given as follows by Mrs. L. G. Smart, president:

Morning service with sermon by the Rev. P. E. Schultz of Luray was followed by Corporate Communion. The old church was well filled by the women who had been invited from all parishes near enough to attend.

Following luncheon, which is a great social feature with us as we meet so many visitors from other parishes, our rector, the Rev. Henry B. Lee Milton, gave a short, inspiring talk on personal consecration and service.

Mrs. Paul E. Schultz told us some of her personal experiences in China. Landed in a district totally foreign, with no knowledge of the language and no one speaking English, she said they did the best they could. Fortunately helpfulness and willing service speak a language all their own.

After three years, circumstances made it imperative that they should return to this country, although sad at leaving a work so much in need of workers.

Here her work in the Ragged Mountains under Dr. Neve, she made realistically clear. We could almost see those poor women trudging over the rough mountain paths to attend service and their Auxiliary meeting. Miles did not count, rain did not matter; they must keep their tryst with God and meet Him in His work.

Mrs. Schultz made us feel their great need of our help, food for their bodies and religious help for their souls. The Church means so much to them, that it puts to shame our poor excuses for non-attendance. Out of their few pennies they always give and send money to other missions far away.

We have cause to be thankful for the answered prayers and happy helpfulness which made the day a success and an inspiration to all to do better work in the coming year.

Canadian Auxiliary Celebrates Fiftieth Anniversary.

The Woman's Auxiliary in Canada has just celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. In a sense it is a daughter of the Auxiliary in the States, as its founder, Mrs. Robert Tilton, was inspired with the idea by attending an Auxiliary meeting in New York. Our National Executive Board asked Miss Lindley, who was invited to take part in the Canadian celebration on September 30, to convey its greetings and congratulations.

"A POWER IN THE HANDS OF CHRIST."
A United Thank Offering Message from the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry.

The United Thank Offering by the women of the Church has become in recent years a constant factor in the support of Missions. Like every act of free will it is prompted by a sense of obligation. Like every act of personal devotion it brings the giver into loving relation with her Lord. When one remembers the Eucharist at every General Convention when the gifts of three years are laid upon the Altar, the offerings glow with sacrificial meaning. When one looks out upon the field and upon the host of missionaries whose service is thus maintained, the offerings are seen to be so many living instruments of power put into the hands of Christ the Redeemer of the world.—James DeWolf Perry, Presiding Bishop.

We would like to take this opportunity to urge those subscribers who have not paid their subscriptions to do so by return mail. The Southern Churchman is making a valiant fight and it is a great drain on our treasury to have to send out some thousands of bills each month for past due accounts. The bills are small, but in the aggregate they amount to a large sum, which we need to carry on the work. We shall appreciate tremendously your cooperation.

As much as we dislike to take this step, from now on we shall be forced to cancel subscriptions on which payments have been overdue for three months.

MEMORIAL WINDOW DEDICATED TO GOV. JOHN C. EARLY IN MANILA CATHEDRAL.

Manila, Philippine Islands. — A stained glass window, a picture of the Transfiguration, memorial to the late Governor John C. Early, has been placed in the Cathedral of St. Mary and St. John, and was dedicated by Bishop Gouverneur Frank Mosher on the eleventh Sunday after Trinity.

The service was conducted by Fathers Ward, Harvey, and Mattocks, the window was blessed by the Bishop, and the address was made by Vice-Governor Hayden.

A large congregation filled the Cathedral, among whom were many high government officials, including the army and navy, and a great many teachers who had been associated with Governor Early in the Bureau of Education. Mrs. Early, who now lives in Manila and is a regular attendant at the Cathedral, was present with her friends, and had the satisfaction of hearing from every quarter how much the window was appreciated.

Colonel Livingston, of the Constabulary, and Mrs. Livingston had complete charge of the arrangements to whom the entire congregation owes a real debt of gratitude for the great amount of work they did. It was Mrs. Livingston that suggested that it would be better to have a tablet below the window rather than to have too many words on the glass, so there appears a tablet with the following words:

"In Memory of John C. Early, Advisor to the Governor-General, Administrator, Educator, Friend, by the people of the Mountain Province whom he governed so wisely, the people of the other Islands whom he taught so truly, those associated with him in his lifetime of service to others, and those privileged to have known him as a loyal and steadfast friend."

Governor Hayden's address has been published in the Manila Daily Times.

MRS. ANDERSON HAS VOLUNTEERED FOR SERVICE IN SAGADA.

Sagada, Philippine Islands.—Mrs. Janet Anderson, chief surgeon of the Philippine Woman's Hospital, has volunteered to take Dr. H. K. Jenkins' place at the Sagada Hospital, while he goes on a much-needed furlough. As in hundreds of other cases, the National Council has no funds to provide a substitute, but a Churchman in New Jersey has made a special gift for the purpose, to cover salary, outfit, and travel.

Dr. Anderson belongs to Grace Church, Mount Airy, Pennsylvania, and will be the first woman physican ever to work among the Igorots.

The missionaries in Sagada are interested to see what the natives will make of such a phenomenon.

Recently a note was received at the Bishop's office in Boise, Idaho, containing fifty-five one-cent stamps and these words: "Restitution for fruit taken years ago from the Bishop's yard."

"The Forward Movement presages a united spiritual advance of the whole Church, and each individual has a definite responsibility in the movement."—Miss Edna Eastbrook.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

PRAYER FOR DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.

O God, who has made of one blood all men for to dwell upon the face of the whole earth, we humbly beseech Thee graciously to behold and bless all our missionaries, far and near, but more especially do we now pray for the Bishop of the Dominican Republic and for his staff. Defend them from all dangers of soul and body, and grant that both they and we, drawing nearer to Thee, may be bound together by Thy love, in the communion of Thy Holy Spirit and in the fellowship of Thy saints; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

NEWS PARAGRAPHS FROM BAGUIO IN THE MOUNTAINS OF NORTHERN LUZON.

Baguio, M. P., Philippine Islands.—The Rev. Arthur H. Richardson, formerly priest-in-charge of St. Paul's Mission, Balbalasang, has returned to the Islands, and has taken up his new duties as headmaster of Brent School at Baguio. His wife and two children are still in the United States but expect join him soon.

Miss Mary E. S. Dawson of Dawson spent a few days in Baguio on business for All Saints' Mission recently, and then returned to Tagudin to spend a brief but much-needed vacation in the Mission Rest House there.

Easter School, Baguio, will be thirty years old next April, and a celebration is being planned. Since the seventh grade was added ten years ago, exactly one hundred boys and girls have finished the intermediate course. Of the fifty-six girls, twenty-one are married. Two are graduate nurses, and three are student nurses at St. Luke's Training School in Manila. One boy is a student of dentistry, one boy and one girl have died, twenty-eight boys and girls are in high school, nineteen have finished high school, one boy is in the United States Navy, and one boy is at work in the United States.

What grammar school anywhere of equal size can show a better record?

The House of Hope, Nopala, Mexico, conducted by one woman as a thank offering to God, last year treated 1,202 patients.

BUILDINGS AND ENDOWMENTS IN MISSIONARY DISTRICT OF SHANGHAI RECEIVED.

Shanghai, China.—During the past year the Missionary District of Shanghai has added many thousands of dollars in both land and buildings. The administration building at Soochow has been completed at a cost of $13,000, of which $10,000 was contributed by the alumni association and $3,000 from the Russell bequest.

At Puchen a day school has been built by funds raised locally and from the Russell bequest.

At Chinkiang a lot in a desirable location has been purchased at a cost of $10,000 by diocesan funds.

In Paoying a lot was purchased containing a building which has been repaired so as to serve as chapel and living quarters at a total cost of $9,500.

St. John's Middle School has built a new dormitory which cost $34,500, one-half of which was contributed by parents of the students attending the school.

Two other notable gifts have been made during the year. A former pupil of Mahan School presented $10,000 to establish a fund to provide scholarships and otherwise to help the school. And a gift of $100,000 was presented to St. John's University to build and endow a library building to house a fine collection of Chinese books, which the same donor had already presented to the University.

St. Paul's Parish has repaired the damage done by the fighting in 1932 at a cost of $17,500.

The 4,812 communicants of the District contributed a total of $52,755 for local expenses, and an endowment fund of $50,000 has been begun for the support of a Chinese bishop and the opening of new work.

HOUSE OF BISHOPS TO MEET IN HOUSTON, TEXAS.

New York.—The House of Bishops will hold its annual meeting in Houston, Texas, on November 6 and 7, with a preliminary Quiet Hour on the night of November 5.

Resignations are to be considered from Bishops McKim, of North Tokyo; Woodstock, of Kentucky; Fiske, of Central New York; Stearly, of Newark; Knight, Coadjutor of New Jersey; Campbell, of Liberia; and Idaho, now without a Bishop, will be considered.

Bishops Rowe of Alaska, Carson of Haiti, Colmore of Puerto Rico, and Hulse of Cuba, are expected to attend this meeting.

How the Church may go forward will be the most important question to be considered by the House. Prayer in every parish is asked for this meeting.

"If the Program of the Church seems to call for too much sacrifice, look up and behold the cross of Christ."—Bishop Seaman of North Texas.

The Church Army is calling for recuits, unmarried men and women under thirty, "who are ready to risk all for the sake of evangelism."

Abyssinia

INTRODUCTION.

Today everyone is talking about Abyssinia, and whether Italy is really going to make war on it. So that it may be of interest to devote a program to it. This we shall divide into three sections:

1. Mention of Abyssinia in the Bible.
2. Legends about it.
3. Her recent history and something of her people and customs.

1. Mention of the Country in the Bible.

The word Abyssinia is not used in the Bible, but the other name of the country, Ethiopia, in the Bible is said to be the same as Cush, which took its name from the son of Ham; so that the people of Ethiopia were known to the Jews from the earliest times. Though there is doubt about it, they seem to have first come into contact with the Jews when Moses sought refuge with the Midianites who were the vassals of the Ethiopians at that time. For they seem to have lived first in Southern Arabia and to have then moved over the Red Sea to the land they now occupy.

The next mention of the country is when the Queen of Sheba visited Solomon. Sheba was the capital of Ethiopia in Arabia. We remember Sheba came to see his wonderful riches. The present King Haile Selassie claims that the Queen married Solomon, and that he is descended from the son of that match.

Later on the Ethiopians conquered Egypt in the time of Hezekiah, and the Ethiopian King of Egypt, so, had an alliance with Hezekiah. Thus Isaiah speaks often of Ethiopia meaning Egypt.

The last mention of Ethiopia is when Philip, the Deacon, preached to the Treasurer of the Queen of that Country who was a Jew and was reading the Book of Isaiah, having come to Jerusalem for a feast.

2. Legends About Ethiopia.

As might be imagined, there are a number of these in which the Jews figure. We will mention three of them:

(a) The first states that on one occasion the King of Ethiopia went from his capital, Sheba, to war, and left his capital in charge of a faithless steward. This man seized the throne, and when the rightful King returned he barred the gates. The King now besieged the city. But it was strongly fortified on three sides, and on the fourth was protected by a number of poisonous serpents. For seven years the siege went on, and then the King died. His generals decided to give the throne to any man who could take the city. Moses, now a fugitive from Egypt, heard the offer and presented himself. He claimed he would take the city in seven days if they would obey his advice. They agreed; so he dispersed his army to capture all the cranes they could find in three days. These were then taken to the snake protected side of the city, where they ate all the snakes. Then Moses came in and reigned for forty years.

(b) The second legend, told by one of the priests, is as follows: "Solomon was a doctor, a healer, a learned man, who had the power to cure. The Queen of Sheba suffered from a short, distorted right foot. Her journey to Jerusalem was made to see whether Doctor Solomon would help her, and naturally she carried presents to him. He then told of how they were married, and continued: The child that was born to them was Menelik I. Solomon educated the lad in Jerusalem until he was nineteen years old, when the boy returned to Ethiopia, with a large group of Jews, taking with him the true Ark of the Covenant. This Ark, they claim, is still kept in a secret place in the country and will be taken out in the war against Italy, even as the Jews took it out against the Philistines.

Another story of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba states that Solomon was a great magician who had tamed all the genii and the birds. A pee-wee once disobeyed him and was about to be punished, when it told him of the glories of the Queen of Sheba, in return for which Solomon pardoned his fault.

Solomon now sent a message to the Queen, demanding that she acknowledge his power and submit to his scepter. The Queen was in a quandary, as she did not wish to bring war on her country. So she decided to try Solomon by three tests. She demanded that he select boys from girls who were clothed alike, thread a diamond that had a crooked hole in it, and fill a goblet with water that came neither from heaven or earth.

These Solomon did by telling the boys and girls to wash their hands. The boys washed hands only, and the girls washed their arms also. Solomon then called a worm and had him carry the thread through the crooked hole in the diamond. Then he called a slave and had him mount a great horse and ride him at a gallop until he was in a great sweat, and then he filled the goblet with the sweat.

The Queen was so amazed at such wisdom, that she came and acknowledged his power, which was the object of her visit to him. King Solomon, on his part, was so fascinated by her beauty, that he wooed and won her. The child of the union was taken back to Ethiopia by his mother, according to this account, when an infant, to found the Royal line. This legend, we need hardly say, is not from the Abyssinian source. Rather it comes from the legends of the Jewish people that are written in what they call the Targums.

The climax of this account is that the Abyssinians, who had before this time been Sun worshippers, were persuaded by Solomon to worship the True God, which faith they retained until converted to Christianity.

(b) The third legend is that the Apostle Matthew went to Abyssinia and took the Gospel, and that he was martyred there. Christianity was really introduced into the country in the fourth century, when Athanasius was Bishop of Alexandria.

3. Recent History and Items of Interest.

First of all, though we think of the Ethiopians as Negroes, they are not so. The name comes from two Greek words, meaning "Red Faced," or, as we would call it "Pink Cheeked." They were originally a combination of a Hamitic people like the Egyptians, and the Shemitic people like the Jews. We recognize the names of two sons of Noah, Shem and Ham, in these people's names. Later a Negro people called the Gallas, invaded the country, and were absorbed. But the nobility are very proud of their "white" blood, though they are really very dark. Their thin noses and thin lips mark them as not Negro in spite of their color.

Their Christianity came from Egypt, and from their being away from the other Christian countries has many peculiarities. Though Romanists and Protestants have both tried to make converts, our Church has not tried to do this, but has stood by to help with schools and theological training, so that our considering them as a sister Church has been much appreciated by the Abyssinians, as was shown by the Emperor sending a solid silver processional cross to the Cathedral at Washington a few years ago.

Though Abyssinia has never been conquered, in 1881 Italy began what might have been a war had not England intervened. In 1889, Italy claimed a protectorate over the country by virtue of a treaty, but Abyssinia said their copy did not have the clause giving this right to Italy. A war followed in which Italy was beaten in 1895. Italy now wishes to wipe out the defeat.

The reason that England is so much interested is: First, That Abyssinia is the Switzerland of Africa. In it are the head-waters of the Nile. If these were stopped, Egypt would starve. Second, England hopes to build a dam that will not only save the Nile, but will also irrigate the Sudan, which is now almost a desert, but with water would be very fertile. The dam would be in Abyssinia. Third, England is anxious to have her railway from Cape to Cairo all on English soil, from one end of Africa to the other; and, if Italy owned Abyssinia, this would be in danger.

Though we cannot tell what will be the outcome of the present excitement, it does seem to us as if Italy ought to leave the people of Ethiopia alone. But it does not look as if she is going to do it.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

SYNOD OF THE PROVINCE OF SEWANEE.

Bishop Henry Wise Hobson of Southern Ohio, Chairman of the Forward Movement Commission, was the preacher at the opening service of the Synod of the Fourth Province, in Christ Church, Lexington, the evening of October 15. Bishop Abbott, accompanied by Bishop Burton, former president of the Synod, and retired first Bishop of Lexington, made the address of welcome. Bishop Mikell of Atlanta, president of the Province, responded. Bishop Hobson's address dwelt on the Forward Movement, stressing the element of partnership in Christian Discipleship. Fourteen Bishops were present, a large group of clergy, and a congregation which filled every pew.

Bishop Hobson led a conference on the Forward Movement the first day of business. The conclusion reached was that there can be no compromise in the demands in Christian Church membership.

All phases of the work of the department of Religious Education were reported by workers in the various fields. Bishop Green pointed out the need for Christian social action in his report on social service activities.

The American Church Institute for Negroes was given a large share of the program time. Archdeacon Baskerville of South Carolina reported on other work among members of his race.

The chief missionary work of the Province reported upon was that among deaf-mutes.

Of all the speeches after the annual Sewanee Banquet the most electrifying was Bishop Barnwell's on Church Work in the West, which roused his hearers to the realization of the results of reduced appropriations.

Mrs. Henry McMillan, provincial president, conducted the meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary in the First Presbyterian Church. The program followed the seven steps of discipleship as outlined in the Forward Movement literature. Meditations were led on each of the steps. Mrs. Mary Breckinridge spoke of the work of her Frontier Nursing Service in Kentucky. The Rev. Capers Satterlee inspired listeners to find out about schools of prayer.

PROPOSED JEWISH REPUBLIC.

The Jewish situation has taken a peculiar turn in Russia. A large territory has been set aside on the great Siberian plains as the place to set up a Jewish Soviet republic. Jewish worship will not be encouraged, but the development of the Jewish spirit will be. It is the hope to develop a Jewish spirit quite apart from religion. The statement is made that some five million Jews of central and eastern Europe are groveling and starving in Poland, Rumania, Latvia, Lithuania. These Jews must emigrate or perish.

DEAN DAGWELL CHOSEN AS BISHOP OF OREGON.

At the diocesan convention, held in Portland, called to elect a new bishop of Oregon, the Very Rev. Benjamin D. Dagwell, dean of St. John's Cathedral, Denver, Colo., was elected on the twenty-fourth ballot, October 10. The election was made unanimous. A fine spirit prevailed throughout the convention.

Dean Dagwell was born in Susquehanna, Pa., on July 21, 1890. He was brought up in Cincinnati, Ohio. In 1916 he was graduated from the Seabury Divinity School, Faribault, Minn. In recognition of his notable service to the Church, this institution conferred an honorary degree of doctor of divinity upon him in 1932.

Completing post graduate work at the General Theological Seminary in 1917, Dean Dagwell became rector of St. Mary's Church in Keyport, N. J., continuing in that pastorate until he came to Pueblo, Colo., in 1920.

While rector of the Church of the Ascension in Pueblo, he was conspicuous for his services in charge of relief in connection with the Red Cross during the flood.

Dean Dagwell served on the National Council for four years and has been a delegate to five General Conventions. He is unmarried.

He has reserved his decision whether or not to accept the election until he can visit Oregon and consult with the clergy and laity of the diocese.

INFORMAL BROADCAST DISCUSSIONS BY MR. MILLER.

Spencer Miller, Jr., as most church people know, is a part-time consultant on the staff of the National Council's social service department. With another part of his time he is director of the Workers' Education Bureau, and in this capacity he is leading an unusual series of broadcast discussions. There are to be informal conversations between Mr. Miller and working men and women from various industries. Over the Columbia system, from WABC, New York, ten Fridays, from October 18 to December 20, from 6:45 to 7 P. M., Eastern time.

GOVERNMENT RECOGNIZES CHARACTER OF SOCIAL WORK.

The coming of Miss Gwynedd Owen from Canada to Southern Ohio as executive of the diocesan Church Mission of Help, has called attention to a recent change in immigration procedure. Hitherto, in theory at least, social workers have been excluded by the contract labor sections of the immigration laws, although members of certain "professional groups", ministers, artists, teachers were admitted. Social workers are now admitted; which is to say, the government now recognizes the professional character of social work.

VIRGINIA SEMINARY TO HAVE DISTINGUISHED SPEAKERS.

The Rev. J. B. Bezzant, Canon of Liverpool, England, will deliver two lectures at the Virginia Seminary, October 29, at noon, and 7:30 P. M. The visit of this distinguished Churchman is one of the high spots on the seminary calendar this autumn.

The Rt. Rev. Henry Hobson, Bishop of Southern Ohio, and Chairman of the Forward Movement Commission, will speak at the Virginia Seminary, October 31, at 8 P. M.

A large audience of laymen and clergy from Northern Virginia and Washington is expected by Dean W. E. Rollins.

WARNING.

Word has been received from St. Andrew's Church, Ann Arbor, Michigan, warning people about a boy named Jack Downs, nineteen years old, who claims to have been secretary of St. Andrew's Church, and now, as the result of a hold-up, to be in need of money to get home. Downs is from New York and plans have been made there to help him solve his problems, which are pathological. But as long as he is getting money he will not go there.

Dr. Ball Speaks of His Recent Visit to England and Switzerland.

"The Church of England is alive to its task, it is awake, it is trying to reach the people."

This report of the status of our Church in England was brought to the Virginia Seminary, by the Rev. C. Sturges Ball, S. T. D., Professor of Practical Theology, after a summer's visit in England and Switzerland.

New types of services are being conducted, reported Dr. Ball, of a more popular sort which have proved effective in reaching people to whom the conventional liturgical offices of the Church were less if at all helpful. He described to the seminarians in a recent talk such a service in a Bristol church, at which he preached, which was attended by about 700 persons. This new type of Sunday-evening service is called "The Nave Service".

Doctor Ball filled several preaching engagements in England as one of three exchange preachers from this country.

Being especially interested in theological training, Dr. Ball had an interview with the Dean of Monmouth on the subject, and visited St. Michael's Theological College in Llandaff, Wales. More men are entering the ministry from the working-classes, reported Dr. Ball, and as a class this new type of clergymen is not so well-prepared as the old type of Anglican clergyman. Speaking of conditions in the Church of Wales, Dr. Ball brought back the news that its leaders are gravely concerned over the inferior caliber and training of ordinands, that politics is entering the Welsh Church, and that this church is not better off since it has been disestablished.

Following his stay in England, Dr. Ball journeyed to Chamby, Switzerland, where he attended the twenty-first annual world conference on Friendship Between the Churches. This meeting was largely devoted to the problem of war and its opinion was that only through the Church can world peace be realized.

Dr. Ball also attended the Modern Churchman's Conference in Oxford.

Virginia Seminary Students Organize.

The student body of the Virginia Seminary has organized with the following officers: Jesse M. Trotter, Brookline, Mass., president; George Prendergast, Miami, Ariz., secretary. The student council is composed of above and Ernest DeBordenave, Franklin, Va.; Arnold Lewis, Sag Harbor, L. I., N. Y.; Gordon Gillett, Winchester, Mass.; Edward E. Tate, Kansas City, Mo. Fire chief is Dillon Morgan, Dallas, Tex.; reading room chairman, Gilbert Hill, Annapolis, Md., and mother superior, James DeWolf Perry, Jr., Providence, R. I.; athletic director, C. C. Tarplee, Jacksonville, Fla.

Edward E. Tate is president of the senior class; Edgar Ferrell, Lynchburg, Va., vice-president; Horace Kehl, Waco, Texas, secretary; William Buchholz, Washington, D. C., treasurer.

Robert R. Brown, of San Antonio, Texas, is leader of the middlers, with Gray Blandy, Newton, Mass., secretary.

Robert Mann, of North Carolina, is temporary chairman of the junior class.

Thirty-nine former students returned for the opening of the session, September 18, to compose the two upper classes and thirty-three new men enrolled, several being transfers into the upper classes from other seminaries.

Conferences—Future and Past.

General Theological Seminary is offering a course of eight conferences for a limited number of laymen. These conferences will be in the form of "round table" discussions, led by the Rev. Frank S. Gavin, D. D. A moderate amount of reading will be expected of those joining the course which will cost $10. They began on October 21 and will conclude on December 9, and last from 7:30 to 9:30. These conferences are being sponsored by the Church Club of New York.

The Annual Conference of the Clergy of the diocese, was held at Lake Mahopac on October 16 and 17. The Conference was opened by Bishop William T. Manning, D. D., The speakers were Dr. John R. Mott, "The Christian Religion and the Present World Outlook"; Dr. William S. Keller, "What We Mean by Social Service"; Dr. W. M. V. Hoffman, S. S. J. E., "The Youth of Today and the Church," and the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, "The Forward Movement and Its Meaning to the Clergy." On Thursday addresses were given by Professor Wilbur M. Urban, "The Christian Church and the Modern World—The New Erastianism"; and the Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, "The Work of the Ministry at This Time in Which We Are Living." The closing message and prayers were given by the Bishop of the Diocese.

Dean of Canterbury Speaks on Social Credit and the War on Poverty.

The Very Rev. Hewlett Johnson, Dean of Canterbury, spoke in New York City on October 17, at Town Hall, under the auspices of the New Economics Group of New York. The Dean's subject was, "Social Credit and the War on Poverty." Dean Johnson has just concluded a tour of Canada in the interests of the Social Credit Movement. The Social Credit theory was first put forward by an Englishman, Major Clifford Hugh Douglas. The plan as outlined by the Dean, who was an engineer and a wire manufacturer in England before he took up the study of theology, would make finance the servant of industry, whereas now industry is the servant of finance. The plan calls for Government control in the creation of money and distribution of credit to consumers without interest. The amount of production would be estimated and credit to buy it would be issued on that basis.

Trinity Church Hears Dr. Butterworth.

The preacher at Trinity Church, Sunday morning, October 20, was the Rev. George W. Butterworth, Litt. D. Dr. Butterworth is the Vicar of the Church of the Ascension, Balham Hill, London, and is now in this country as visiting lecturer at the Berkeley Divinity School. He is well known in the English Church as an educator and lecturer. For many years he conducted Church tutorial classes at the famous London Church, St. Martin's-in-the-Fields. He is also a Fellow of Leeds University.

A Searching Question.

Not long ago the Rev. W. J. Alberts, Curate of St. John's Church, Yonkers, while making a call, was told the following story:—"A small child was protesting against going to Church School. The mother called the father who remonstrated with the child and told her she would have to go whether she wanted to or not. The child looked up at him and said, 'Daddy, is there anyone who can make Daddys go to Church'?" We wonder just how many parents who have children enrolled in the Church Schools ever think of the example they are setting for their children by asking them to go and not going themselves?

Huguenots Hold Commemoration Service.

The French Church Du Saint-Esprit commemorated on Sunday, October 20, the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Witnessing of the Faith of the Huguenots at the time of the Revocation of the Edict of Toleration in October, 1685. In connection with the service a reception and exhibition was held in the Huguenot Museum. The Rev. John A. F. Maynard is the rector of the church. E. F. K.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Series of Regional Conferences Will Open at Three Centres.

Mass meetings at each of three diocesan centers, Harrisburg, Williamsport and Altoona, are to be held on Sunday evening, October 27, opening a series of Regional Conferences in connection with The Forward Movement. Approximately six thousand persons are expected to attend, about two thousand in each place. The principal speakers at the Harrisburg meeting, which is to be held in the Forum of the Educational Building, will be the Rt. Rev. Henry W. Hobson, D. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio and Chairman of The Forward Movement Commission, Charles P. Taft, son of the late president and leader of last year's Hold-the-Line Movement; Governor George H. Earle, who is a Churchman, and Bishop Wyatt Brown. Directed by Alfred C. Kuschwa, choirmaster of St. Stephen's Cathedral, a choir of 350 voices, representing nearly all the parish choirs in the Archdeaconry of Harrisburg, will lead the singing.

The speakers at the Williamsport meeting, to be held in the Capitol Theatre, will include the Rev. Oliver J. Hart, D. D., rector of St. John's, Washington, D. C., a member of the National Commission on The Forward Movement, and Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, field worker for the National Commission on Evangelism. At the Altoona mass meeting, to be held in St. Luke's Church, the Rev. Don Frank Fenn, D. D., rector of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, Md., and John I. Hartman, of Lancaster, a member of the National Commission on The Forward Movement, will be the speakers.

Dr. Hart and Mr. Hartman will go to Harrisburg on Monday, October 28, where, with Bishop Hobson, they will lead the first regional conference in the parish house of St. Stephen's Cathedral. After a celebration of Holy Communion, the Ven. William T. Sherwood, Archdeacon of Altoona, and chairman of the Diocesan Commission on Evangelism, will give a meditation. In the afternoon the conference will be divided into three smaller conferences and will last from 2:30 to 5:15 P. M.

The subjects for the three conferences will be "The Forward Movement Presents a Rule of Life", led by Bishop Hobson; "The Forward Movement's Challenge to the Parish", led by Dr. Hart, and "The Forward Movement's Challenge to the Laymen of the Church", led by Mr. Hartman. A regional dinner at 7 P. M. will conclude the Harrisburg Conference. Charles L. Miller, Lancaster, attorney, will act as toastmaster, and addresses will be made by Bishop Hobson, Bishop Brown, Dr. Hart and Mr. Hartman.

The same program will be followed the next day at Trinity Church, Williamsport, with the same leaders. The Rev. Anthony G. Van Elden, rector of St. Matthew's, Sunbury, Pa., will give the meditation, and A. W. Duy, Chancellor of the Diocese, will be toastmaster at the dinner. Wednesday's conference will be held in St. Luke's, Altoona, with the same leaders. The Rev. Frederic Witmer, vicar of Trinity Church, Jersey Shore, Pa., will give the meditation, and E. M. Fleming, of Altoona, will be the toastmaster at the dinner.

Church Members and Social Agencies to Hold Conferences.

The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes will be in the diocese to hold conferences in Atlanta on Monday, October 28, and in Macon on October 29. These conferences are intended not only for Church people, but for leaders in the Community Chest and the agencies affiliated with it. All social-minded people were invited to hear these discussions.

Clergy Conference.

Under the leadrship of Canon Gilbert B. Symons, a most inspiring conference of the clergy of the diocese was held at Camp Reese, October 7-9. All the clergy, both white and colored, were present, except one, who was ill. Bishop Barnwell was present, but Bishop Reese was unable to attend. Arrangements for the conference were made by the Rev. John A. Wright, rector of St. Paul's Church, Augusta.

On the final day of the conference the following recommendations were drawn up by the Findings Committee and approved:

"Having lived and thought and prayed for two days under the inspiring leadership of Canon Symons, studying the needs of the Church in the light of the Forward Movement, we recommend:

"1. A Daily Rule of Prayer for the clergy and people.

"2. Renewed emphasis upon Bible Reading and Meditation.

"3. Systematic training of the laymen in the devotional life.

"4. A more vital emphasis upon personal witness for Christ and His Church.

"5. A deeper sense of fellowship among the Clergy through Diocesan Retreats.

"6. Wider dissemination of Church literature.

"7. The appointment of a Diocesan Forward Movement Commission.

"The Findings Committee,
J. A. Wright,
Joseph Burton.

Informal Evening Services.

Instead of the regular form of Evensong at St. John's, Church, Savannah, the rector, the Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, is having an informal service consisting of Family Prayer, familiar hymns, and questions and answers. The first service was held Sunday, October 13, and was well attended. It is hoped that much information about the Church and her teachings may be gotten to the people at these services.

Bishop Barnwell, the Rev. Joseph Burton, rector of St. Michael and All Angels' Church, and the Rev. Geoffrey Horsfield, rector of St. Paul's Church, are those from Savannah attending the Synod of the Province of Sewanee in Lexington, Ky., this week. Bishop Barnwell will probably spend Sunday, Otocebr 20, in Albany, Georgia.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

New Mission Point to Be Opened.

A new mission point, with a resident woman worker under direction of a nearby priest, will be established in a portion of upper Stafford County, Virginia, found particularly in need of such attention by the Church. And to finance this move, it is expected that the Diocese of Virginia will erect a mission home, while the people of the Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge will support the worker through their Bishop's Pence Can offerings. This will probably mark the first step as the diocese moves to expand its rural work under a set-up similar to that found so successful in the mountains.

The section chosen for initial action appears from a recent intensive survey made by Mr. Fred Griffith, Jr., of Alexandria, to be one of the areas within the diocese which has been most neglected by religious forces of any kind. It, therefore, appeals as the most immediate challenge, in the opinion of a recent conference of rural clergy called to consider the matter.

Conference of Rural Clergymen.

The conference, September 30 to October 1, was the first over-night conference to be held in the Walker Memorial, the new diocesan center near Richmond. Mrs. Tucker and Mrs. Goodwin acted as hostesses to the twelve clergymen who attended. These gentlemen were invited as their fields of work lie in or near the areas surveyed last summer. The conference was conducted by the Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor, with the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, also taking a leading part. The findings of the meetings were presented to the Diocesan Missionary Society by the Ven. W. R. Mason, D. D., Archdeacon of the Blue Ridge. In addition to those mentioned the following clergymen also attended: the Rev. Messrs. Henry Heaton, D. C. Loving, Charles Covell, J. P. H. Mason, P. W. Reed, E. B. Guerry, Robert H. Thomas, H. M. D. Martin, Francis Allison, Stuart Gubsob, J. J. Ambler and Albert C. Muller.

It was suggested by Bishop Tucker that conferences of other groups of the clergy will probably grow out of this first successful one. Diocesan officials hope that rural work already established may thus be made more effective. The Walker Memorial will also be used eventually for scheduled conferences of lay workers, following one of the expressed wishes of its donor.

Coming Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The forty-fifth annual meeting of the Virginia Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary will be held at St. James' Church, Richmond, the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., rector, on October 29, 30 and 31. The opening mass meeting will be held in St. James' Church at 8 P. M., Tuesday, October 29, at which time the Rt. Rev. F. W. Creighton, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of Long Island, and formerly Bishop of Mexico, will be the speaker. An informal reception will follow in the St. James' Parish House.

The session on Wednesday opens with a Preparation Service at 9:15 A. M., conducted by the Rev. Henry E. Batcheller, rector of Christ Church, Gordonsville. This will be followed by the Celebration of the Holy Communion at the close of which service the Business Meeting will begin.

At the afternoon session Mrs. Alexander C. Zabriskie will give an account of her recent trip to Brazil. There will also be addresses by several Mountain Missionaries, including the City Missionary and rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Richmond; Miss Edna Browning, Mission Home; Miss Walton, Tanner's Ridge. The Venerable Frederick W. Neve, D. D., Archdeacon of the Blue Ridge, will give the concluding address of the afternoon general session.

At the mass meeting that evening the preacher will be the Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D., rector of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, Maryland, whose topic will be The Forward Movement. Speakers at the closing session on Thursday morning will be the Rev. R. Cary Montague, D. D., the City Missionary and rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Richmond. Dr. Walter Pott of St. Luke's, Shanghai, China, and Miss Sallie Deane, member of the National Executive Board from the Province of Washington. Closing prayers and adjournment will be followed by lunch.

Besides the sessions for the whole group, there will be a meeting of the Executive Committee and Diocesan Officers on Tuesday afternoon at 3:30, at the Mayo Memorial, a conference for members of the Junior Woman's Auxiliary at 4:15 P. M., on Wednesday and a mass meeting for the Junior Auxiliary at the same hour. It is hoped that every branch will find it possible to have a delegate present throughout the meeting.

Council Approves Evangelism in Diocese.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Council unanimous approval was given to the evangelical work undertaken by the Rev. William T. Holt, Chairman of the Department of Missions, and the Council pledged itself to do all in its power to further this work which is doing much to arouse the people of the diocese. Mr. Holt has been conducting a Mission at Searcy, Arkansas, where there is a beautiful brick church and some splendid people. However, church and people have been somnolent for many years. From the success of the Mission, there is hope that this congregation might become an active participant in the diocese. Other Missions are planned by Mr. Holt who is giving his services under the inspiration of the Forward Movement.

Diocesan Rally.

The Forward Movement Committee of which Dean John Williamson is Chairman, has the endorsement of the Bishop and Executive Council to hold a Diocesan Forward Movement Service. The date set is from October 30. The time and place are: 7:30 P. M., in the Cathedral in Little Rock. The speaker for the service will be the Rev. Karl Block, of St. Louis. Doctor Block was requested to visit the diocese at the suggestion of Bishop Hobson, the leader of the Forward Movement. A feature of this service or Diocesan Rally will be the "Massing of the Crosses," as each Mission and Parish participating is represented in the Processional by its Cruicfer. In addition to the participation of the Missions and Parishes there will be representations of the diocesan organizations. The purpose of the Rally is 1. To cause our people to desire to lead an "inspired life," the life of a Disciple, as contrasted with the submerged and defeatel vise of so many at this time; 2. To take advantage of the Forward Movement with its new enthusiasm for our Lord and His Church and its desire to make our Lord's Church and people a blessing to community, state and nation; 3. To make our people conscious of the privilege, the obligation, and the opportunity of building up our Diocese and Diocesan Institutions. In this connection, to draw attention to the need of Missions at home and abroad; but especially in this diocese. The Church must grow or die and the way the Church grows is by the members spreading the influence of the Church in their own family and other circles; 4. To prepare for parochial preaching and teaching missions, or other methods of reviving the interest of the people, especially the Every Member Canvass, so that the zeal and vision developed in the Diocesan Rally might be continued throughout the diocese.

A Fair at Grace House.

Under the leadership of Captain George F. Wiese, missionary at Grace House-on-the-Mountain in Wise County, a Community Fair was held at the Mission on Saturday, September 28. Bishop Jett opened the program with an address, in which he expressed his deep interest in the agricultural work and instruction being carried on by Captain Wiese in this neighborhood, and congratulated the people on the fine results attained by them in following out his plans.

Miss Helen Ricks, assistant directress of home economics in Extension Division of Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg, gave a most helpful talk on the work of women in the home, showing that in order to be a success in her sphere the woman must be a good cook, an attractive housekeeper, possess a knowledge of the physical, moral and spiritual needs of her family, and in every possible way make home life interesting for her husband and her growing boys and girls.

Mr. L. B. Deitrick, garden director in the Extension Division, spoke on "Better Gardening", and, following Miss Rick's advice to the women, he told the men some of the best ways of holding down their jobs at home and providing the proper food and living conditions for their families. Mr. Fred

END OF UNREST.

William Olney.

Questionings on each side the dividing sea
Are many as to Truth's Reality.
"What are we to believe?" is often asked,
And to find final answer Faith is tasked.
Let it then, once for all, be understood—
Our God has spoken; and His Word is shown
To be all that it claims the ages down.
The History of Israel gives the sign
That the first earliest Scriptures are Divine.
Christ's Coming and His Work add their Amen.
Proving God's Message came by human pen.
And near two thousand years' Experience
Of the blest work of Grace is evidence
Of Truth Revealed, declaring it to be
Faith's blessed Rock of unmoved Certainty.
Let the World set the Sacred Book aside:
Let the Agnostic Holy Truth deride:
Let timid saints seek other certitude:
Let all Mankind take doubting attitude:
He who accepts the Scriptures as God-given
Finds it is so by Life bestowed from off Heaven.

Prayer for All Saints.

Notice how Paul repeats the words in the intensity of his desire to reach the hearts of his readers. "With all prayer and supplication praying at all seasons, watching thereunto in all perseverance and all supplication" (Eph. 6:18) It is, "all prayer, all seasons, all perseverance, all supplication". The words claim thought, if they are to meet with the needed response.

Paul felt so deeply the unity of the Body of Christ, and he was so sure that unity could only be realized in the exercise of love and prayer, that he pleaded with the believers at Ephesus unceasingly and fervently to pray for all saints, not only in their immediate circle, but in all the Church of Christ of whom they might hear. "Unity is strength." As we exercise this power of intercession with all perseverance, we shall be delivered from self with all its feeble prayers, and lifted up to that enlargement of heart in which the love of Christ can flow freely and fully through us.

The great lack in true believers often is that in prayer they are occupied with themselves, and with what God must do for them. Let us realize that we have here a call to every believer to give himself without ceasing to the exercise of love and prayer. It is as we forget ourselves, in the faith that God will take charge of us, and yield ourselves to the great and blessed work of calling down the blessing of God on our brethren, that the whole Church will be fitted to do its work in making Christ known to every creature. This alone is the healthy and the blessed life of a child of God who has yielded himself wholly to Christ Jesus.

Pray for God's children and for the churches around you. Pray for all the work in which they are engaged, or ought to be. Pray at all seasons in the Spirit for all God's saints. There is no blessedness greater than that of abiding communion with God. And there is no way that leads to the enjoyment of this more surely than the life of intercession for which these words of Paul appeal so pleadingly.—Andrew Murray.

Signs of the Times.

The first sign of the times seems to be that we are living in the midst of one of the great upheavals of history. Things are happening with a rapidity never before equalled. It is the culmination of forces that have been at work in society for a long time, the fruitage of past sowings, and the harvest we are reaping is inevitable. There are all the signs that we are at the end of an epoch and at the beginning of one that is new, the pain, the conflict, the darkness and the breakdown are the birth throes of the new era that is dawning.

The second sign of the times seems to point to a new unity of humanity. The present constitution of society is what has produced the depression. War between nations, tariff wars, cut-throat competition, war between capital and labor, extreme nationalism and race animosity—these and many other things in the most productive age of the world's history, in a world of plenty of everything for everybody has caused and is still causing a widespread misery and want. Yet all this upheaval points to a new deal for humanity when there shall be great unity between nations, and cooperation within the nation for the common good. The doctrine that the good things of life are reserved only for the few and the rest of humanity are to be the slaves for an aristocracy of privilege has forever become untenable. As history marches on a new chapter is going to be written, though it may have to be written in blood and terrible catastrophe, that God hath made of one blood all nations of men that dwell on the face of the whole earth.

A third sign of the times is one that affects the Church. Uniformity of belief is impossible. The times call loud for tolerance. In the new age that is dawning the Church must become the teacher of the new ethics of life, that wil still remain the ethics of Jesus, but will be taught with His tolerance. The big questions of human destiny as set forth in the Historic Creeds of Christendom will still direct the Christian consciousness of the world, and a new Catholicity will dawn through a new friendliness between Catholic and Protestant. One of the terrible things of the past, and which still continues, is the fact that men of the two great sections of Christendom will consent to live neighbors together, will work in business partnerships together, will vote at the polls for a common candidate, and live in social amity with each other, but who still part at the church door—the last place in the world where men ought to part. In the new unity that is coming for humanity, the Church will bear a great responsibility. How the problem will be met, we do not profess to know, but it must be met if the Church is to continue as a creative force in modern civilization. While men can never be made to unite on dogmatic interpretations of religious truth—they will at least have to learn to unite on things on which all decent people do agree. One of the most potent signs of the times is the coming of this higher unity.

A fourth sign of the times is the new leisure that is coming to the working people of the world. The day is not far distant when we will be having a six-hour day. Machinery has done this. The digging and the hammering and the lifting is done by machinery. They make everything today with machines except men, and it is sometimes said that men are just machines. This is one of the big problems that faces us in an economic world. But what are we to do with our new leisure that is coming. Unless we can teach men to employ their time in a creative way there is nothing but catastrophe ahead. Here, it seems to me, will be a great opportunity for the Church, for education alone is the solution of this problem.—W. D., in exchange.

Love to God the Motive Power.

Why did Father Damien endure the unspeakable suffering of life in the leper settlement of Molokai? Why is Edmund Robbins rejoicing in the triumph of clean government in the very ward which used to be the disgrace of Chicago? It is because the master motive has possessed these lives, and they are able to see through the superficial externals, right into the priceless temple of the heart! When other motives have made their subtle appeals, these men have resisted with unfailing courage. Miss Jane Addams tells, in her early experience at Hull House, of how she began to arouse an interest in legislation to prevent child labor in Illinois. At that time there were no laws to check and control the greed of the factory owners. In a few weeks a most generous offer was made by these very manufacturers to give $20,000 outright toward her plan for a club house and home for working girls. At first she was thrilled with the joy of seeing her plan fulfilled. But she was given to understand that there was one important condition, that she should not meddle in promoting any legislation about child labor! She was given the hint that she did not understand labor conditions and that she had better keep her hands off. But as soon as she realized that the large gift was being offered to divert her from the cause of justice, she refused the gift with heartfelt indignation. And today Illinois leads all the other States in the matter of legislation protecting the interests of children! The Christ love was surging in Miss Addams' heart, and she instantly rejected the stratagem which was intended to purchase her acquiescence in the evil customs so profitable to the millionaires.—Trowbridge.

Grateful for Safety.

An old Jersey farmer was driving his wagon down the "Long Hill", near Princeton, N. J., when the holding back strap broke, and the rather wild young horse made a dash down the steep and dangerous incline. Swaying on one side or the other, momentarily fearing to be dashed against a wayside tree or gully, he nevertheless reached the bottom of the hill in safety. He drove at once to the home of Dr. McCosh. "Doctor," he cried, "I want to ask you to kneel down here and pray with me, to offer thanks. I was driving down the 'Long Hill' a few minutes ago, when my holding-back strap broke and my horse ran away, and yet I reached the bottom, slowed up, and actually, doctor, I was alive." "We will offer thanks," said the Princeton president, "and while we are on our knees we will remember also to give thanks for an even more wonderful protection the good God showed me on that very hill this very day." The farmer marveled. "Yes," continued the doctor, "I drove down the Long Hill today, and the holding-strap didn't even break."—The Presbyterian.

UNTIL SHE DIED.

Until she died we never knew
The beauty of our faith in God.
We'd seen the summer roses nod
And wither as the tempests blew,
Through many a spring we'd lived to see
The buds returning to the tree.

We had not felt the touch of woe,
What cares had come, had lightly flown,
Our burdens we had borne alone—
The need of God we did not know.
It seemed sufficient through the days
To think and act in worldly ways.

And then she closed her eyes in sleep.
She left us for a little while,
No more our lives would know her smile,
And, oh, the hurt of it went deep!
It seemed to us that we must fall
Before the anguish of it all.

Our faith, which had not known the test,
Then blossomed with its comfort sweet,
Promised that some day we should meet
And whispered to us: "He knows best,"
And when our bitter tears were dried,
We found our faith was glorified.

What is God's Will for Us?

What is God's will for us? No man can tell his fellow-men the answer to that question in detail. The details have to be found out by each of us. But the general direction for all we know. St. Paul tells us: "This is the will of God even your sanctification." Our sanctification is the will of God. The word has rather an ominous ring in it to some of us. Our thoughts go back to the faces we have seen, and people we have met who frown at all color, brightness, happiness and joy of life, who depress us and others. And we think that we shall have to become like that and say good-bye to the joy and happiness of life. But that is not God's will for you. His will for you is that your life should be running over with joy and happiness, and till we are trying to carry out His will we do not know what real joy and happiness are. We must not be frightened by words. The root meaning of sanctification is the Latin word meaning health. So it simply means that we are to be healthy-minded Christians. It means one who has knelt in repentance and faith before the Cross of Calvary and has there received forgiveness of sins, and knows the sheer joy of that forgiveness. It means one who, by the power of the Holy Spirit, is losing the old character and growing a new one, with new desires, ambitions, motives and power. It means one who is beginning to know something of the possibilities of fellowship with God in the daily walk of life.

In other words, it means that we are growing a little bit like Christ, with His marks of love, strength and self-sacrifice upon us, and His hatred of cant, hypocrisy and sin within us. Is that anything of which to be frightened—to be getting nearer to the One ideal character that the world has ever seen? That is what it means to be sanctified. That is God's will for us. God would take us as He finds us, so often hard and cold, selfish and indifferent. He would cleanse us from our sins, fill us with His Spirit, and then He would send us out in our turn to spread His Kingdom on earth and to bring others to a knowledge of His will and His love.—Rev. W. M. Selwyn, in Church of England Newspaper.

The Problem of Suffering.

It used to be more customary than it is now to describe all disease and all social maladjustment to the will of God. But Christian people everywhere are learning to distrust this kind of language and to take for granted instead that when we see anything going wrong, either with our personal or our common lot, we hear a divine call to try to put it right, or at least to cooperate with God in making an end of the conditions which engender the evil. Resignation may be quite out of place; it may not be at all what God asks of us in presence of some scene of sorrow and misery, but rather the opposite. And the only legitimate sense in which we can say that the sorrow and misery are the will of God is that He has not intervened to prevent them from being experienced as the direct outcome of forces inimical to human well-being. He is leading us to learn how to redirect these forces so that they may bring blessing instead of bane to mankind. We need to remember that a great deal of human suffering is from this point of view divinely meant to be educative for our ultimate good.

But when we have made full allowance for these facts, there still remains an amount of pain and sorrow wherein we all share, and which is unexplainable on any ground except that God ordains it as necessary to our spiritual growth. To say that God never sends such pain and sorrow is manifestly false to what we know of the experience of the best men and women of our own and earlier generations, and still more false to the profound message of Calvary. "For it became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings." This is a great mystery; I have no fuller light to throw on it, and neither has anyone else; we do not know why it should be a law of our spiritual nature that the highest reach of character should be unattainable without some experience of suffering: we only know that it is so. As Canon Streeter fitly says: "Look around on the men and women of your acquaintance and ask yourself who among them you feel and know to be worth most. You will find that, at some time or another in their lives, each of them has faced loss, difficulty, physical pain, or desolating disappointment—and has overcome. They have won through by meeting these things with courage and cheerfulness in a spirit of acceptance. Thereby they have turned what seemed poison into food. Power to do this is more than half the meaning of 'the grace of God'."—Rev. R. S. Campbell, in C. of E. Newspaper.

Controversy As a Means of Good.

Controversy is not necessarily an evil, but may be a means of good. The Bible is a book of controversy and rings with the sound of battle from the beginning to the end. Jehovah held a controversy with the Jews, and Jesus with the Pharisees. The early church was rocked with the storms of controversy yet never was it more victorious and fruitful. Controvesy has been the tavail and birth of all the great religious and scientific ideas that have been born into the world. It is not necessarily a bad sign when the church is swept with controversy. Such difference and debate, especially when kept free from acrimony and bitterness and conducted in a truth-seeking and chivalrous spirit, is infinitely better than religious indifference and spiritual stagnation and death, and out of it will come wider truth and clearer faith and more fruitful life. It is a storm, but a storm that cleanses the sky and washes it blue and refreshes the grass into a more vivid green and leaves the atmosphere pure and sweet. Let us go through and come out of such controversies as may come upon us with our minds and hearts unclouded with partisanship and passion, our spirits unruffled and serene and our brotherly good will undisturbed.—Ex.

GLORY IN COMMON THINGS.

Rose Andrews.

The joys we mint from life are found
In just the common things—
The needs by which our days are bound;
The joys we mint from life are found
In home and children; in seeded ground
And the glowing harvest fruition brings.
The joys we mint from life are found
In just the common things.

We value simple things that teach
A deeper wisdom to the heart—
That soothe without the need of speech;
We value simple things that teach
A woman's home spun love can reach
Beyond intrigue or studied art.
We value simple things that teach
A deeper wisdom to the heart.

We get direction along our way
From just the commonplace.
From a fishing stream, where aspen sway,
We get direction along our way;
Serving, though storms retard and flay,
The sweetened waters find the Bay!
We get direction along our way
From just the commonplace.

"Lo, I Am With You Always."

When David Livingstone, the great missionary and explorer in Africa, returned to England for the first time, he was received with universal honors and acclaim. In an address to the students of Glasgow University, where he himself had studied, Livingstone spoke of the many dangers and perils through which he had passed by land and by sea, on river, in jungle, and on mountain, with beasts, and poisonous serpents and savage men. The thing, he said, which always strengthened him and gave him courage, and which never failed him, was that last saying of our Lord, "Lo, I am with you always". Christ is always with us. The purpose of faith and the triumph of it is not merely to get us safely through at the end, not only a faith that "lights up a dying bed", but a faith which can light up our path from day to day, and let us know that the strength of God is at hand.—Clarence Edward Macartney.

Forgiveness.

The true sign of forgiveness is not some mysterious signal waved from the sky; not some obscure hunted out in your heart; not some stray text culled out of your Bible; certainly not some word of mortal priest telling you that your satisfaction is complete. The soul full of responsive love to Christ and ready, longing, hungry to serve Him, is its own sign of forgiveness. Must there not be sorrow for sin? Must there not be resolution of amendment; surely there must, but it is not sorrow for sin for the sake of the sorrowfulness that Jesus ever wants. He wants sorrow for sin only that it may bring escape from sin.—Phillips Brooks.

FOR THE CHILDREN

NATURE'S BOOK.

The leaves have turned to red and gold,
And since their story has been told,
They fall, like pages, to the ground—
A book all ready to be bound.

The tale was started in the spring,
When mating birds began to sing,
And through the summer, bright with flowers,
It kept a record of the hours.

The finished leaves now lie and wait,
For what may seem a cruel fate,
But winter binds, 'til next they're seen,
A spring-time volume, bound in green.
—Mrs. A. B. Brown, in Christian Index.

Paul and the Hallowe'en Prize.

It was hard for Paul to hear the other children talking about Hallowe'en costumes when he wouldn't have one himself.

"There aren't enough pennies to buy a costume," said mother. "And I couldn't make it, even if I had the goods I must spend all my time in sewing for other people. There is Mrs. Elliott's dress to finish, and Martha Blake's coat, and new pajamas for Billy Stuart, which I haven't begun."

Paul sighed.

"I did want to be in the Hallowe'en parade," he said. "They will march up Greene Street to Market Square, and then down Main Street to the school. And the one with the best Hallowe'en suit will get a prize. It's a real prize, too—a five dollar gold piece."

But mother didn't even seem to hear about the gold piece.

"Supper's ready," she said, "and there's the fattest, juiciest baked apple that you ever saw."

Next day in school they drew a Hallowe'en clown, and colored his suit yellow and black.

"How I wish I had a suit like that," thought Paul. But he went on coloring, and making his work as neat as he could.

Nancy Lane was giving a Hallowe'en party, and all the children who were invited were chattering about their costumes.

"I'm to be dressed like a pirate," said Dick.

"And I'm Bo Peep," said Nancy.

"I have an Indian suit," said Bob Turner.

"Oh, well," Paul thought, "I can watch the others, anyway."

May I watch the parade tonight?" he asked as he ate his lunch.

"I'm sorry, but I want you to take Mrs. Elliott's dress to her," said mother. "It won't be done until supper time, and after supper I must finish Martha's coat."

Poor Paul! It was hard enough to be left out of the parade, but not to see it at all—that seemed really too bad.

When he went back to school there were horns and false faces in the shop windows, but he had no money to spend, so he hurried on. That afternoon they cut jack-o'-lanterns out of orange paper, and Paul used his scissors so carefully that his was the best one in the class. But he was thinking of that Hallowe'en parade.

After supper mother put Mrs. Elliott's new dress in a big box, and wrapped and tied it.

"You know where Mrs. Elliott lives," she said. "If she is not at home, wait until she comes. I promised her the dress for tonight, and she must have it."

Paul started away with the big box. He passed Nancy's house, all lighted up for the party. A girl in a witch's costume ran past, and disappeared around the corner. Perhaps if Mrs. Elliott was at home he could hurry across to Greene Street and follow the parade. He tramped along whistling.

Mrs. Elliott's house was so dark, but Paul rang the bell. He waited, but no one came. Then he rang it again. Still no answer. Oh, dear! That meant that he would have to wait for Mrs. Elliott to come home! And he would miss the parade.

He sat down on the porch steps, and felt very sorry for himself. All the other children were having fun, and here he sat, alone in the dark waiting. They would be dressing, and running up to the corner where the parade started. Wouldn't she ever come?

All at once Paul stood up.

"I know what I'll do," he said. "I'll leave the box close to the door and go to the parade. Nothing can happen to it there, and I can have some fun, too."

He put the box inside the door and hurried down the steps. He was at the gate when he stopped. Mother had said, "Wait until she comes". And here he was running away!

There would be a band with that parade, and horns and rattles. Why should he wait here and miss it all? But he turned toward the porch again, and very slowly he started back. Mother expected him to wait. She trusted him. There wasn't anything to do but wait.

He sat down again. Cars and people went by. A little brown dog trotted past, and a white cat scurried across street. But still Mrs. Elliott didn't come.

Then, just when Paul was sure that it must be bedtime, a car stopped and Mrs. Elliott got out and came up the steps.

"Here is your new dress," said Paul. "Why, Paul, why aren't you in the parade?" asked Mrs. Elliott.

"I had no costume," said Paul.

"But you could see the parade, at least."

"I had to wait until you came," Paul told her.

As they went into the house together Mrs. Elliott looked at her watch.

"We have half an hour," she said. "I think we can make it."

She telephoned to Paul's mother, and said that Paul would stay with her for a while. She made Paul open his shirt at the throat, and tied a red bandanna around his neck. Around his waist she tied a gay red sash, and she found an old felt hat and stuck a bright feather in it. She put gold hoop earings in his ears. Then she took some black stuff and drew a little mustache on his upper lip.

"Now, you need one more thing," she said, "and it's these balloons. I bought them for a party, but you shall be my Italian balloon man instead. Look in the mirror."

Paul looked, and sure enough he did look like Beppo, who stood on the corner in Market Square. He held the strings in his hands, and over his head bobbed the balloons, great balls of red and green and yellow."

"Now into the car with you!" said Mrs. Elliott. "We mustn't miss that parade."

Away they went. At the corner where the parade was gathering there were crowds of children. There were costumes of all kinds, from gypsies to wooden soldiers, but not a single balloon man.

"Now march your best," said Mrs. Elliott. "When you pass the judges wave your hat and smile."

She was gone, and Paul had to get into line, but he remembered what he was to do. There were velvet suits, and satin suits, and suits with shining spangles on them, but Paul took care of his balloons, and tried not to look at the costumes.

The judges stood on the library steps on Main Street. When Paul marched past he waved his hat and smiled, and they waved back at him. On the children marched, the band ahead of them, up to the school. There they stopped and waited to hear who had won the prize. The judges went up to the school steps and came forward.

"The first prize," he called, "goes to the balloon man."

People began to clap and cheer. Paul went through the crowd and up to the judge.

"Here's a five dollar gold piece for a very fine Italian," said the man.

Paul thanked him, and the next he knew Mrs. Elliott had him in the car and was driving him home.

"It was the smile than won the prize," she told his mother, but Paul shook his head.

"It was going back to wait," he said. —Junior World.

Before Going Home.

Jamie undressed slowly. Everything was so different in his grandmother's home. He missed finding his pajamas laid out on the bed, missed the frequent interruptions of his mother's voice, "Don't forget to scrub your teeth, Jamie! Hurry now, it's late!" And sometimes when he was very slow, "Whatever is taking you so long tonight, Jamie?"

But tonight, though he was ever and ever so long getting undressed, Grandma continued reading downstairs as though she had forgotten him. Jamie began wishing that his mother would hurry up and get well so that he could go home. It was such a comfort to have some one fussing over him, asking him this and that, and making him feel like a very important person.

Jamie pulled off his shoes and holding them high above his head, let first one and then the other fall with a thud on the floor. Not a word from Grandma!

Then he went to the bathroom, turned on the hot water spigot as far as he could and let the water run and run while he put his head outside the door and listened. Always at home when he did this, mother called, "Don't waste the hot water, Jamie!"

Still not a word from Grandma!

Jamie soon found that it was no fun wasting the water if no one noticed it. He turned off the faucet and went back to his room and purposely stumbled over a chair. He wasn't a bit hurt, for he had been careful to fall easily, but he lay quiet for several minutes. This would have brought mother up to his room.

If Grandma heard the commotion, Jamie had no way of knowing it. There was no delirious hurrying of feet, no "Are you hurt, Jamie?" Just the creak of Grandma's chair as she read and rocked herself.

It was cold on the floor, and hard. Jamie crawled into bed. He felt very unhappy. He did not like it at Grandma's. He thought of punishing her for her quietness by going off to sleep without saying good-night. But Jamie couldn't go to sleep. He remembered that Grandma had said, "Let me know when you are all ready, Jamie."

After wiping his eyes carefully, and raising himself up in bed to look in the mirror and make sure that he did not look as though he had been crying, Jamie cleared his throat very loudly and called, "I'm all ready, Granrma!"

Immediately the creak of the rocking chair stopped. And steps, heavier than mother's, but none the less welcome, sounded on the stairs.

"Well, well, well!" Grandma exclaimed brightly as she came into the room. "Your're a big boy for six years old getting all ready for bed by yourself like this!"

Suddenly Jamie was very glad that he had not called to know where his pajamas were, and should he scrub his teeth without tooth paste or with?

"That means," Grandma continued, "that you can put a gold star on this calendar, right over two—three—which is the date of today. And every day that you do something without any help, or asking questions, you can have another gold star for that day, and when you get ten gold stars I am going to give you—" here Grandma stopped and looked laughingly into Jamie's face.

"What would you like me to give you, Jamie?"

Jamie leaned nearer his grandmother's face and looked deeply into her eyes. Could he ask for it? Did she really mean it? Or would she say, like mother, "I've enough to do as it is without having—"

"A dog," he whispered hopefully.

Grandma clapped her hands. "Just as I thought and I have the dearest one all picked out. He's brown and has a pointy nose."

"Oh, oh!" Jamie cried in sudden dismay, "but I won't be able to take it home when mother gets well, because mother says she has enough to do without having a dog around."

"Ah," grandmother answered, "I see I'll have to explain something to you."

"You mean that mother's going to let me bring it home?" Jamie asked hopefully.

"Yes, and no," Grandma said. "You see, Jamie, your mother is not really sick. She has no disease, I mean. She is just tired out, and the doctor says she must rest in bed for several weeks. Now the thing that has made her this tired way is doing so much for you—that is, doing the things you ought to do for yourself, like getting out your pajamas at night—finding the tooth paste—putting your underwear into the hamper when it is soiled—closing the window of your room in the morning."

"But, Grandma," Jamie interrupted wonderingly, "mother always did those things for me. I didn't know it made her tired. She never asked me to do them."

"I know," Grandma answered understandingly, "she thought you were too little. She told me it was easier to do them than to ask you to, because—well, because you seemed so helpless. But it was just as I thought. You are a great big boy and can get all undressed and into bed yourself just like you showed you could tonight."

Grandma was nice, after all, Jamie decided, and understood boys, too.

"So," Grandma continued, "when you get ten stars on this calendar, that means you have learned to do ten things by yourself, things that mother used to help you with. She will have so much less to do then that having a dog won't seem like extra work."

"Why," Jamie answered thoughtfully, "I can do things to help her, too, like bringing in the milk from the front step in the morning and sweeping off the pavement!"

"You've got the idea!" replied grandmother.

"And I'm soon going to have that dog," Jamie said happily as he raised his face for a good-night kiss. "Oh, I'm so glad I came here, Grandma!"—Marguerite Faust, in Storytime.

Bird-Travelers.

Nearly every one knows that many of our bird friends arrive in the neighborhood early in the spring and take leave again some time in the autumn. The old Greeks thought that the birds went to sleep in caves or hollow trees during the cold months, as bears, some squirrels and other animals do. Aristotle even wrote that swallows hibernated in the mud at the bottom of ponds during the winter.

There is still a good deal of mystery about the how and why and where of birds' travel; but careful students of the little feathered people are finding out more each year about where birds go and what they do there. It is quite certain they do not go to sleep anywhere for the winter.

The United States Biological Survey has many stations where birds are invited into big wire cages by means of tempting food. Before Mr. Robin or Mr. Swallow gets out, he has a small aluminum band fastened around one leg. By means of banding birds in this way, it is possible to tell when the same bird comes back next year, or he can be identified at the next station he visits. This is one of the ways in which accurate information about birds' travel is being collected, and does not harm the bird in any way.

Different sorts of birds have different places to go in the winter. Many of our common summer birds spend the winter in Mexico, but the barn-swallow and the bobolink go as far south as the pampas of Argentina. Night-hawks, which, by the way, are not really hawks at all, but valuable insect-catchers, and cliff-swallows, go to Argentina and Paraguay when they leave us.

In general, birds build their nests at the northern end of their traveling route. Some birds, however, make long, special journeys to their nesting places. The surf-bird, which spends most of its life on the reefs of the Pacific Ocean, flies up into the high mountains of the continent to raise his family. Some birds stay in one location the whole year.

How would you like to travel from one end of the world to the other twice every year? The golden plover makes a non-stop flight across the Atlantic from Nova Scotia to the Lesser Antilles, about two thousand four hundred miles, that often. Tiny warblers cross the Gulf of Mexico without food or rest and barn-swallows travel five thousand miles between their summer and winter homes. The champion bird traveler is the Arctic tern. He really goes from the top to the bottom of the world every year. One may wonder what difference the tern sees betwen the ice wastes of the North Pole and those around the South Pole; but he makes his nest in the icy regions of the north in spring and goes back to the south polar country in the fall.—Junior World.

Why the Leaves Change Color.

Do you know the leaves are the trees' kitchen—the place where the food is prepared? In the autumn these kitchens all stop their work and something mysterious happens to the leaves. Somehow the tree knows ahead of time that King Winter is hiding just around the autumn hills, and everywhere except in the evergreen forests, the trees make preparation for the long cold. They draw the sap out of the leaves and store it away in the trunk and branches, and in every place where a leaf is fastened to a twig the parent tree builds a wall of small woody cells so that the sap cannot get back into the leaf again.

And the leaves, having no sap, fade and become dry, until finally they fly down to the ground and make a quilt for the grass and flowers. What a beautiful quilt the leaves make—yellow and red and brown! In the summer the sap made the leaves green, but now, when the cold winds blow, the sap is gone and other materials in the leaves have a chance to show their colors. These colors come like the sunrise, darker first and then lighter.

How strange it is that when autumn passes with her paint-brush she forgets the willows and the alders and the locusts. These leaves lose some of their fresh green color and become dry and crackly, but they never wear a new dress for fall. Perhaps that is the reason they stay on the tree so long, waiting and hoping for a gay touch of color.

Yellow is the most common autumn tint. You have seen it on the poplar, on the tulip tree, and on the beech. In the high mountains the aspens wear dresses of golden yellow, and their quivering leaves are a lacy pattern against the dark background of tall blue-green spruce. The graceful birch, with its white bark, is the loveliest yellow of all—yellow as warm and shining as sunlight. Sometimes leaves are a mixture of colors, red spots where the sun strikes, yellow on the shaded places.

The winds of autumn must have favorite among the trees, for they brush the leaves of oaks and maples until they glow as brightly as flames and look like fires on the hillside. These oaks and maples are "sweettooth" trees, for they have sugar in their leaves, and it is said that the little particles of sugar makes the leaves turn red—beet red, rose red, fire red, crimson and scarlet.

This fall when you see the leaves lose their summer greenery, when you see them wear bright new colors, then you will know that the other trees have turned all the sap into the bark and branches to make new leaves for another year. When you see the yellow and red and orange colors of autumn you will know that soon the leaves will be a lovely warm quilt for all the sleeping grasses and flowers. Then the leaves must be happy, because the pansies and violets and the sleeping tulip-bulbs all need a warm blanket.—Vesta P. Crawford, in The Girl's World.

O Lord, preserve me, and preserve all those
I love—friends, brothers, kin and e'en
my foes
On whom blind fate has smiled—
From seeing summer without flowers arrive,
Cage with no bird, and without bees
the hive,
The house without a child.

DEATHS

WARNER FIELDING LEWIS.

Resolutions.

At a meeting of the Vestry of St. Paul's Church, St. Paul's Parish, Hanover, Virginia, held at Hickory Hill, September 26, 1935, upon motion of Mr. R. R. Gwathmey, Jr., duly seconded, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That in the death of MR. WARNER FIELDING LEWIS our church has lost a devoted member who had exemplified, by his pure and blameless life, his faith; who for twenty years had served us as Vestryman and Senior Church Warden; and whose example will always be an inspiration.

Resolved, That we tender to his bereaved family our deepest sympathy and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mrs. Annie Dean Lewis, as a testimonial of our warm affection.

Resolved, further, that a copy of the foregoing be sent to the Southern Churchman.

A copy, Teste:

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Cotinued from page 17.)

Creear, the Commonwealth's attorney of Wise County, gave the last address of the day, taking as his subject, "The Building of Better Communities".

And there were numbers of most interesting exhibits. On the grounds were fine displays of field and garden products of Wise County, and especially vegetables raised on Sandy Ridge in the neighborhood of Grace House. The potato and corn exhibits were far superior in size and quality to those of former years, thus demonstrating the effectiveness of the demonstration work that is being done.

In the community room were beautiful exhibits of the woman's work in handcraft, needlework and quilting. This work is being promoted by Miss Mabel R. Mansfield, diocesan director of industrial work in the various missions, and many ribbons were awarded for the work of her pupils. Also there were fine displays of carving and metal work, in which the men are becoming very proficient. The Boys' Club at Grace House had an unusually good exhibit of carving.

One of the most interesting exhibits was the work of the children of Fairview School, near Grace House, of which Mr. C. N. Holbrooks is the principal. In this the pupils of the school showed real talent in painting, map drawing and in the preparation of a chart of native woods.

On leaving, Mr. Deitrick took with him some potatoes for exhibition at the State Fair at Richmond. One of the young men at the Grace House community is working his way through Berea College in Kentucky largely with his carving—literally "carving out his destiny".

Three Convocations Held.

Three convocations of the diocese held their annual autumn meetings last week. The Rev. Dr. Barrett P. Tyler, Warden of St. Michael's School for the Arapahoe Indians at Ethete, Wyoming, which is one of the centres for Indian work, was the principal speaker at the Convocation of Chester and later addressed the Convocation of South Philadelphia. The Chester Convocation, which comprises all churches in Delaware and the larger part of Chester counties, assembled at ten o'clock in the morning at the Church Farm School, Glen Loch. The South Philadelphia Convocation, comprising the churches south of Walnut Street between the two rivers, will assemble at 4 P. M., in Holy Trinity Memorial Chapel.

ROCHESTER.

Rt. Rev. David L. Farris, D. D., Bishop.

Dr. Zabriskie Speaker at Layman's Annual Banquet.

A ringing call to the men of the Church to enlist in more loyal, more intelligent and more efficient Christian discipleship was brought to a record-breaking gathering of 800 laymen of the diocese at their annual banquet in Rochester, on October 6, by the Rev. A. C. Zabriskie, S. T. D., professor of the Virginia Seminary.

Dr. Zabriskie was the main speaker at the banquet, which was sponsored by the diocesan laymen's committee of the Forward Movement. George F. Whedon of St. Paul's, Rochester, was banquet chairman.

The Rt. Rev. David Lincoln Ferris, D. D., Bishop, was given an ovation by the enthusiastic crowd of men, who jammed the Cathedral hall of the Masonic Building to hear Dr. Zabriskie's stirring address.

The meeting was the largest gathering of laymen held in the history of the diocese and credit for it and the strides of progress in rooting the Forward Movement in diocesan parishes is accorded an energetic committee of young laymen headed by S. Park Harman, of St. Luke's, Rochester, former All-American basketball star. George Tinklepaugh of Zion, Palmyra, Grandmaster of New York State Masons, was toastmaster at the banquet.

Dr. Zabriskie was also honor guest at a luncheon given by Roy C. Kates of St. Paul's, at which time he conferred with lay and clerical leaders of the Diosesan Forward Movement and told them of his summer experiences in the South American mission field.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew Forms Provincial Organization.

The first steps toward a provincial organization of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the Province of the Mid-West, were taken in Trinity Church, Niles, at a meeting on October 12 and 13. Attendants at the meeting included special appointees by the President of the Brotherhood, Dr. Benjamin F. Finney, from the Dioceses of Michigan, Western Michigan and Chicago. The purpose of the meeting was to begin the work of strengthening the Brotherhood in the Province of the Mid-West, and the setting up of a Provincial Council was one of the first acts of the meeting. Officers were elected as follows: Chairman, Mr. Allan L. Ramsay, Director of Boys' Work, Diocese of Michigan, Detroit; Vice-Chairman, Jack White of Chicago; Secretary, William Thybony of Chicago; Treasurer, Robert T. Allen, Jr., of Jackson, Michigan; Chaplain, the Rev. H. L. Nicholson of Niles; Advisors: John Treadwell, Jr., Courtenay Barber, and George Kubitz, of Chicago, and the Rev. Irwin C. Johnson, rector of St. John's Church, Detroit.

One of the first projects of the Provincial Council will be the publication of a magazine, to be edited in Chicago.

Normal Schools Open.

The annual Detroit Normal School, sponsored by the Department of Religious Education of the diocese, opened on October 22, in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit. The Normal School will continue for six consecutive Tuesday evenings, closing on November 26. The program is under the direction of Miss Elizabeth S. Thomas, Diocesan Director of Religious Education, and the Rev. W. R. Kinder, D. D., rector of St. Joseph's Church, Detroit, and Chairman of the Department.

Under the leadership of the clergy of the Flint area and the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, a Flint Normal School opened on Wednesday evening, October 23, in St. Paul's Church, Flint. The program provides for future meetings on November 20, in St. Jude's, Fenton; December 18 in St. Andrew's, Flint; January 15, in Christ Church, Owosso, and February 19, in Christ Church, Flint.

Training School.

The seventh annual Training School for Lay Readers of the diocese will be conducted at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, on five consecutive Thursday evenings, beginning with October 24. The Training School will close with a banquet in St. Andrew's Church, Detroit, on the evening of Monday, November 25, with the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of the diocese, as speaker.

Personal Notes

Rector is "Caught".

Dr. Duncan H. Browne, rector of old St. James' Church, Chicago, was a center of no little interest and excitement here Tuesday night. Dr. Browne entered the automatic elevator in the apartment house where he lives and, after having closed the door, discovered the elevator was balking. He could not get out. Calling for assistance, he roused residents of the building who called police. Efforts of police to release Dr. Browne failed and they in turn called the fire department. A battalion chief and members of Truck No. 9 and Engine Company 11 arrived and, with axes, freed the rector.

Take Charge of New Work.

The Rev. Donald E. Veale took over the work at Trinity Church, Clemson, S. C., on September 15. He also has charge of Pendleton, Seneca, and Walhalla. Mr. Veale comes to Upper South Carolina from the Diocese of Michigan, where he was until recently rector of Christ Church in Flint. Previously he had had work in Missouri, where a church, parish house, and rectory were built under his guidance. His theological training was received at Sewanee from which Seminary he was graduated in 1926.

Call Accepted.

The Rev. Harry Walker of St. Mary' Church, Daytona Beach, Fla., has accepted a call to Trinity Church, Columbus, Ga.

Retires.

The Rev. Seelye Bryant, rector of the Church of the Advent, Pawtucket, R. I., has retired. For several years he has been making a brave fight against physical infirmities. His work among young people has been especially notable, beginning with his association as curate with the Rev. Albert M. Hilliker, at Christ Church, Lonsdale.

Ordained Deacon.

The Rev. James Paul, a graduate of the Western Theological Seminary, who last year took work at Kebel College, Oxford, was ordained to the diaconate by Bishop Lloyd at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on October 14. The Rev. Mr. Paul is to be a curate at St. James' Church, New York City.

Bishop Barnwell Assumes New Charge.

The Rt. Rev. Middleton S. arnwell, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Georgia, arrived in Savannah October 2, to assume charge of the diocese. Bishop and Mrs. Barnwell will live in the DeRenne Apartment, 24 East Liberty Street, Savannah.

A congregational assembly to meet Bishop Barnwell was held the evening of October 10.

Choir Director Receives Reward.

Miss Ethel F. Bird, choir director and organist of the Church of the Redeemer, Providence, Rev. Donald J. Campbell, rector, has been awarded the degree of Associate of Trinity College of Music, London, England. She received her diploma after studying for several years with Fredrick Johnson, F. A. G. O., organist and choirmaster of the Church of the Advent, Boston. Miss Bird is a member of the New England Chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

Deaths.

The Rev. Edward Collins of Detroit, known to hundreds of Michigan Church people for his long ministry in the mission fields of the Diocese of Michigan, died in Harper Hospital, Detroit, on Wednesday morning, October 16, after a long illness. Mr. Collins was the oldest priest in the diocese, being eighty-five years of age. He was born in England, and was a graduate of St. Boniface College. He was ordained to the diaconate in 1887, by Bishop Harris, second Bishop of Michigan, and to the priesthood in 1891 by Bishop Davies, third bishop. His ministry in the diocese continued during the jurisdiction of four bishops, from 1887 until 1928, with interruptions. In 1928 he became non-parochial and remained so until the time of his death. Surviving Mr. Collins are his widow, five daughters and two sons.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

I ask no dreams, no prophet ecstasies,
No sudden rending of the veil of clay,
No angel visitant, no opening skies
But take the dimness of my soul away.

Owen D. Young reminds us that "Capital which overreaches for profits; labor which overreaches for wages, or a public which overreaches for bargains, will destroy each other."

There is no path to the millennium other than the path of justice, and if we discard the best attainable instrumentalities of justice, to that extent we invite the decision of the sword.

—Charles E. Hughes.

In looking back upon my work in all these years I can see more direct results of good through my individual efforts for individuals, than I can know of through all my spoken words to thousands upon thousands of persons in religious assemblies or in all my written words.

—H. Clay Trumbull.

One would never think of exhorting the heart to beat. For the heart beats in response to the flow of natural life. So when we are rightly related to God in Christ the life of God will flow through our human personalities and issue forth in deeds of service to our fellowmen. If we maintain an unbroken fellowship with the Father there will be an ever increasing manifestation of spiritual life and character. —R. C. Smith.

Take heart! the Waster builds again—
A charmed life old Goodness hath;
The tares may perish, but the grain
Is not for death.

—Whittier.

When Richard Baxter, dying, was asked how he was, he said, "Almost well, and nearly Home."

Not for a single day
Can I discern the way:
But this I know—
Who gives the day
Will show the way—
So I securely go.

—John Oxenham.

Those who see themselves to be blind, who know themselves to be ignorant, the lowly who recognize their sinfulness and misery and helplessness, and turn in their sore need to Christ, will be led by paths of growing knowledge and blessedness to the perfect day where their strengthened vision will be able to see light in the blaze which to us now is darkness.

—MacLaren.

The Church has banished, or helped to banish, many of the social plagues which used to poison and devastate human life. She may still, if she will—using her opportunities and living up to the height of her mandate—take her share in expelling the greatest scourge which still threatens the unity and progress of mankind.

—Lord Asquith.

The idea of a more just social order has arrived. It is a leaven of unrest. Old ways of thinking are insufficient to meet the problems of the present. Social ideals adequate to the old situation will not fully meet the new conditions. But the obstacles are primarily mental attitudes—hate, fear, greed and ignorance.

—Dr. Raymond C. Brooks.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED
By
REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Bishop Gailor.

Mr. Editor:

With much interest I read, in your issue of the 12th inst., a beautiful tribute from Mr. Alfred Mynders to my dead friend, Bishop Gailor. Having known Bishop Gailor since 1894, when I commenced my nineteen years of service as a member of the Board of Trustees of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tennessee, and through a somewhat desultory correspondence since then, I am prepared to say that of all the encomiums which have appeared in both Church and secular press, and which have fallen from the lips of men, none have reached beyond the true portrayal of the man.

Of all titles and degrees conferred upon him, he stood great without either prefix or affix. Great because he lived close to God.

On January 28, 1930, I wrote Bishop Gailor as to the truthfulness of two statements I had frequently heard during my residence at Sewanee, 1905 to 1908. With reference to them I said, "I wish to have them verified so that I may pass them on to others as facts and not as unverified legends." I now give my two questions to him and his answers, verbatim, as follows:

"First: Was General Edmund Kirby-Smith offered the position with the Louisiana State Lottery, which General G. T. Beauregard held at the time of his death, which would have paid him a salary or $25,000 a year? And did he decline with a statement to the effect that his reputation and influence were not for sale?"

"Second: While you were Chaplain at Sewanee were you offered the rectorship of a large parish in Chicago thrice, first a salary of $7,500 per annum, then $12,500, and finally you were requested to name a salary you would come for, after having declined the first two offers?"

To which the Bishop replied as follows:

Under date of February 1, 1930:

"First: Yes. General Kirby-Smith was offered $25,000 a year to permit his name to be used by the Louisiana State Lottery, but declined, saying:

" 'I have a wife and ten children and two dogs, and my salary is $1,500 a year; but I have my father's name and it must not be tarnished.'

"Second: I was called to Trinity Church, Chicago, and the salary was left blank for me to fill in. And the entire furniture of a three-story rectory was offered my wife as a personal gift. But I declined. I was also elected Bishop of Georgia, and declined to leave Sewanee at a critical time in its history."

I will state that which the Bishop's well-known modesty prevented his saying, i. e., at the time he declined to go to Chicago, his salary, like that of Gen. Kirby-Smith's, was $1,500 a year.

No words of mine are needed in commendation of his life; it testifies to the truthfulness of his words, "that in serving we are proving our fellowship with God."

"Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?"

"Vestries" of Colored Missions.

Mr. Editor:

One very practical way of advancing the work of the Church among the Colored race is, rigidly adhering to the policy of the Bishop in every diocese appointing the members of the Business Committee, or so-called "vestries" of Mission churches.

A board of five persons, including the priest in charge is amply sufficient. Because of the policy, in many dioceses, of "vestries" in such churches, there is scarcely any growth at all towards self-support. They are satisfied to be "carried," while they enjoy all the rights pertaining to vestrymen.

By the policy suggested inefficient men may be left off, and more earnest and aggressive men substituted. It is with the Bishop and the priest, chiefly supported on missionary funds, to lead the way to greater self-support. In some places, where such an individual can be had, who is deeply in sympathy with the colored work, it will be most wise, and extremely helpful, that one of the four vestrymen or committee, appointed by the Bishop, should be a white layman. I think such a policy would prove in the best interest, not only of the Colored race, but of the entire community, black and white. Many years of experience and observation have indicated the wisdom of such a policy.

A Real Neutrality.

Some time ago we made the statement that if war did come, no matter how great the emotional challenge, Christians in America must preserve a strict neutrality. Our point was that war had no place in Christianity.

Some of our readers objected, but we still maintain that our attitude is the only sane one in an otherwise insane world. As a great English leader has recently stated, if a maniac neighbor sets fire to his house, it doesn't help any to set fire to our own. And so we cannot see what good can ever be accomplished by any nation using the method of war.

Of course our attitude must be that of strict neutrality and, by strict, we mean nothing less than a complete isolation from the war and the profits of war. That was the sadness in the last great war. We pretended to be neutral for a few years, but in reality we were every day becoming more and more involved in loans and munitions sale. We forget, that when we went into the war, it was to save our financial skins and our unneutral neutrality was responsible.

Some Christians today are saying that Mussolini ought to be punished. "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord." He will be punished unquestionably. We know, if we face the facts, that he was afraid of internal troubles and war seemed the only way out, but then German leaders also felt the same way in 1914.

And as for punishment, the "tried villains" of the last war seem to have received very little. For Hindenburg died a great hero and president of his nation. Ludendorf is living in comfort, while the ex-kaiser is happily married and dwelling upon a noble estate in complete relaxation, while millions had been killed and millions are suffering who probably knew little or nothing of the real causes of the war.

Is it asking too much for Christians to learn to control their own emotions? Isn't religion supposed to be forceful enough to guide us into peaceful ways? Do we dare to say that war is indecent with its munitions rackets and its secret intrigues? Unless we dare to face such questions, we shall hardly dare to carry on the religion that has at times to face the Cross.

It is quite likely that Italy will be punished for her own offences. She is in a strange land miles away from her sources of supply. Her poor soldiers will pay heavily in lives and suffering for the arrogance of her leader. Win or lose she will regret the present move. But our attitude should still be that of neutrality until we are guided into some stronger and better method of proclaiming the peace that Christ brought into the world.

An Adventure in Fellowship.

One of the fine effects of The Forward Movement is the new and better fellowship to be found among men and women of the Church of different schools of thought. In the groups which have been meeting throughout the country, it has not been uncommon for extreme Anglo-Catholics to find themselves members of a special committee with men of ultra-Evangelical views. It is indeed a spirit of that better fellowship which comes to men seriously trying to lead forward to Christ.

This is indeed but one of the better things about The Forward Movement, but it certainly is one of the things most needed. It has long seemed impossible to bring into a world that is in need thoughts of peace and brotherhood when Christians did not themselves practice brotherhood. It is of course beautiful to see brethren dwelling together in unity, but when that unity was not even exhibited in a single branch of the Church, it was the worst witness against Christianity of all.

There is really much that we have to teach each other. What forward step is more needed than the spirit of evangelical witnessing? Our Church has too long been content to sit and wait for men to enter. The thought that we had an evangelical obligation to go out into the highways and hedges was kept up by only a small number of old type evangelicals. That these have representation in the Forward Movement is one of the signs of real awakening.

To many of us, we have been so wrapt up in the terms of our fathers that our faith as a vital thing in the present age has been obscured from men. The Liberals have a great contribution to make in this respect, and they are making it.

There is also the truth that many of us have to face, that our idea of worship has been hackneyed and our ideas of ways in which to improve public worship have lacked a sense of beauty. The catholic churchman can demonstrate many better methods, and we need him.

But none of these things would or could be emphasized, if we did not have a more perfect fellowship than that which at times has been our lot. The Forward Movement has brought these forces together. They are working together in harmony and for the benefit of the Church as a whole. It is indeed a great and real adventure in fellowship and it will do much to draw men to the Church which has so much to give to the world of today.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

"Work, Pray, and Give For His Kingdom."

Lewis B. Franklin, D. C. L., Vice-President and Treasurer, National Council.

The missionary cause of the Church is languishing because of a lack of money. Appropriations have been reduced by more than forty per cent as compared with those of a few years ago, and a deficit of $850,000 has been accumulated. Faithful and experienced workers have been dismissed, the support of hospitals, schools, and colleges reduced to a dangerous degree, and the preaching of the Gospel limited by reductions in personnel and money for travel. In the domestic field we have given a man seven stations instead of four, and have then told him that he will have less money for gasoline and will have to make out with an old car in bad repair. In the foreign field we are able to send but a few replacements a year to fill vacancies caused by age, illness or death. There is real danger in some districts that in a few years we shall be left without trained and experienced leadership.

The casual comment upon this situation is that it is not surprising in view of economic conditions. It is not surprising, but it is not necessary. The gifts of the members of the Episcopal Church in 1934 for the support of its missionary work under the National Council were at the rate of $1.15 per communicant, or about two cents a week. The devoted one-third, which is all that can be rated as regular givers, have continued their support of the Church in the face of declining incomes; the casual and sometime large givers have usually faded out of the picture. While giving at the rate of two cents a week is utterly inadequate to care for the great work our Church has undertaken, the greater tragedy lies in the large proportion of non-givers. This is evidence of the tragic indifference to Christian duty on the part of a majority of our people who take no part in the Church's chief work.

Our Church in its Office of Instruction states that it is the bounden duty of every Churchman "to follow Christ, to worship God every Sunday in His Church, and to work, pray, and give for the spread of His Kingdom." Here is the standard set for us and which we accept by our membership; a standard high indeed, but far less high than the pledge given over and over again as we make our communions, "here we offer and present unto Thee, O Lord, our selves."

Forty Additional Men.

The Rt. Rev. Frederick B. Bartlett, Executive Secretary of the Department of Domestic Missions.

The cumulative results of cuts in the domestic mission field are most serious, both in the effect upon the men concerned and on the work itself. The withdrawal of support up to a certain point stimulated local giving but it has been far too rapid to be made up from local resources. The clergy have been forced steadily down to a narrower margin of subsistence. A disheartening experience! However little they may acknowledge it or feel it for themselves, they feel keenly the effects upon their families.

In many places, the one method in which the districts have been able to absorb the reductions has been by not filling vacancies when they occurred in the clergy staff. This means that in some instances whole fields have gone uncared for. These fields have not been single parishes but whole groups of mission congregations. In other instances the remaining clergy, already few and overworked, have spread their efforts to carry on in the field of the withdrawals. The coverage has become thinner and thinner with an inevitable decrease in pastoral care and administrative efficiency. To make the situation even more difficult, as the areas of responsibility have been extended, the allowances for travel have been reduced, until now no provision is made for the running and upkeep of automobiles.

Naturally all extension work has ceased and we are losing golden opportunities where the Church is both wanted and needed. Just to fill existing gaps in our domestic missionary staff and restore the work in our domestic fields to the point at which the cuts begin, would require forty men. If we were to go further and take up the opportunities now facing us, eighty or a hundred would be needed. And the greater tragedy is the fact that we have the men but not the money!

German Missions Still in Peril.

The Christian Observer, October 23, 1935.

According to Dr. Julius Richter, of Berlin, Germany, "the German Protestant missions are in dire straits again. Foreign exchange is so scarce in our country (Germany) that the utmost amount which can be provided for these missions under the direst restrictions is little less than one hundred marks for every Germany missionary per month or about two million marks for all missionaries together. Not a penny is allowed either for the construction or repairing of churches, mission houses, schools, native pastorates and similar things, nor for the salaries of the native pastors, teachers, catechists, evangelists, Bible women and the rest. So this whole burden of maintaining the native Church and of propagating the Gospel has to be thrown on the weak shoulders of the native Church, and that at a time when they are not prepared for so great a task. They will imperatively need some years to accommodate themselves to this new duty. It is falling on them all the more heavily because they are in a state of rapid and radical impoverishment."

Honoring the Bible at Geneva.

Sunday School Times.

Cromwell rightly spoke of the "Blessed Reformation." Next year will be the four hundredth anniversary of the coming of Calvin to Geneva and the adoption of the Reformation by that city. This year there has been a preliminary fete in which thousands took part. It was opened by a celebration of the Lord's Supper in St. Pierre's, the old cathedral church of the city, for Christians of all connections, and was followed by a mass meeting in the Palis des Expositions, at which M. Beguine, the President of the Council of State, paid hearty tribute to the characteristic doctrines of the Reformation—the sovereignty of God, the authority of the Bible, and salvation by grace. Then there was singing by massed choirs of 1,200 voices in front of the great monument to the Reformation and recitation by the poet Francois Franzoni of his "Ode to the Glory of the Word of God." Followed a demonstration of 40,000 young people from all the churches with flags, music, and general enthusiasm.

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

On Lighting the Beacons

What is a beacon? The beacon was formerly used to flash the news of some important event from one end of a country to the other. In England there were a number of beacons on high points, where, on the lighting of a bonfire the nearest beacons would pass the light signal on to those beyond, until in a short space of time, the signal would be flashed from one point to all other parts of the country. The appearance of the Spanish Armada in the English Channel was made known to the English people by the use of beacon fires. The writer of this article was born in a house called The Beacon, because it was in close proximity to one of these ancient beacons.

The Church as a Beacon.

Each Church should be a beacon giving light to the surrounding country; not a physical light like the ancient beacons, but a spiritual influence, a heavenly light, which brings good news to rejoice and bless the minds and hearts of as many as possible. The Parish Church has lost much of its real significance and has been degraded to the commonplace, till there is but little to differentiate it from other public buildings. Jacob, after he had awakened from his dream of angels and of the voice of God speaking to him, said:—"This is none other than the House of God, this is the Gate of Heaven." We have lost that feeling of awe and reverence which would be natural to us if we really regarded our Church as the House of God and the Gate of Heaven. We too often lose sight of the fact that we are in the Presence of God and think more of who is going to preach to us. So we miss the greater blessing which might be ours if going to Church meant all that it might and should mean to us.

A Lighted Beacon.

If the Church is to be a beacon there must be a fire burning there, not in the furnace, but on the altar of our hearts, a fire from heaven. And if this fire is to descend upon us, there must be an offering of love and devotion in our hearts to bring it down from heaven. There must be fire from heaven if there is to be the zeal and enthusiasm which alone can make a Church a power in the community around it. The greater the zeal and enthusiasm, the further the radiation of light and warmth will spread. And the radiating influence ought certainly to be felt in adjoining parishes. Churches should stimulate one another. There should be no no-man's-land, where the waves of light and influence fade out and cease to be.

Fire from Heaven.

But it may be said, we are not Elijah, we cannot call down fire from heaven. There we are mistaken. For Christ Himself said:—"If ye then being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him." And we remember that the Holy Spirit came as fire from heaven on the Day of Pentecost, and the Apostles and the disciples in the Upper Room, were filled with a power and a courage and enthusiasm which helped them to go forth and begin the conquest of the world for Christ. "Ask and ye shall receive," said Christ, and therefore we can ask for the fire from heaven, which shall make our Churches beacons so that all men will know that Christianity is still a power and blessing to the world.

The Menace of Communism.

On a card received from our Noon-day Preacher in Wall Street, who preached to great crowds there every week day, he says:—"The young women and boys preach it (Communism) everywhere they go. Each one is a missionary for their cause. How about us?" The fire, which inflames them and makes of them enthusiiastic disciples of Communism, is an alien fire, like the Will-o-the-wisp, which hovers over stagnant pools and swamps, but it is spreading in our great cities where discontent is so rife among the unemployed. In the old days of prairie fires it was customary to start a backfire to create a burnt area to check the oncoming blaze. The best protection against Communism and other false and destructive movements, is for our Churches to be beacons, lighted and aflame with the fire from heaven. A merely nominal Christianity does not inspire the loyalty and enthusiasm needed to enable it to hold its ground, much less to enable it to go forward.

The Beacon Lights of History.

It is wonderful what one single individual can do, when filled with enthusiastic devotion to our Lord. Men and women have been burning and shining lights in their day and generation, in the past, and their names have come down to us to inspire us by their examples, "to go and do likewise." What then would happen if the whole Church should catch fire? Would it not shine as a mighty beacon giving light to the whole nation and pointing the way to the coming of the Kingdom of God here on earth?

God's Mighty Men.

Lord, may we ever wait
With longing and desire,
That so from Heaven's gate
May flow the heavenly fire—
The fire that melts the heart
And makes the tongue a flame,
That sets Thy sons apart,
As when the prophets came.

This is the world's great need
For Thine own mighty men,
For this Thy Church doth plead,
That they may come again.
Lord, may we see that day
When leaders strong and true
May show to men the way
To make this earth anew.

The Adventure of Discipleship

By HENRY W. HOBSON,
Bishop of Southern Ohio.

This address was delivered by Bishop Hobson, Chairman of the Forward Movement Commission, in the Episcopal Church of the Air Series, October 20, 1935.

A POLICEMAN, who was also a philosopher, called out to a crowd which was milling around, blocking traffic, and getting nowhere, "If you want to stand here, you'll have to move on." It was this order which was given to the Episcopal Church when the command, "Forward March" was issued, and a Commission on a Forward Movement was appointed just a year ago today. We faced a Church membership, many of whom were "milling around, blocking traffic and getting nowhere."

Last February, when I spoke on the Forward Movement at one of the Church of the Air services, I asked some of you to join me in looking honestly at the rather tragic conditions which existed in certain aspects of our Church's life and work. I shall not take any time today to consider again the situation which made a Forward Movement imperative. It is enough to say that the loyal members of the Church, deeply concerned about what they saw, and yearning to have the Church stand more firmly in the life of the individual and the life of the world, cried out—"If you want to stand here, you'll have to move on." It was a cry of agony—yes, because it hurt grievously to see the Church missing great opportunities. It was a cry of longing—yes, because the world's need for the Gospel of Christ was so appalling. It was a cry of courage—yes, because there were many eager and ready to go forth, not counting the cost, in the Church's warfare. It was a cry of faith—yes, above all else, because it was founded on an unswerving conviction that it is God's purpose that the Church shall proclaim the Gospel of Christ with new power in our day, and that He will give us the strength of His Spirit to fulfill that purpose.

EVERY Forward Movement which has ever taken place in the Church has been marked by the response of loyal Disciples of Christ to His call—"Follow me," and we can be dead certain that this does not mean to follow Him in a retreat, or to go around in a circle, but it demands that we move on—that we go forth as Disciples to share in His advance. Therefore, in this present Forward Movement "loyal Discipleship" has been the rallying cry calling members to renew their allegiance to the Master. We have been challenged to put aside all compromise, to have done with the dishonest practice of watering-down, and to ask with courage—"What must I do to prove my Discipleship?"

The story of the response which has come during the past nine months to this call to renewal, is an amazing one. Bishop Stires of Long Island expressed what many, who have been watching closely, have felt when he said to me recently, "The influence and results of the Forward Movement have gone far, far beyond our hopes and expectations of a year ago. A new power is coming into the Church." Even though we realize fully that only a beginning has been made, yet what has happened to those individuals and in those places where the Forward Movement has been given the right of way is truly a miracle. And it's a miracle which is coming not as the result of any new program set forth by a small group of men, for the Commission on the Forward Movement has resisted the temptation, which many have voiced, to set forth a hard and fast program, and instead has asked the clergy and people of the Church to unite in building the program—to share in a rediscovery of what it means to travel the Disciple's way. As a result individuals, parishes, dioceses and organizations, have been rising up to make their contributions. A rebirth is taking place—but not according to machine-like procedure—for the wind is blowing where it listeth, and reports come from hither and yon—often from most surprising places—telling of advances being made and victories won. It has become an adventure, and instead of spending these minutes together on the details of what's happening I want to talk to you about the spirit that is back of it—the Adventure of Discipleship.

Some of you will want more detailed information about the Forward Movement which there is not time to give you today. Some will wish copies of our literature. Write to Forward Movement Headquarters, Episcopal Church, 223 W. 7th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio. And one more word before I continue, please don't excuse yourself for not going to Church this morning by listening to this broadcast. It's far more important for you to be present this morning with your fellow Christians in Church than it is for you to listen to anything I may say.

Every great adventure involves a discovery. When a knowledge of all the facts in a situation makes for certainty, then adventure gives way to routine. The value of the discovery determines the appeal of the adventure. The supreme adventure in man's experience through the ages has been his discovery of God, for to know Him is life and to miss Him is death. Christian Discipleship offers us the supreme adventure because it calls us to be followers and companions of One whose paramount purpose is to make it possible for us to discover God. Philip voiced the eternal longing of man when he said, "Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." And in His answer Christ pointed the way of adventurous Discipleship—"He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." When the Master said, "I am the way," He meant above all else, "I am the way of adventure which if a man will travel courageously he will make the supreme discovery—God."

IN CALLING men to Discipleship the Forward Movement therefore places at the very center of its program, the essential importance of discovering God. Much that has been done during the first year has been focussed on this adventure. Discipleship has been presented not as a vague relationship with a far away figure of the past, but as a definite way involving the seven steps which make it possible for us to walk as Disciples of a living Christ. "If ye continue in my way, then are ye my Disciples," and, as I have said, His way is the way to God. Each of the seven steps of Turn, Follow, Learn, Pray, Serve, Worship and Share—which have been so constantly emphasized in the Forward Movement literature and conferences—is a step of adventure in itself. Try taking them and we find, like all true adventures, that the way demands courage, perseverance, self-sacrifice and that spirit of pressing on which conquers the temptation to turn back. The man who day by day is honestly striving to take these steps will find a thrill in the adventure of Discipleship.

The emphasis which has been placed upon the importance of Bible reading, prayer, and worship in the Forward Movement program is essential because these practices—call them old-fashioned if you will—have always played such a large part in the adventure of discovering God. Hundreds of thousands of the members of the Episcopal Church, besides many members of other Churches, are using "Forward-Day by Day," the little manual of daily Bible readings and meditations which is being issued six times a year by the Forward Movement Commission. Have you seen the present number in its cover which looks like a firecracker? If not, ask your rector for a copy or send to Forward Movement Headquarters. The first order for this issue came from Anvik, Alaska; from Honolulu comes a note, "I am a shut-in, eighty-five years of age. The Bible Reading booklet has proved such a blessing to me. I am anxious to pass it on. I pray morning and night for the success of the Forward Movement"; from a man in New Jersey a letter, "I am using the booklet and passing it on to others. The other day a friend, met casually in the ferry house at Hoboken, asked me if I had seen it and spoke enthusiastically about it." Such simple reports, coming from all parts of the world, are certain proof that many are embarking on journeys of adventure. It's true that the majority are still tied up tight to their old moorings, but it's encouraging to know that the circulation of these Bible Reading booklets is ten times greater than in the case of similar material in the past, and that since last Lent over two million copies have been distributed. Try the daily adventure of using "Forward—Day by Day." The present issue covers October and November. The next issue for Advent and Christmas will be ready for distribution about November first. Plan now to get extra copies to share your adventure with your friends.

The Forward Movement will continue to demand that a Disciple must do more than accept certain ethical practices known as Christian standards. Through faithfulness in prayer, study of the Scriptures, worship and service he must develop what we call personal religion which is really nothing more or less than a personal relationship with God. He must become an adventurer; ready to sail an unknown sea, but using those aids to navigation which time has proved of supreme value; facing storms and dangers with that courage which carries him ever onward in the journey which leads to the discovering of God.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT, however, does not encourage a pillar dweller type of Discipleship. Important as is the adventure which leads us to God, the Christian Disciple is also called to discover a new and more noble relationship with his fellow beings. Christ insisted upon this when He answered the question about which is the greatest commandment. The Disciple's life must include his relations with God and with his neighbor. All the maladjustments in our families, in social, economic, racial, national or international life are the result of men not being able to get along with each other. What a great adventure awaits the man who seeks to discover the new relationship which will help to unite men as God's children and brothers one of another.

In the Church this adventure in human relations demands that we shake off the nightmare of selfish individualism, and awake to a fuller sense of our common purpose and responsibilities. It is calling our men into united action and the President of the Laymen's League reports a new wave of interest and enthusiasm during recent months. It encourages our adult members to offer youth a fuller share in the Church's life, and stimulates youth to be eager in seeking out and seizing new opportunities for service. It demands that as fellow members of the Church we avoid the temptation to put the blame for what may be wrong on others, and instead show forth a finer loyalty toward each other and toward our duly chosen leaders. It helps us both to push aside the non-essentials which have so often created barriers between fellow Christians, and to strengthen the bonds which unite us beneath any surface differences.

In the life of society and the world the Disciple has a thrilling adventure ahead as he seeks to discover how the teachings of Christ can be brought to bear upon the relations of classes, races, and nations. Christ stands directly opposed to those conditions, between individuals or nations, which produce such suffering, oppression and the violation of the weak by the strong as is prevalent in the world today. He took those first Disciples, transformed them, and sent them forth in the great adventure of transforming the world. His loyal Disciples have always been called to share in such a transforming Forward Movement.

THIS ADVENTURE therefore demands that we face honestly the fact that we have too often disobeyed Christ's orders, and that we go forth into all the world to proclaim His Gospel. Unless men know Him, the new relationships which He came to establish between men will never come. The only way that men can know Him is to be told the Good News by those who have already received it. The Forward Movement must stir us to do our full part in carrying Christ to all the world with a new flood of that missionary zeal which He bestowed upon those first Disciples. We are called to express this spirit in our response to the opportunity which is presented as the Church unites in the annual every member canvass this fall.

Whatever the Forward Movement may require of us, and wherever the adventure of Discipleship may take us, it is essential that we remember that it is God who calls us to share in His Forward Movement, and it is God who gives our spirits the urge to go forth in adventure. It is because God is marching on, it is because He lives the adventuresome life, that we find the new Spirit stirring throughout the Church today. Man responds because God's Spirit enters his life and starts a fire—a fire which can not be insulated or segregated, but which passes from life to life—even as we see it doing today—and unites men in the adventure of Discipleship—in the eternal Forward Movement of God.

A BURDEN NEVER MEANT FOR US.

THERE is one kind of burden which was never meant for our shoulders; and it is one which most of us have carried too long. It is the burden of things which have happened in the past, or have not happened at all. What a weight of futile regret, of vain hope, of fear regarding the unknown future we are carrying now! No wonder our energies are exhausted and our spiritual candles burn low. God never meant us to be loaded down with bad memories, or premonitions of evils to come. It is our little faith in God which unfits us for the bearing of the true cross.

Elwood Haines.

THE CHALLENGE OF THE TIMES.

In no time in the world's history has the value of the Church been so tested nor has its value, if what our Lord intended it to be, been so greatly needed.

If the members of the Church will make a right use of its functions measure up to a reasonable degree of a member's responsibility, and enlist for service rather than for benefits, things will happen in the Kingdom of God on earth.

The Church needs such action, we need it, and it is our duty to those who shall follow us to lay so sure a foundation of Christian habits, living and conduct, and that includes worship, that it will be adequate for them.

If the Church plays fast and loose with life, what can be expected from the rest of the world?—Trinity Church, Asheville.

Have Faith in God

By THOMAS F. OPIE,

Rector of St. John's Church, Olney, Maryland.

Mark 11:22—Have faith in God.

MEN are showing, by the way they live, that they have faith in money, in medicine, in education, in self, in science, in good roads, and in scores of things that might be mentioned. They show by the way they slave for money that they have faith in it. They work hard day and night for it. Yes, men have a great deal of faith in money. They have faith in medicine. This faith is not simply an intellectual assent to the efficacy of medicine. It is a faith that is shown in act, in conduct, in actual use of medicine. Men have so much faith in education that the state today is spending millions annually for it. Men have faith in themselves. This is shown by the success that crowns their efforts. Everything worth while in the matter of attainment in this life is due largely to man's faith in self. Man has definite faith in science. Science stands for the ultimate truth—and it will be a sad time for the race, when, if ever, the race loses faith in its ability to find and to interpret and to know the truth.

All this faith on the part of man is actually demonstrated—it is manifested, not so much by what man says about these things, as it is by what man is doing about them! Man shows by his life that he has faith in these practicable things. He has faith in the seasons, the soil, the seed, the sun. If he had no faith in these he would not plant—and not planting, he would perish.

When we say, Have faith in God, we do not mean that you have ended the matter by simple assent to belief in the existence of Divine Intelligence, Divine Goodness, Divine Love, etc. It is not your lips' allegiance, but your life's allegiance that is wanted. It is not mere mental credence in God, but a matter of conduct, action, deportment. The end of your belief in money is not that you believe in its purchasing power—but that you are aligned with it—that you love it and work for it and use it. So with God. It is not enough that you believe in His existence (the devils also believe—and tremble)—but that you are aligned with Him, that you love Him, that you serve Him. Have faith in God—and show it in the same way you show that you have faith in the things about you.

Man's faith does not drag God down to earth to become the tool of man—but it lifts man up to become the child and companion of God. To know God, to trust God, to love God and to serve God—this it is to have faith in God. The man without faith is a pessimists and a foolish body. He lives in a fool's paradise. Rule God out and indeed you have not even a fool's paradise—but let God in and you have a reasonable universe—and a world for which there is some ultimate hope and some high destiny and purpose.

Have faith in God. Have faith in goodness, truth, beauty. And show by a good and true and beautiful life that you believe in these attributes of God. Align yourself with goodness, truth, and beauty—as you do with money, education and science. Have faith in that which is spiritual and eternally vital and just and lovely and of good report.

Have faith in God's power—to do, to keep, to perform, to protect and to preserve—and show by a calm and trustful and useful life that you have this faith. Line up with the power of God and show your faith by your works.

Have faith in God's goodness. God is not only Love, but God is Good. Lose faith in the goodness of God, and there is no ground for goodness anywhere! Show your faith in God by your faith in goodness and show your faith in goodness by exemplifying it—by using it—by aligning yourself with all that is good in the world, as far as in you lies.

Have faith in God's wisdom. Have no fear that man's investigations will ever disprove God's wisdom—or His goodness—or His love. Infinite wisdom is shown in all the laws of nature. Intelligence is behind every process of God, from the creation of a snowflake to the evolution of stars and planets and worlds innumerable.

Have faith in God's presence and in His directing influence in the affairs of the world. Rollin, the eminent author of "Ancient History," says that it is evident that God has a purpose for the race and that God is in the affairs of peoples and nations. God is present in His world and wherever He can get into the hearts and lives of peoples He is entering—and wherever men will cooperate with Him, He is directing men's affairs to a high and holy destiny.

Have faith in God. "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness and the power, and the glory and the victory and the majesty; for all that is in the heavens and the earth is Thine. Thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and Thou art exalted as head above all. Both riches and honor come of Thee and Thou rulest over all. In Thine hand it is to make great and to give strength unto all. Now, therefore, our God, we thank Thee and praise Thy glorious name."

THERE IS NO DEATH.

"Who knows but that which we call life is death, and that which we call death is life?"

W. J. Moore.

This dreaded that, which we call death—
A name so misapplied—
Is entrance into real life,
For which our Saviour died.

We cling to this brief mortal life,
Despite its sorrows, pain;
But this is due to lack of faith,
And reckon not death's gain.

A loving message spake by Christ
That told us why He came;
It was to give abundant life,
O bless His holy name.

Then, too, there was a sacrifice,
Atonement on the Cross;
The shedding of His precious blood,
Which made for gain not loss.

So cling not to this mortal life,
But live for Him who died,
That we may make our home with God,
Forever to abide.

The English Bible in Public Life

Does It Make a Difference?

By PHILIP WHITWELL WILSON,

Special Correspondent, New York Times.

IT IS four hundred years since a Tudor England received the first complete printed Bible.

This fourth centenary suggests two questions: first, what attention did the English pay to their Bible when it was handed to them? Secondly, what difference did the Bible make to the life of the English-speaking commonwealths?

The great translator of the Bible into English was William Tyndale. "If God spare my life," said Tyndale to a learned scholar, "ere many years I will cause a boy that driveth the plough shall know more of the Scripture than thou dost." A noble boast that was abundantly justified.

The historian John Richard Green declared that "England became the people of a book, and that book was the Bible." Nor does his testimony stand alone. As a historian, Professor Macaulay Trevelyan holds the Order of Merit, and he tells us that "a new generation" of Elizabethans grew up "under the influence of the Bible, the Prayer Book, and loyalty to the Queen." Among the influences of a formative period, the Bible came first.

The reading of the Bible has been an accepted habit of the British Commonwealth of nations.

The Prime Ministers of Great Britain, one after the other, have been men of the Bible. The entire thinking of Gladstone was based upon what he called "the impregnable rock of Holy Scripture." Lord Salisbury was a devout churchman, and so with Asquith, the Congregationalist; Balfour, MacDonald, and Bonar Law, the Presbyterians; Lloyd George, the Baptist; and Stanley Baldwin, the Anglican of Methodist ancestry, who, in outspoken fashion, confesses that without the Bible, he would be hard pressed by the weight of his responsibilities.

John Bright, the British Quaker statesman, lifted the oratory of the House of Commons and of the political platform into the realm of prophecy by his devotion to the Bible. Joseph Chamberlain, like Theodore Roosevelt, taught in a Sunday school.

The world has recently acclaimed King George on his silver jubilee, and the acclaim has been more than a formality. The King promised his mother, Queen Alexandra, that he would read the Bible every day, and he states that he has kept the promise.

What has been the result of the reading of the Bible? Let us appeal again to the historians.

Of the England that received the Book four hundred years ago, John Richard Green writes that "no greater moral change ever passed over a nation." Trevelyan puts it thus: "The effect of the continual domestic study of the Book upon the national character, imagination, and intelligence for nearly three centuries to come, was greater than that of any literary movement in our annals, or any religious movement since the coming of St. Augustine."

That verdict has never been upset. For more than sixty years Queen Victoria reigned over an ever-expanding empire. On one occasion she received certain chieftains in audience. To her navy and her army she did not allude, but she handed them a Bible. "This," she said, "is the secret of England's greatness."

Read the Bible, and does not its influence cease to be a mystery? Here is the Book of Life—the Book that reveals how life is lived and might be lived; why life is worth while; why life should be shared with others; the power by which life is redeemed and safeguarded and enriched; the opportunities in life; its responsibilities; the perils that menace life, and the purposes that life fulfills. The entire perspective of the Bible is focussed on the Christ who came that we might have life and have it more abundantly. It has been of supreme advantage to the English-speaking world that the leadership in every field should have been brought by the Bible into touch with what is meant by life.

The Bible is full of all sorts and conditions of men and women and children. Reading the Bible, we arrive at the value of the individual, or we learn respect for others. Also, we learn respect for ourselves. The Bible thus makes citizens, and in the English-speaking world it prepared the people for the franchise.

The Bible insists on rectitude. Every revival of interest in the Bible was followed in Britain by a movement for political reform. If public life is clean this is the reason.

The Bible denounces oppression and requires that wrongs be righted. In the British Empire there has been a growing sensitiveness to injustices of every kind.

The transformation of Great Britain from an old into a new country was achieved mainly by the men of the Bible. John Howard read that we should visit the prisoners in their affliction, and he flung himself into the task of reforming the jails. Wilberforce on one side of the Atlantic, like Whittier on the other, read that Christ died for all men on the cross. They flung themselves into the crusade against slavery.

The Bible inculcated a reverence for laws justly administered. During the periods of strain and stress there have been scores of revolutions. In the English-speaking countries sovereignty has been unshaken in its stability. These have been the countries where it is safest to live.

The Bible emphasizes sound principles of commercial ethics. Amid the greatest depression in the annals of mankind the financial credit of the English-speaking commonwealth is maintained. There has been grave unemployment as elsewhere, but, on the whole, a much higher standard of living. The material reserves of these countries have been as impressive as their moral reserves.

The Bible asserts liberty of conscience and of culture. At the conclusion of the war not one English-speaking democracy had seriously to abridge freedom of speech or of the press, or to suspend a representative system of government. The suffrage has been extended, and throughout the Orient, from the Philippines to Egypt, it has been the aim of these countries to put an end to the old colonial system, substituting autonomous administration.

The English-speaking democracies have displayed a volume of initiative which, in the aggregate, far surpasses the achievements, however notable they may have been, of countries where the Bible is less known. The railway, the steamship, the automobile, the use of power in industry, postal and telegraph services, electric light, moving pictures, the games most generally and healthily played out of doors—these illustrations of such initiative are unchallengeable. Boy Scouts, Girl Guides, foreign missions, campaigns against drugs, drink, and other evils—most of such efforts originated in the English-speaking world.

The Bible contains a gospel of peace, and in their demands for peace the Bible-loving democracies have been conspicuous. Despite militarism elsewhere they terminated conscription after the war, and in the spirit of the prophet Isaiah they have sought steadily to limit armaments.

Here is an inventory of familiar phenomena that anybody can check up for himself. We cannot open a newspaper or enter into conversation without finding that the facts are as stated.

Not that there is any special virtue in a Bible translated into English. Turn to any country and men of the Bible leave names held in peculiar honor. Certainly Norway has her Nansen, a great explorer, statesman, and friend of the friendless. He read the Bible. England had her Ruskin, the apostle of beauty in the city, the church, and the home. He read the Bible. Russia had her Tolstoy, the pioneer of social justice. He read the Bible. China had her Sun Yat-sen, architect of democracy. He read the Bible. India has her Gandhi, champion of the untouchables. He reads the Bible. Germany was uplifted by the character of Hindenburg. This war lord who became a pillar of peace was a man of the Bible.

The Bible is today to be had almost free of cost. But a knowledge of the Bible can only be acquired by a personal investment of time which is worth more than money. That investment has yielded a generous dividend of influence both for the individual and for society.

They who visit London are impressed by the profound reverence with which millions of people observe Armistice Day, crowding into Whitehall, overflowing into Trafalgar Square, and uniting their voices in the great hymn—"O God, our help in ages past." No less remarkable is the spectacle of enormous crowds at a football game attended by the King and Queen, who, with a band of the Guards, join the people in singing a hymn like "Abide with me" in order to pass the time. It was the Bible of Wyclif that evoked the spirit of Lollardry which swept over the England of the Middle Ages and inspired the songs of the people. It is the Bible that in the twentieth century, with its dangers and difficulties, fills the land with music.

BOOK REVIEWS

FOUNDED UPON THE ROCK: By Bede Frost. The Macmillan Company, New York City. Pp. 207. Price, $1.75.

This book is a good introduction to the Sermon on the Mount, as the author himself declares that "this book is not an exposition but a mere intorduction." He points out the underlying and often overlooked principles in the Sermon. He does not, however, make the Sermon on the Mount the chief or the whole part of the Christian religion. The treatment of the subject is of special interest to the clergy and to those who teach religion generally. The many quotations from other parts of the Bible and literature make the book a source of teaching material for lessons and sermons, to be classed with the best. S.

THE SCOFIELD REFERENCE BIBLE: Edited by the Rev. C. I. Scofield, D. D. Published by The Oxford Press. Price, $1.25.

This Bible is composed of eight special features that make it particularly helpful to Bible students and teachers:

1. Chain references of great Bible doctrines.
2. Summaries of great Bible Truths.
3. Synopsis to each book of the Bible.
4. Prophecies harmonized.
5. Apparent contradictions reconciled.
6. Revised marginal references.
7. Bible types explained.
8. The greater covenants analyzed.

In other words it is a Bible and a commentary combined and its unusually low price places it in reach of any who want it. L. L. C.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mrs. W. Shelley Humphreys

Diocesan Supply Department Describes Plan of Work

The seasonable article which follows was written for this page by one whose experience in a large diocese has made her familiar with this type of work. The writer is Miss Elsie C. Hutton, Vice-President in Charge of Supplies of the Diocese of New York.

There is no closer and more intimate way of learning of the struggles and aims and achievements of our missionaries in the field, except of course traveling among them, than through the supply work of the Woman's Auxiliary. From Liberia to the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, Panama Canal, and Mexico; across our own continent from the mountains of Virginia, the Carolinas, and Tennessee, to the Indians in the West as far as California, and the isolated white people on the deserts; half across the world from Honolulu to the Philippines, Japan, and China; to all these places go our medicines, blankets, warm underwear, and the work of our fingers, straight to our brothers and sisters in these lands.

Everything is exactly what is needed according to lists sent us by missionaries and institutions of the mission field. Is not this an inspiring and encouraging thought? This is the gift that only women can make; no men can sew or knit or make surgical dressings; so it should be our ideal to show our belief in Christian teachings, in this, our peculiar line, to the last dressing or compress.

In the Diocese of New York where the writer works, stress is laid on reading to sewers the stories of the missions, hospitals, and mission schools that are sent to each parish with its allotment. Even when churches awaken to the meaning of the budget and pay in full and missionaries will not need personal boxes, we hope work for mission institutions will continue, for there is more interest in people for whom we work than in cold, financial words such as budget and quota.

Value of Supplies.

Last year the value of the supply work for missions outside the diocese, done by the Diocese of New York, was $31,997.27; second-hand clothing sent to the same, $4,956.88. The social service sewing for diocesan institutions amounted to $4,012.91. Of course the actual money spent on these supplies is only about 50 per cent of the total value, because the work put into these garments is half of their value. (This information is for those who fear too much goes to this authorized special, from money that should go to the budget!) We do not mean to boast about this work, as New York is the richest diocese and should do a large proportion of the allotments, but as it is all volunteer work, no salaried people being relied on, we do think it shows quite an appreciation of the love and interest our branches show for their representatives in the field.

Conducting the Department.

We have often been asked how we conduct the department. We begin by sending out all the allotments to the parishes at once, in the autumn, for personal and gift boxes and institutional work. We know by past experiences about how much buying, sewing, knitting, and surgical dressings each parish does. We do not ask them how much they will do, but we tell them how much we expect and hope they will do! In this way the parish, in planning its budget and work for the winter, knows just what is expected, and can arrange accordingly.

Dispensary and Hospital Supplies.

Toward the end of Lent we send an appeal to each parish for dispensary and hospital supplies. This work is specially liked by our branches, and many make the donation toward it a definite item in the Auxiliary budget. Many mission people live in outlying places having no doctors nearer than forty or fifty miles. When they have had some accident, they are brought to the missionary, who cares for them with our bandages and gauze. When the people have some infectious disease, sometimes lying on a pile of straw in a corner of a hovel among the well members of the family, the missionary, being the only one to attend them, carries the disinfectants, sheets, medicines, and ointments with her. Surely these are as powerful emblems of loving Christian fellowship as anything one could think of, and our Auxiliaries are realizing this.

Cutting and Buying.

In the cutting room all the garments to be made by the parishes are cut by the dozen, by machine, at the cost of the material at wholesale price. Last year, with only about twelve people working, 11,000 garments were cut and shipped.

Orders for garments to be bought are sent by the parish to the supply treasurer who files them and then sends them to the wholesale buyer. The buyer, when she has enough orders, goes shopping, and in buying such large quantities is able to get great reductions as well as the wholesale discount, this all amounting to nearly half the retail price.

The treasurer then bills each parish for its garments. She notifies the institution which parish has sent each particular garment, so that letters of thanks are received by the branches.

Altar Department.

The altar department takes care of any appeals for cassocks, surplices, altar linens, and stoles, second-hand and new, which come to National Headquarters from missionaries. Last year articles valued at $519 were sent to missionaries by this department.

PARTICIPATION IN WAR.

This leaflet containing a brief statement about peace by a bishop, a priest, a layman and a woman, namely, Bishop Hobson, the Rev. Dr. Frank Gavin, President Kenneth C. M. Sills, and Miss Elizabeth Matthews, has been issued by the Woman's Auxiliary executive board for use in connection with the Quiet Day for Prayer on November 11. Copies have been sent to every diocese and missionary district where the Quiet Day leaflet has been ordered, but there are no additional copies of the peace leaflet at Church Missions House.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

John Wesley

A Pageant of the Beginnings of the Methodist Movement.

Leader: A foreigner visiting our country is much impressed by the number of Methodists here. But though they are everywhere and we consider we know them well, there are many things about the start of the Methodist Church that are not well known. For instance, that its founder, John Wesley, was a clergyman of the English (or Episcopal) Church, and that he never left it or wanted his followers to leave it. Also that the Methodist movement started as a society inside the Episcopal Church. Our program this evening tells the story.

The first scene is within the vine-clad walls of Oxford University. It is in the room of John Wesley in 1730. The characters are John and his brother, Charles Wesley, their father, Samuel, and their friend, George Whitefield. It is a meeting of a society they had; they are seated.

Scene I.

Samuel: It is a great privilege to be with you, my sons, and to hear of this Society of yours. What is it that they call it?

Charles: They call us by a number of names, "Bible Moths," because they say we read the Bible so much. Then they call us the "Holy Club," because we believe in going to the Holy Communion so often. But they do not do it as a title of respect. Rather, they laugh at us. Strange to say, it was this very ridicule that won us our friend, George Whitefield. Tell him about it, George.

George: There is really not much to tell. I had for some time heard of you all by the name of Methodists. That, sir, is a name that we are called with a sneer, because we like to use our Prayer Book so much in our Prayers, doing everything by method in the Prayer Book way. One day I saw a group coming from St. Mary's Church, where they had been attending the Holy Communion. Everyone was laughing at them so much, I asked who it was, and when I heard it was the "Bible Moths," I immediately joined the group and have been a member ever since.

John: George does not tell you that he had to push his way through the jeering crowd to join us, but he did. But, Father, you said you wanted us to tell you of our work. There are about twenty of us. We meet every day for prayer, and each Sunday partake of the Holy Communion together. We also have four objectives and divide ourselves into four groups. At one time one group visits the jails for a while; one group goes to the schools to bear our witness there; another group goes to the poor house and teaches the people there; and another group visits the homes of the poor to talk to them about God. We also keep the feasts of the Church and do all we can to bring ourselves and others to Christ. But the thought has come to me several times recently that possibly this is too easy a life, and that God has called me personally to go as a missionary to the Indians in the far-off America. What do you think of that, Father?

Samuel: I hardly know what to say, my son. If you feel the call, you know that your mother, Susannah, and I will bid you Godspeed.

Leader: We see that John was a very loyal Christian and Churchman at this early age. A few years later he did go as a missionary to the Indians in Georgia. But he returned after a short time. On his way back he met some Christians who called themselves Moravians. They quickened his zeal. On his return to London he attended the services of the Moravians there and, in 1739, experienced what he called his "conversion", whicih he describes as follows: "I felt my heart strangely warmed. I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for salvation and . . . that He had taken away my sins." He got in touch with his Methodist friends and began preaching with a great deal of zeal everywhere. Whitefield began preaching out of doors, and John Wesley soon followed. His brother, Charles, wrote the hymns for the movement. In 1741, he felt called upon to appoint lay preachers. How he came to do so is told in the next scene. The new character in it is his brother-in-law, Mr. Hall. Wesley's words were actually used by him on another occasion. They are seated in his home.

Scene II.

Mr. Hall: So, my brothers, you see that the Bishops are not upholding you and are forbidding you to hold your services in the Churches. What, then, are we to do? Not only do the Bishops not want you in the Churches, but in many of the Episcopal Churches the clergy are preaching against the Methodist movement. So I advise that we withdraw from the Episcopal Church.

John: I must disagree with you there. "It would not be right for us to administer either Baptism or the Lord's Supper unless we had a commission so to do from those Bishops whom we apprehend to be in a succession from the Apostles." And if we seceded we would have no such ministry.

Charles: But a few years ago you set aside a number of lay preachers with prayer.

John: Yes, we did. But do you remember how we did this? First, we found that in many places where we founded Methodist groups, we did not have the ministers in our favor, even though our Methodist meetings were held at a time the regular Church services were not being held.

Whitefield: And the ministers did not let us preach from their pulpits. So we had to have our services in private homes or in specially built chapels.

John: Yes, and we had to have a president who would collect the money from the group to help the poor. Then it was found necessary to send these group leaders to the homes of some of the Methodists who were absent from the meetings, or the money would not be collected. Some of the visits disclosed the fact that some of the Methodists were not living as they should, so that the group leaders were given the power to put them out of the group. Next Prayer and Preaching were added to their duties, which shows how the Methodist Preachers came into being.

Charles: Yes, the Methodists are to help the Church of England, not to hurt it.

John: If ever Methodism leaves the Episcopal Church, it is doomed. But come, we must hurry, as we all have much to do. (They go out.)

Leader: Years passed. Persecution as well as ridicule now came to hamper the Methodists. But they were not to be stopped. John Wesley had said, "The World is my Parish," and his actions upheld his words. He traveled unceasingly on horseback with his baggage in saddlebags. Seldom a day went by that he did not preach at least three times. In addition he found time to found a school for boys and to write a number of books. Under the opposition the Methodists began building chapels in which to hold their services in places where the clergy were not in sympathy with them. In one of these chapels in 1760, John and Charles were arrested for holding a service outside an Episcopal Church without taking out a license as a Dissenting Body. Though protesting that they were good Episcopalians, they were thus forced to take out a license as a Dissenting Body. The date of this first arrest was 1760. It was not, however until 1772, four years before the Declaration of Independence, that a license was taken out for all the Methodist chapels. We now skip to 1788. A few days after the scene Charles died, a few years later John died. The third character is the rector of St. Marylebone (pronounced Mae-lee-bone). In all these scenes, though the words are imaginary in part, they are true to sentiments expressed by the brothers on these occasions. Charles is lying on his bed, the others are standing.

Scene III.

Charles (to the Rector): I have sent for you, sir, to say that "I have lived and I die in the communion of the Church of England, and I will be buried in the yard of my Parish Church," of which you are Rector. Our Methodist cemetery in the City Road is unconsecrated and of that I disapprove, so that I will not be buried there.

Rector: I will see that your wishes are complied with.

Charles: I greatly thank you. And now, John, my brother, I want to beg that you will keep your authority while you live over the Methodist movement, and after your death let it pass to those most worthy of it. You cannot settle the succession. As you know, I did not approve of your setting aside Coke and Asbury as superintendents for America. They were sure to be called Bishops over there, and no one can be a Bishop unless he has been made a Bishop by at least three other Bishops who trace their succession from the Apostles. You, my brother, are not a Bishop, only a priest, so that your ordination of them can only be Presbyterian ordination.

John: Perhaps if you had kept close to me I might have done better. But I felt that Methodism in America had grown so that it must have someone to oversee it ,so I thus set aside Coke and Asbury to do this work as "superintendents."

Charles: I have often warned you and others that some day "wolves would enter and rend the flock," and those who call themselves priests and Bishops who have not been Episcopally ordained are the men. You know that I have often "solemnly warned the people not to receive the Sacraments from any not Episcopally ordained." There are many Evangelicals, or Methodists, who will remain true to Mother Church, but I fear that when we die most will split away and make Methodism a mere sect that fights Mother Church.

John: I hope that this will not happen. But I, too, fear it. You remember that in 1763 I wrote to our preachers, "Are we not runaways, by little and little tending to a separation from the Church? Oh, remove every tendency thereto. Let all our preachers go to Church. Let all the people go constantly to Church. Receive the Sacrament at every opportunity. Warn the people against calling our Society a Church, or the preachers ministers." Again, you remember, I put the question to those who would join our Society, "Do you constantly attend the Church and Sacraments?" God has surely raised us up for the Church chiefly that a little leaven may leaven the whole lump.

Charles: You, my brother and I are in the old ship. The great evil I have dread for nearly fifty years is a schism. But I grow weary and I will ask our Rector to lead us in prayer, and then that you leave me to sleep a bit.

Rector: "Lighten our darkness," etc. (P. B., p. 31.) (They go out.)

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

MEETING OF THE HOUSE OF BISHOPS.

From all parts of the United States and from several foreign countries, Bishops of the Episcopal Church are en route for Houston, Texas, where in the Palmer Memorial Parish House they will gather for the annual meeting of the House of Bishops, called by the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop of Rhode Island, for November 5, 6 and 7.

The House of Bishops consists of 124 members with vote. These are bishops having jurisdiction in dioceses and missionary districts, and coadjutors who are assistant bishops with the right of succession; and sixteen bishops without vote who are suffragans, assistant bishops without right of succession. It is expected that the House will assemble in Houston with about seventy-five voting members present, among them the Bishop of Alaska, the Rt. Rev. Peter Trimble Rowe, D. D., veteran of forty years of missionary pioneering in the frozen North; the Bishop of Cuba, the Rt. Rev. Hiram R. Hulse, D. D., for twenty years in charge of that Caribbean field, the last year suffering the horrors of shipwreck and fire in the Morro Castle disaster; the Rt. Rev. Harry R. Carson, D. D., whose jurisdiction includes Haiti and the Dominican Republic; and the Rt. Rev. Charles B. Colmore, D. D., who has for twenty-two years built the Church among the varied peoples of Puerto Rico, administering his work alone now, as his Suffragan, the Rt. Rev. Manuel Ferrando, died last December, after the 1934 meeting of the House of Bishops.

The agenda of the House includes an exceptional number of problems affecting the missionary work of the Church at home and abroad. Rarely have so many vacancies by death and resignation awaited the action of the House. No resignation is final until it receives the affirmative action of the House of Bishops. Here the responsibility of the House ceases in the case of diocesan bishops. Resignations of bishops from missionary jurisdictions, however, require the election of successors, since the missionary episcopate is created directly by action of the House.

Four Diocesan and Two Missionary Bishops Have Resigned.

Resignations include four from dioceses and two from missionary districts. In the former group are the Rt. Rev. Wilson Reiff Stearly, D. D., Bishop of Newark; the Rt. Rev. Charles Edward Woodcock, D. D., Bishop of Kentucky; the Rt. Rev. Albion W. Knight, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of New Jersey, and the Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., Bishop of Central New York. Resignations have been received also from the Rt. Rev. John McKim, D. D., Bishop of North Tokyo in Japan, and the Rt. Rev. Robert Erskine Campbell, D. D., Bishop of Liberia, in Africa.

Bishop McKim pleads ill health and the disabilities of age after forty-two years of distinguished service in the episcopate. He is numbered among the foremost missionary leaders in the Orient, and as former Presiding Bishop of the Nippon Sei Ko Kwai (the Holy Catholic Church of Japan) an independent daughter of the Anglican Communion in that country, he has received the highest honors possible to a worker in his field. Bishop McKim presented his resignation previously, the last time at a meeting of the House of Bishops in Atlantic City in October, 1934. The House then declined to accept, urging this veteran of missionary activity to continue his official leadership. The Bishop now pleads with renewed insistence that he be relieved of official responsibility. Choice of his successor will be among the most important acts of the coming session of the House of Bishops.

Bishop Campbell, originally a member of the Order of the Holy Cross, and a volunteer in the Liberia field, was elected Bishop ten years ago and through that period has faced the trying conditions which prevail in a region so near the Equator. Liberia is a field in which the Episcopal Church has been at work for a century, maintaining a considerable establishment in evangelistic, medical and educational work.

Vacancy in Idaho Under Consideration.

A further vacancy in a Missionary District, caused by the translation of the Rt. Rev. Middleton S. Barnwell, D. D., of Idaho, to be Bishop Coadjutor of Georgia, will require consideration and possible action by the House. For a number of years suggestions have been made that there be a realignment of some far Western districts in accord with the location of major populations and the development of transportation facilities. The missionary districts of Idaho, Utah, Eastern Oregon and Spokane are involved in such a plan now formally to be presented to the House. It is possible that election of a Bishop for Idaho may be deferred to the meeting of General Convention in the fall of 1937, in the City of Cincinnati.

Seven Vacancies Through Death.

The vacancies through death since the last meeting a year ago, include in addition to Bishop Ferrando, the Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent of Southern Ohio, at the time of his death the oldest bishop of the Church; the Rt. Rev. Samuel Babcock Booth of Vermont; the Rt. Rev. Ralph E. Urban, Suffragan of New Jersey; the Rt. Rev. Walter T. Sumner of Oregon; the Rt. Rev. Edward Fawcett of Quincy, and the Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor of Tennessee, at one time President of the National Council of the Church, who died about a month ago.

Prominent in his leadership of the House of Bishops is the Presiding Bishop, native Pennsylvanian, but with a typical New England personality through his ancestry and his long residence in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island. He was elected Presiding Bishop on March 26, 1930, following the death of the late Charles Palmerston Anderson of Chicago, to serve until the General Convention of 1931, and by that body, meeting in Denver, Bishop Perry was elected for the full term of six years, the term expiring in 1937.

The Host.

The host of the House at this meeting, the Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, D. D., is Bishop of the Diocese of Texas, whose see city is Houston, and is of the younger generation of bishops, being born in 1883, trained for the bar, but turning to the Church, was ordained in 1908, and consecrated to the episcopate in 1918. His first service as bishop was Coadjutor to the famous "Texas George," the Rt. Rev. George Herbert Kinsolving, upon whose death in 1928 Bishop Quin succeeded to full diocesan responsibility. Bishop Quin is youthful in appearance, tremendously energetic and with a special interest in and ability for, work with young people.

Next Year.

The host of the House next year is likely to be the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of North Carolina, who will tender an invitation for the 1936 meeting to come to Winston-Salem, a city in his diocese.

The oldest of the Bishops of the Church in years of episcopal service, Bishop Graves of Shanghai, China, and Bishop McKim of Tokyo, Japan, will be unable to attend this meeting of the House, but the "Baby Bishop," the youngest with jurisdiction in the United States, the Rt. Rev. Robert Emmet Gribbin, D. D., of Western North Carolina, consecrated in 1934, will be present.

Since the last meeting of the House there has been but one consecration of a new bishop, the Rt. Rev. John W. Nichols having been made suffragar of the Missionary District of Shanghai, China, in November, 1934.

"WAR IS THE MOST HATED THING IN THE WORLD."

In a passionate appeal for world peace General Chang Chih-kiang, one of the guests of honor at a luncheon in New York City on October 15, declared war to be the most hated thing in the world. With impressive eloquence this distinguished Christian general pleaded for the extension of the Gospel of Christ as the one unifying factor binding nations together in peaceful relationships.

General Chang is a devoted student of the Bible and has from his own resources made large purchases of Scriptures for distribution to his troops. As a generous supporter of the Christian movement and a fervent Christian, he has been one of those enthusiastic evangelists who holds a government position without in the least degree compromising his Christian position. He is making a tour of the United States in his official capacity as chairman of the National Calisthenics Association of China, but with a deep interest in the Christian Church.

The luncheon at which General Chang spoke was given by the American Bible Society in honor of him and Dr. Cheng Ching-yi, both of whom are honorary life members of the Bible Society, the only two Chinese who have been so designated by the Society's Board of Managers.

Dr. Cheng in an address following that of General Chang declared that his father had been a devout Buddhist and would have nothing to do with Christian people until he received a copy of St. Mark. The reading of this gospel portion, particularly the crucifixion of Christ, so touched his heart that from that time on, for twenty-five years, he devoted his life to the preaching of the Gospel.

Dr. Cheng paid a high tribute to the work of the Bible Societies in China in their ministry through the printed page, as a unifying factor among the many and various Christian Chinese bodies, and in the advancement of Chinese culture. Dr. Cheng, one of the foremost leaders of the Christian movement in China, and general secretary of the General Assembly of the Church of Christ in China, has been in this country attending the meeting of the Committee of the International Missionary Council.

BISHOP LLOYD'S RESIGNATION NOT ACCEPTED.

At the Conference of the Clergy of the Diocese of New York, at Lake Mahopac, on October 16, Bishop Manning made the following statement:

"Bishop Lloyd wants you to know, and I also want you to know, of a conversation which I had wtih him a few days ago.

Bishop Lloyd came to see me to place in my hands his resignation as Suffragan Bishop of this diocese. The Bishop did this entirely against his own feeling and desire and solely with the thought that it might be his duty now to take this action. After talking the matter over with Bishop Lloyd who is beloved by everyone of us, I told him that I declined even to consider his resignation and that he and Bishop Gilbert and I would continue to carry on the work of the diocese together. I may add that Bishop Lloyd gladly assented to this action and that Bishop Gilbert is in complete sympathy with it."

The above statement was received with acclamation and a resolution was adopted unanimously by the clergy expressing their full accord with Bishop Manning's action and asking him to convey their love to Bishop Lloyd and their regret that he could not be present at the Conference.

THE PRESIDING BISHOP WILL MAKE NUMEROUS VISITATIONS WHILE IN THE SOUTHWEST.

Seizing the opportunity offered by the meeting of the House of Bishops in Houston, Texas, the Presiding Bishop will make a considerable visitation among the dioceses and missionary districts of the Southwest. The itinerary will begin at Chattanooga, when Bishop Perry on the way to Houston will be the preacher in St. Paul's Curch, that city, on the morning of November 3, and meet again friends made on earlier visits. From Chattanooga, Bishop Perry will go directly to Houston and preside over the sessions of the House on November 5, 6 and 7. In that interval he and Mrs. Perry will be guests of the Churchmen of Galveston, again renewing gracious contacts made upon the occasion of an earlier visit. Bishop Perry will participate in notable services at Dallas as the guest of Bishop Moore on Sunday, November 10, and on Armistice Day will deliver an address as part of the celebration at Amarillo, Texas, at the invitation of Bishop Seaman. Thence Bishop Perry will go to Albuquerque as the guest of Bishop Howden, November 13, 14 and 15, and while bound Westward to the coast from New Mexico, will stop at Phoenix, Arizona, as an entirely personal tribute to Bishop Mitchell whose recent bereavement in the death of Mrs. Mitchell quickens love and sympathy throughout his Churchwide acquaintance.

Bishop Perry will begin his visitation in California at Fresno and participate in services arranged under the direction of Bishop Sanford of the Diocese of San Joaquin. Special services will be held at Fresno on Sunday, November 24, in the midst of a program of visitations.

Bishop Perry will conclude his California visit at Los Angeles, where he will participate in the notable ceremonies which will mark the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the diocese, the Presiding Bishop and Mrs. Perry being the guests of Bishop Stevens. From Los Angeles, Bishop Perry will go directly to Washington where, on Sunday, December 8, he will great the Archbishop of York and participate in notable events arranged under the direction of Bishop Freeman and centering in Washington Cathedral, where the Archbishop will be preacher on that Sunday morning. From Washington the Presiding Bishop will return to New York and in addition to participating in many services of recognition of the Archbishop of York, will preside over the sessions of the National Council to be held December 10, 11 and 12.

This will mark the second considerable tour by Bishop Perry this year, the first centering in the dioceses in the State of Wisconsin and signalizing the Kemper Centenary. Both visitations are in keeping with the Presiding Bishop's desire to greet the whole Church face to face.

WOMEN OF THE CHURCH MOBILIZING TO EXTEND LITERATURE AND EFFECTS OF FORWARD MOVEMENT INTO PARISHES.

Women of the Church are mobilizing to aid in extending the work of the Forward Movement into every parish until it reaches every individual.

Action was initiated toward this purpose at the recent meeting in Cincinnati of women associates of the Forward Movement Commission and the Commission's executive committee.

Mrs. Fred Outland of Washington, North Carolina, is chairman of the newly-formed Forward Movement Committee on Women's Work. The other women associates are members of the committee.

Mrs. Outland and her committee are perfecting a national organization, extending into every diocese and parish. Existing organizations are being utilized in this new work.

Miss Elizabeth Matthews of Glendale, Ohio, has been recommended to the Commission by the executive committee for appointment as a woman associate. Miss Matthews has been chairman of the last three triennial meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary, is a member of the National Council, and is one of the leading Churchwomen of the United States.

Women present at the conference were Mrs. Outland, Miss Matthews, Mrs. Edward Ingersoll of Philadelphia, Mrs. Charles P. Deems of Minneapolis, Mrs. Henry S. Burr of Kansas City, Mo., Miss Frances Bussey of Milwaukee, and Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce of New York City.

All members of the executive committee were present. They were: Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio, chairman; Bishop Maxon of Tennessee, the Rev. Dr. Karl Morgan Block of St. Louis, and Clifford P. Morehouse of Milwaukee. The Rev. Dr. A. M. Sherman and the Rev. Smythe H. Lindsay of the Forward Movement Commission staff also attended the conference.

Other subjects discussed beside closer cooperation between the women and the Forward Movement Commission were the revival of religion in the home; wider use of the Commission's Bible Reading and meditation manual, "Forward—day by day"; adult education; youth program; programs for Lenten and Easter-Whitsunday seasons; and the availability of women as speakers and leaders of Forward Movement conferences for women.

Two courses on Prayer and a course on Religion in the Home are being prepared as a result of the recommendations. And a course of Christian preparation for young men and women planning to attend college is being considered.

Regional conferences for women are being planned under the direction of Mrs. Outland. She is preparing her program, with the assistance of the other women on the committee, and will announce part of it in the near future.

BISHOP HOBSON PREACHER IN MANY CHURCHES OCTOBER 20 AS RECTORS TUNED IN ON NATIONAL RADIO BROADCAST.

Congregations in many parts of the United States had as their preacher October 20 Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio, chairman of the Forward Movement Commission.

The occasion was his address from Station WKRC over the national radio broadcast, the Church of the Air.

"We appreciate having you as our preacher this morning and herewith ask you for a return engagement," wrote the Rev. Harry J. Stretch of the Church of St. Alban the Martyr, St. Albans, New York, to Bishop Hobson.

"Our late service here on Sundays is at 10 A. M. so we hooked up a radio in church and listened in on the broadcast. We knelt for the prayers. The candles on the altar were lit, and the congregation most attentive. The reception was fine. We 'got' every word you said."

"After the broadcast I proceeded with the Eucharist, omitting the sermon. After the service we were cleaned out of our extra copies of 'Forward—Day by Day,' with enough money left in a mite box nearby to cover the cost of the literature."

A Wisconsin congregation also had the Bishop as preacher, at the same time. The Rev. Donald H. S. Hallock placed a radio in St. James' Church, West Bend.

The entire Church School and Bible classes of St. John's Church, Sharon, Pa., listened in on the broadcast in the church through preparations made by the Rev. F. B. Atkinson, rector.

A portion of a Philadelphia Church School also heard Bishop Hobson. The Rev. Granville Taylor, vicar of the Chapel of the Mediator, arranged reception of the broadcast by about 400 of his young people.

BISHOP CREIGHTON PREACHES MATRICULATION SERMON AT GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, S. T. D., Suffragan Bishop of Long Island, delivered the annual matriculation sermon at tre General Theological Seminary Thursday, October 31.

The founders and benefactors of the seminary were honored Friday morning at the annual All Saints' Day memorial service conducted by the Very Rev. Hughell W. Fosbroke, D. D., the dean, following which the matriculation exercises for the new men were held.

The Rev. Charles N. Shepard, S. T. D., sub-dean, and Mrs. Shepard tendered their annual All Saints' Day reception to the faculty and student body that afternoon.

The Very Rev. Edward L. Henderson, D. D., dean of St. Alban's, England, left the seminary last Thursday, October 31, after a ten days' visit. Dean Henderson conducted two morning meditations and preached at two evening services during his visit.

Ray F. Brown, organist and choirmaster at the General Theological Seminary, has also been appointed to serve in the same capacity at Grace Chapel, New York, of which the Rev. William B. Sperry is vicar.

COUNCIL OF REPRESENTATIVES OF YOUTH ORGANIZATION.

A second meeting has been held in New York of a recently formed group interested in young people, the Council of Representatives of Youth Organizations. CRYO, as they enjoy calling themselves, includes members representing the Girls' Friendly Society, Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Junior Daughters of the King, Young People's Fellowship and others.

The relation of young people to the Forward Movement was uppermost in the recent discussion, in response to a request from Bishop Hobson for suggestions as to what material the Forward Movement could produce which would be of most value to youth. As the Forward Movement plans to give the period from Epiphany to Ash Wednesday to a special emphasis upon youth, the Council felt this to be an admirable opportunity to do an intensive piece of work in awakening parishes to the great opportunities among their young people, and to provide such help as is needed and desired.

Suggested results that might reasonably be expected from this emphasis on youth are:

1. The creation of adequate young people's organizations in a parish.
2. Arousing and using new leadership.
3. A new consecration on the part of present leaders.
4. Awakening leaders to the importance of the need of special training.
5. Some clear public and formal recognition by the Church of its responsibility for young people.
6. The development of a sympathetic attitude on the part of the Church authorities for young people.
7. Corporate Communion in every parish at the end of the period as a dedication service.

DR. FRANKLIN AND MISS MARSTON HAVE SAFE PASSAGE.

Cables received at Church Missions House announced the safe arrival of Dr. Lewis B. Franklin in Shanghai on October 22 and of Miss Margaret I. Marston in Bombay on October 23.

Dr. Franklin went to Shanghai at the urgent request of Bishop Graves and the mission treasurer, Mr. M. P. Walker, to help in adjusting the affairs of St. Luke's and St. Elizabeth's Hospitals and other mission institutions which have funds involved in the Raven group of financial organizations in Shanghai. St. Luke's and St. Elizabeth's Hospitals, both of which are old and long in need of replacement, were purchasing a new site and were to merge and rebuild, having funds collected for the purposes on deposit in the Raven banks, now closed. Dr. Franklin will use the opportunity to have important personal conference with other Bishops in the Orient.

Miss Margaret I. Marston, national educational secretary for the Woman's Auxiliary, is on her way to visit missions in the Orient, going first to India. She had sailed on an Italian liner, going to Naples, Egypt, Palestine and down the Red Sea, but she reports a good voyage. She spends most of November in India and all of December in the Philippines.

Special Service at St. Augustine's Church.

The eleven o'clock service at St. Augustine's Church, Savannah, the Ven. J. Henry Brown, D. D., vicar, went back to sixteen years ago on Sunday, October 20, when the members of the congregation who made up the choir in 1920-22-23-24, sung the service and hymns used on the third Sunday in October, 1922.

Besides the same crucifer, now a young man, nine former members of the choir were in the procession as well as the present crucifer and two servers.

The first processional cross used at St. Augustine's was carried. It is of wood and was made from the old Communion Rail.

At this service Archdeacon Brown initiated the Forward Movement in the congregation, preaching a special sermon on that subject

The Laymen's League made their Corporate Communion at the 6:30 service, and the newly-elected officers of the league were installed.

Miss Mary Frances Ward Set Apart as Deaconess.

On All Saints' Day, at the Church Training and Deaconess House of the diocese, a service for the ordering of a deaconess was held at 4 P. M. The Rt. Rev. Wyatt Brown, Bishop of Harrisburg, set apart Miss Mary Frances Ward, a graduate of the Philadelphia Training School, who, for several years, has been parish assistant at Christ Church, Williamsport, under the Rev. Hiram Bennett, who was recently made dean of the Cathedral of Saint John, Wilmington, Delaware.

Bishop Taitt, as well as Bishop Brown, was at the service, assisted by the Very Rev. Hiram Bennett, the Rev. Edward Jefferys, former Chaplain of the school, and the Rev. B. Jenney Rudderow, the present Chaplain. Miss Ward, in her new capacity of deaconess, is to continue on the staff of Christ Church, Williamsport.

Fall Meeting of Woman's Auxiliary.

At the October diocesan meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, held in St. Paul's Church, Flint, on Monday, October 28, the Rev. Charles C. Jatho, rector of St. John's Church, Royal Oak, made the principal address on "The Church Visible". The meeting opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion, with the Rev. Lane W. Barton, rector of the host parish, as celebrant. At noon a meeting of Altar Guild representatives was held, led by Mrs. Donald C. Stevenson, of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, Diocesan President. At the same hour Mrs. William L. Torrance, of St. Andrew's, Detroit, Educational Chairman, conducted a general discussion on "Parish Problems". Reports from the delegates to the recent Provisional Synod were also received. Mrs. Walter C. Chaffee, of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, is Diocesan President of the Auxiliary.

"Return Courtesy."

The Very Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, D. D., Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, preached at morning and evening services in St. Paul's Church, Toronto, on October 27. The morning service was devoted especially to the observance of Thanksgiving Day in the Dominion, which occurred on October 24. In the evening international good will was stressed. This service is a "return courtesy" for the annual Empire Day service held in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, each May on the Sunday nearest Dominion Day.

Woman's Auxiliary Holds Three-Day Conference.

Upwards of 1,200 women from various parishes participated in the three-day Diocesan Conference held in Philadelphia last week, under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The conference opened with a dinner in the Penn Athletic Club at which former United States Senator George Wharton Pepper presided, and at which the speakers included the Rev. Dr. Arthur Lee Kinsolving, rector of Trinity Church, Boston, and a member of the Forward Movement Commission, and Mrs. Beverly Ober, of Washington, D. C., a member of the National Executive Board of the Auxiliary. Invitations were extended to clergy and laymen of the diocese to attend the opening dinner.

Mrs. John E. Hill, President of the Pennsylvania Branch, presided at the general meeting in Holy Trinity Parish House. "The Importance of Our Educational Policy" and "Latin America" were the subjects discussed under the leadership, respectively, of Mrs. Wright B. Haff, of New York, and Mrs. Frank Bonynge of Philadelphia. Bishop Taitt made a special address at one of the meetings.

Considerable interest was shown in the Round Table Discussion on "American Neutrality Policies," which was conducted by Mrs. Frank Miles Day, of Chestnut Hill.

Commemoration Services.

Three notable events in the history of the Chapel of the Mediator, Philadelphia, in addition to the birth anniversary of the late George C. Thomas, one of Philadelphia's foremost financial leaders for whom the Church is a memorial, were commemorated with special services by the congregation on October 27.

The foundation of the old Mediator, the anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the present Parish House on Sunday, October 27, 1907, and the laying of the cornerstone of the present church building on Sunday, October 29, 1916. Mr. Thomas was one of the founders of the Church of the Holy Apostles, and in addition to his leadership in the advancement of the missionary work of the Episcopal Church throughout this country and in foreign lands was among the leaders in charitable and philanthropic work on behalf of the less privileged among the people of this city.

The Very Rev. Granville Taylor, Vicar of the Mediator, and also Dean of the Convocation of West Philadelphia, preached the anniversary sermon, and the Rt. Rev. William P. Remington, Bishop of Eastern Oregon, a native of this city and formerly a member of the Clergy staff of Holy Apostles Parish, was the special preacher at the night service.

The Rev. C. E. O. Nichols Dies.

The recent death of the Rev. Charles Edward Osgood Nichols in Haverill, Mass., is regretted in Rhode Island, where he served as locum tenens at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Patucket, and later as vicar of St. Mary's Church, Warwick Neck. During his service at St. Mary's, 1932-34, the parish became independent. For many months before he died Mr. Nichols was in ill health, lying desperately sick for months in a Providence Hospital.

Mr. Nichols, who was in his seventy-seventh year, was born in South Hampton, N. H. Graduating from Amherst in 1882, and from the General Theological Seminary in 1889, he was ordained deacon in 1888 and priest the same year. His pastorates comprised parishes at Sammon Falls, N. H., Brunswick, Me., Bridgeton, N. J.; St. Andrew's Church, North Grafton, Mass.; Christ Church, South Barre, Mass.; St. George's Church, Sanford, Me., and St. Mary's Church, West Warwick.

Bishop Binsted of Tokohu Expresses Views on Japan's Attitude: Attends Church Club Dinner.

There will be no world war in the near future so far as the Orient is concerned; Japan will stand beside the United States in her attitude toward the Ethiopian War. She is not likely to re-enter the League of Nations.

These were opinions expressed by the Rt. Rev. Norman Binsted of Tokyo, director of St. Luke's International Medical Centre, in Tokyo, addressing the annual rectors', wardens' and vestrymen's meeting sponsored by the Church Club in Chicago.

Bishop Binstead sees little probability of diplomatic difficulties between Japan and the United States. Further, he declared the Philippine Islands are perfectly safe in their independence so far as the Japanese are concerned.

Bishop Binsted related at the Church Club meeting the part which St. Luke's Hospital is playing in the medical development of Japan. The hospital has introduced public health methods into the Nippon; has been the central factor in the improvement of health conditions in Japan, and has won the confidence of the Japanese.

"St. Luke's Is truly a Christian hospital," said Bishop Binsted. To bear this out, he told of numerous examples of Japanese who have been converted to Christianity as a result of contact with staff members at St. Luke's. He told of the deep impress which the late Dr. Rudolph Teusler made upon the Japanese and of the raising of a substantial sum by the staff of St. Luke's as the start of a million-dollar endowment fund which is shortly to be launched as a memorial to Dr. Teusler. Bishop Binsted hopes to raise $175,000 to complete the building fund required for the finishing of St. Luke's before returning to Japan in January.

Bishop Stewart, the Rev. G. C. Story and Mr. George E. Frazer were other speakers at the dinner meeting, attended by 250 laymen.

Freeport Church Celebrating.

The days when church pledges were paid in kind, lumber and vegetables, etc.—are being recalled at Grace Church, Freeport, in connection with the eighty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the parish. In the early days of the parish, parishioners paid their pledges in kind.

Freeport was a mere trading post on the fringe of things when James Bentley, missionary, came here in 1849 to start the work of the Church on an organized basis. Bishop Philander Chase had visited the post as early as 1842.

The parish celebration started with a meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Northern Deanery, on October 28. Bishop Stewart was the principal speaker. November 3 the Bishop will make his annual visitation for confirmation. November 7 is home-coming day and will be celebrated with a dinner in the evening. The Rev. E. Victor Kennan is rector.

Presbyterian Lashes Speed.

A congregation which filled Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago, on Michigan Avenue, was given somewhat of a shock by Dr. Harrison Ray Anderson, pastor, Wednesday, October 24. At funeral services for Sidney Smith, Chicago Tribune cartoonist, Dr. Anderson, speaking to such notables as the Governor, the publisher of the Tribune, and others prominent in civic, political and newspaper fields, took occasion to lash in no uncertain terms the lack of consideration on the part of his listeners of recklessness in driving and flouting of speed laws.

Mr. Smith, the deceased, was killed instantly while traveling at a high rate of speed, just outside of Chicago early Monday morning. Dr. Anderson called upon the leaders in the congregation to stop the unnecessary speed of automobiles and recklessness in driving. He asserted that "liquor and high-powered cars" do not go together. In this connection, he berated the newspapers for advocating in their editorial columns safe-driving and more stringent traffic laws, while on other pages in the same issue they carry liquor advertising.

To End War: Petition to be Circulated All Over the World.

"We, the People, are determined to end War. War settles no problems. War brings economic disaster, needless suffering and death to us and our children. To meet the present threat of complete world chaos we demand that our Government, having renounced war in the Kellogg-Briand Pact, use existing machinery for peaceful settlement of present conflicts. Secure a world treaty for immediate reduction of arms as a step toward complete World Disarmament. Secure international agreements founded on recognition of world interdependence to end the economic anarchy which breeds war." This is the draft of a petition just released, to secure 50,000,000 signatures all over the world, 12,000,000 being sought in America. Back of it is the Women's International Peace League, assisted by scores of religious, civic and social organizations of many types. The League has made plans to call on churches everywhere to observe November 10 as "Mandate Against War" Sunday, on the eve of Armistice Day. Numerous bishops and clergymen of the Episcopal Church have already signed the petition as a "Mandate Against War."

National Cathedral School Honors Thirty-fifth Birthday.

With a house party for the alumnae over last week-end as the first event in a commemorative program to be completed later in the year, the National Cathedral School on Mount Saint Alban is celebrating its thirty-fifth birthday. The School was founded in 1900 through the generous gift of Mrs. Phoebe Apperson Hearst, of California. Erection of the main building at Woodley Road and Wisconsin Avenue antedates the laying of the foundation stone for the Cathedral by seven years.

More than one hundred graduates returned to the School for the birthday celebration, coming from twenty states, Canada and the District of Columbia. Miss Mabel B. Turner, Principal of the School, received messages from all of the classes in previous years and thirty of them were represented at the reunion. The enrollment this autumn includes twenty-two children of N. C. S. alumnae, many of whom came to Washington to enjoy the celebration with their daughters.

The program began with a "tradition party," which featured episodes and costumes of former days. The returning graduates had an opportunity to see a typical school day program on Saturday morning and athletic contests in the afternoon. A dinner for the alumnae and Cathedral trustees was held Saturday evening in the School dining room. Among the guests were Mrs. James E. Freeman, the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, D. D., Dean of the Cathedral, and Mrs. Bratenahl; the Rev. William L. DeVries, Ph. D., D. D., Canon Precentor of the Cathedral; ;the Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, D. D., LL. D., Warden of the College of Preachers, and Mrs. Rhinelander; Canon Anson Phelps Stokes and Mrs. Stokes, Dr. William C. Rives ,the Honorable Alanson B. Houghton and Mrs. Houghton, Dr. William Holland Wilmer and Mrs. Wilmer, and Mr. and Mrs. Corcoran Thom.

The alumnae attended vesper services in the Cathedral on Saturday afternoon and a celebration of the Holy Communion early Sunday morning.

The officers of the Alumnae Association of the National Cathedral School are: Ruth Channon Nesbit, '22, President; Annie Laurie Carter Thaden, '27, Vice-President; Lucile E. du Pont, '34, Recording Secretary; Nancy H. Saltsman, '32, Corresponding Secretary; Adelaide O'Donnell Orme, '29, Treasurer; and Rosemary Freeman, '34, Editor of the Alumnae Magazine.

Marjorie Stebbins Marshall, '19, is Chairman of the Reunion Committee, which includes: Margaret Moorehouse Graham, '10; Eva Robertson Hinton, '19; Lucia B. Hollerith, '09; Ruth Channon ..esbit, '22; Elizabeth Nolting, '25, and Adelaide O'Donnell Orme, '29.

Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

St. James' Church, Richmond, to Observe Centennial on November 3.

The centennial of St. James' Church, Richmond, will be observed at the eleven o'clock service on Sunday, November 3, by the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., rector for the past seven years, and with the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of the diocese, and other prominent clergymen in attendance. The Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D D, a former rector of the church, and now Bishop of the Diocese of East Carolina, will preach the sermon; and among those present in the chancel will be Canon G Freeland Peter, who went to the Cathedral of the Diocese of Washington, also a former rector of St. James' Church. It is expected that several former assistant pastors of the church will also attend.

There will be a celebration of the Holy Communion in the church, both at 8 A. M. and at the eleven o'clock service. A feature of the centennial observation will be an historical address to be delivered by Murray M. McGuire, senior warden of the church.

St. James' Church, the third oldest Episcopal Church in Richmond, has during the past century had a continuous history of usefulness in the city's religious and civic life and has numbered among its congregation hundreds of men and women conspicuous for their outstanding position in church and social activities.

Traces Start to 1835.

The present church traces its beginning to the year 1835, when the lot at the southwest corner of Fifth and Marshall Streets was purchased and canvassers were named to solicit the funds required for the erection of the church edifice. A chapel erected on the Fifth Street lot was first used on the first Sunday in November, 1837, and the cornerstone of the church was laid on April 2, 1835, and was followed by the consecreation of the church on June 23, 1839, by Bishop Moore.

The Rev. Adam Empie, D. D., who was also a president of the College of William and Mary, was the first rector of St. James' Church, and he was succeeded by the Rev. George C. Cummings, D. D., who was the rector fom 1853 to 1855.

The Rev. Joshua Peterkin, who is recalled with affection by many Richmond people of the older generation, was elected rector in 1854, and served until 1892. It was during Dr. Peterkin's long and notable rectorship that the congregation of St. James' Church contributed to the support of St. Mark's Church, on Clay Street, that had been organzed by Dr. Peterkin, and also to oore Memorial Chapel on Laurel Street, which in time was to become the present-day Grace and Holy Trinity Church. The congregation also helped with the establishment of St. Philips' (colored) Episcopal Church.

Many Assisted Dr. Peterkin.

Dr. Peterkin at some time while rector of St. James' had twelve assistants and one associate rector. These were: the Rev. George W. Peterkin, later Bishop of the Diocese of West Virginia; the Rev. Robert A. Gibson, later Bishop of Virginia; the Rev. James R. Winchester, who became the Bishop of Arkansas; the Rev. Henry A. Wise, the Rev. T. D. Dashiell, later rector of St. Mark's Church; the Rev. Mr. Maury, the Rev. Edmund Wall, the Rev. H. B. Lee, the Rev. D. F. Sprigg, who became the first rector of Moore Memorial; the Rev. George Dame, the Rev. George C. Sutton, the Rev. Preston Nash, and the Rev. John K. Mason. Dr. Mason was the associate rector and succeeded Dr. Peterkin as rector of St. James.

It was from old St. James' Church that Dr. Peterkin on May 13, 1864, conducted the funeral servises of Major-General J. E. B. Stuart, who had been mortally wounded at Yellow Tavern, and whose death occurred in Richmond.

With the passage of the years it was felt that the future growth and usefulness of the church would necessitate its removal to some uptown site, and in 1896, when the Rev. William Meade Clark became the rector, this movement was planned.

The cornerstone of the present church building on West Franklin Street was laid May 7, 1912, Dr. Clark then being rector and Bishop Gibson presiding at the ceremony. During the last year of his life Dr. Clark had as his associate rector, the Rev. Thomas C. Darst, now Bishop of the East Carolina Diocese, and Mr. Darst succeeded to the rectorship at the death of Dr. Clark, April 29, 1914.

Parish House Purchased.

The Rev. G. Freeland Peter, later canon of the Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul in Washington, succeeded Dr. Darst as rector of St. James' Church, and it was during his rectorship that the present parish house was purchased and also the new up-town church consecrated on December 15, 1918.

In 1928 the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., the present rector of St. James,

For the Southern Churchman.

"COME UNTO ME."

Cassie Moncure Lyne.

To the land of dreams goes the soul on its quest;
Like the fledgling of Spring leaves the outgrown nest;
But where does it go in the far stratosphere?
When pulse ceases to beat or ear now to hear.
Where does it go, in the vast realm of space;
As shadows of death steal o'er the loved face?

Where does it go—with the vanishing breath;
Out from the living—in the stillness of death?
On the winged feet of Time . . . with soft sandals shod,
The Soul slips away . . . and goes back to God;
As the sun draws the sparklets out of the sea;
There's a Voice heard calling: "Come unto me!"

The Word of the Lord endureth forever;
The promise is sure: "That He forsakes never."
So, what matters the dust lying under the sod;
When the Soul has ascended back to its God!
Like a bird on the wing, vanishes up in the skies;
Since seed does not blossom until it first dies.

The shadows of night can not darken the Way;
As sunbeams of glory now burst into day;
A day that is perfect . . . from tears and pain free;
For life everlasting means: "Come unto Me!"
Come unto Me . . . the weary and old . . .
"Come unto me" . . . like sheep to the fold.

The same Voice is still calling as in far Galilee,
Across storm of life's billows, "Come unto Me" . . .
There is rest; there is haven; there's joy and peace;
When earth's task is finished . . and the Soul finds release;
So, what does it matter where Heaven may be:
The Redeemer bids welcome: "Come unto Me!"

"Let Him Ask of God."

"If any of you lacketh wisdom," and we all do, for it is one of the most general deficiencies of our human kind. Wisdom is practical knowledge, insight into the laws, and values of life that enables us to live successfully and worthily. It relates especially to the moral and spiritual values of character and conduct and determines our real weight and worth as compared with our general understanding of the world and is vastly more extensive than our wisdom, which is its distilled and crystallized essence, the diamonds that are so rare and precious compared with common stones.

Knowledge advances by leaps and bounds, but wisdom is of slow growth. "Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers." It is really wonderful how slow is the pace of wisdom compared with the astounding speed of science. Our expending knowledge of the earth and the heavens is our constant bewilderment, but are we much wiser by reason of it? Are we any wiser than the Greeks or than the Hebrews whose Wisdom literature, as expressed in the Proverbs of Solomon, are the crystallized gems of their experience? Their science was a pitiful beginning compared with our present splendid results, but do we not still lag far behind their attainments in wisdom?

Has not our wisdom miserably failed us in these recent years? Einstein can construct mathematical equations that embrace and express the universe, but has he solved the problem of the depression? All our economic and political philosophers have wandered around in it, confusing us and contradicting one another with their diverse plans, but they have not agreed and hardly any two of them have agreed on where wisdom lies in such a disordered and discouraged world. Men can unravel the tangled intricacies of the heavens better than they can untie the knotted web of the social order. One of the chief troubles of this world is that our wisdom falls so far behind our knowledge.

Every one of us in our individual problems soon comes to the end of our tether where we cannot see a single step ahead. And so we live in a time when the whole world cries out, Where shall wisdom be found and where is the place of understanding?

However, there is a way out, and if any of you lacketh wisdom, let him ask of God. Of course God is the source of all wisdom as it was His Mind that conceived the universe and His Hand that shaped it and all that our science is now trying to do is to get into His secret and find out in some infinitesimal degree what He has thought and done and is still thinking and doing. Is there any process by which we can get in to contact with His Mind so as to tap His wisdom and let it flood our finite minds? If we can do this it would be like tapping the clouds and letting their vast reservoirs down upon our fields and flooding all our streams.

At this point we must not ask too much, for our small capacities will only receive and stand a very limited increase of wisdom and too much sudden revelation would bewilder and smother us as too much light would blind the eye. The way open to us is through the channel of prayer which is the vital artery that connects us with God and opens our minds so as to let His Spirit flow in upon us in fuller tides.

This may seem a futile suggestion to scientific men who depend on test tubes and telescopes, but one of their own philosophers knew better and told them that humility is the door of entrance into science and that the man of science must sit down before a fact and study it in the spirit of a little child. Prayer quiets the mind into stillness so that it reflects the mind of God and catches the image of His wisdom. The mountain lake mirrors the blue sky and the full-orbed image of the sun only when it is perfectly still, but when it is lashed into fury by a storm or is fretted by the slightest breeze the image is dstroyed. A calm submissive trustful heart can see the light of divine wisdom when a worldly soul will be blind to it. "The pure in heart shall see God," which is as sound psychology as it is true, theology.

It is interesting to observe how carefully the astronomer sees that the lens of his telescope is kept perfectly clean and polished and guarded from any disturbance of the foundation on which his instrument stands or of the atmosphere, for the slightest mote of dust on its lens or change of temperature will blur or distort the image. So carefully should we keep our hearts pure and seek the wisdom of God in sincerity or we shall mar His wisdom with our own distorted mind.

Two things will surely dim and pervert our souls as organs of divine vision. Our pride will thrust our wills between His will and our own, and our selfishness will dim and blind our vision to His wisdom. Humble human hearts are ever the dear Lord's best interpreters and when we ask God in this spirit His promise of wisdom shall not fail.

For God giveth liberally and upbraideth not. At once we are confronted with the problem. How does God give us wisdom liberally? We are probably looking for some easy plan that will pour His wisdom into our minds without any effort on our part, in the same way that many people are now looking for relief. But this is not God's way, and it would not be good for us if it were. This would keep our minds in an infantile condition and dependence and deny us any means and possibility of growth into mastery.

God uses educational means in teaching us and our world in His schoolroom in which we are furnished with books and problems that we must study and master. It is a great school that extends out to the limits of the universe and stars and systems are our problems and all the duties of daily life are our teachers.

Wisdom, however, relates specially to the moral and spiritual values of life, and we shall acquire this wisdom only as we seek it in the spirit of faith and humility and obedience. Obedience is really its chief means for it is only as we do these things that we know them, and whosoever willeth to do them shall know they are of God.

Certainties.

It is good for our faith and our encouragement to underline the sure promises of God and then to rest on them and prove their truth in daily life and practice. Think of some of the certainties of Scripture.

There is the certainty of God's presence in all the vicissitudes of life. When God commanded Moses to lead the children of Israel out of bondage, He strentghened him with this assuring promise, "Certainly I will be with thee." Again and again God gave to His servants and His ancient people the promise of His presence. This promise holds true, for has not our Master said, "Lo, I am with you always." Whatever life may bring there is no cause for fear, for we can ever be sure of God's presence and help, for He hath said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

There is the certainty of God's provision for our daily needs. Our circumstances may change, we may pass from affluence to comparative poverty, but we can be sure that our simple needs will be met. The Apostle Paul proved this when his beloved Philippian converts ministered to his necessities and out of his own experience he could confidently say, "My God shall supply all your needs." If we put the will of God first then we may rest assured that "all other things will be added unto us."

Then there is the certainty of the establishment of God's Kingdom of love, truth and righteousness. We may go with our Christian service undismayed by present world events. What though kingdoms totter and fall. What though conferences prove abortive and end on talk. We can labor on knowing that in spite of failure and disappointment the Kingdom will come. Our faith is not based on governments, conferences, philosophy, science, but on the eternal Word of God. The risen, ascended Christ will come and put an end to present evils. "He shall reign" is the confident note of the New Testament. The man whose hope is based on the Word can be an optimist when everyone else has given way to pessimism and despair.

Finally there is the certainty of heaven. Death is a great certainty, but it's not the final certainty. We have the sure word of Christ, "Because I live ye shall live also." If there were no heaven to gain then said Christ to His perplexed and sorrowing disciples, "I would have told you so." He would not deceive and delude us, we may stake our hope for eternity in His word. When that great Christian scientist, Sir Michael Faraday, was dying some journalists questioned him as to his speculations in the hour of death. "Speculations," he replied with astonishment, "I know nothing about speculations. I'm resting on certainties. I know in whom I have believed and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day."

Religion in the Home.

The unfeigned faith of his grandmother Lois and his mother Eunice lay back of the coming of Timothy into the faith and into the ministry. Family religion is thus brought forward for study in the Bible school lesson from the first chapter of 2 Timothy which will be used next Sunday.

Timothy grew up in a home where God was feared and loved and His revelation held precious, a home of prayer. Investigation will show that nearly all preachers come from homes in which there is such devout faith in God and His work. Praying mothers have been, under God, the largest instrumentality which God has used in bringing the call to the ministry to young preachers among Baptists in the South, and devout, praying fathers the next. For our churches have generally seemed to pay little heed to the Lord's admonition, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into the harvest."

What are we to think of homes n which the father and the mother are church members and professing Christians, and yet in which the Word of God is never read in any sustained way, and the voice of prayer is not heard? By common report the number of such homes today is large and increasing. Through the Bible we are brought in touch with what God has to say to us. Through prayer we make known our requests to God, make confession of our sin and need, and for His blessing and guidance. To neglect both is to cut one's-self off from that which God has designed for feeding the spiritual life.

The most sacred and intimate concerns of life center in the home. The largest opportunities of men and women in relation to the lives of others are there, in the power of parents to influence the tender hearts of their children "while the evil days come not," toward the higher things of faith and love and purity. What are we to think of a so-called Christian home in which this precious opportunity is habitually neglected? Certainly a faith which is so dumb, so devoid of faculties through which it may make itself felt even by the unquestioning love of a little child, is either false or else so infantile and powerless as to be useless for any good to others.

Thank God for praying mothers and grandmothers. Thank God, too, for devout husbands and fathers. Possibly our Baptist emphasis that each individual must come to Christ for himself, an emphasis entirely proper, has unintentionally contributed to the situation in which so many members of the churches seem increasingly to fail to rear their children in the fear and admonitio nof the Lord. But their worldly-centered lives is the main cause of the tragic lack.

There has been growing concern over the evil done to youth in many schools and colleges today through the agnostic or positively antagonistic attitude of teachers toward revealed Christian faith. But a far larger responsibility and opportunity lies in the hands of the parents. If they are so dumb in relation to the Christian life which they profess that not even the holy intimacies of the home result in their teaching their children something about God and faith, and setting before them the example of their own consistent lives, we need not be surprised when schools will add to the tragic evil to which the door was opened by their own inexcusable neglect.—Western Recorder.

Religion's Greatest Enemy.

Many of us consider that words mean nothing and that the tangibles of life are worth more than the imponderables. But words do matter. They stand for ideas. No other vehicle will carry our thoughts. In the fourth century of our era a great battle raged in the churches over the Greek letter "iota" and it was the dividing mark between two diametrically opposite poles of thought. Those who left out the letter from their watchword held to the essential divinity of Jesus Christ while those who put it in called Him similar but not identical with God. We cannot afford to be indifferent to ideas and careless in our words, for to do so is to put ourselves at the mercy of any wind of doctrine that may blow.

It was the fashion in certain circles in the early Roman Empire to adopt an electric religion. When the legions came back from the East and brought with them some new form of worship peple felt no inconsistency in this new faith and combined with older forms. Religion was synthetic and the cultured gentlemen of those days would have been perfectly at home in the atmosphere of our time where it is insisted that all religions are basically one and differ only in words and names. All this is but another way of saying that religion of whatever kind is of little or no consequence.

Time was when the churches of Christ had to fight for their very life. One who adopted the Christian religion ran the risk of the stake or the rack or the cross. Governments set themselves against it and at a later time the forces of skeptical philosophy hurled themselves against the churches. But those days are gone. Now there is no real hostility to the churches, no spirit of persecution is in evidence. Multituues are simply unimpressed, they are spiritually careless, they are out of reach of the churches. The greatest enemy of the churches and religion today is therefore not opposition nor is it false doctrine. Rather it is the indifference which fails to recognize false doctrine or says that doctrine does not matter whether it be true or false. Many of us, to judge by our apathy, do not really care whether our churches lives or dies, whether it grows or shrivels up, whether it pushes upward and onward or is forced to retreat. But the time will come when every one of us will care. A day approaches when human destinies will be passed upon by the Supreme Judge. Then we shall know that a warm, deep, abiding relationship to the Lord Jesus Christ and a whole-hearted devotion to His cause are the most important things in the world.

The Final Solution.

Dr. James I. Vance in his recent book, "Thus Pray Ye," a series of studies in the Lord's Prayer, says that the three chief problems of mankind have been the problem of government, or how to secure; the problem of production, or how to achieve; and the problem of character, or how to grow. "The Lord's Prayer," he continues, "gives the answer to all three." The first problem, that of government, is fulfilled in the coming of God's Kingdom among men, when His will shall be the Kingdom and the power and the glory. The second problem is solved through His providence in giving us each day our daily bread. The last and greatest of the three is fulfilled in the doing of His will on earth as it is done in Heaven. There can be no other final solution to these problems, for none other can be in harmony with His will for His people.

"Believeth All Things."

Love is not defined in the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians; it is exhibited in action in relation to the forces of life. The words quoted in the heading tell us that love is not suspicious, but confident. This does not mean that love is blind or credulous, but that it is its nature to look for the best and not for the worst, as does the cynic, the pessimist and the slanderer. The trusting simplicity of the little child was held up by the Lord for the approval and emulation of His disciples. And in actual experience every Christian knows that (Mark 10:15) "whosoever shall not receive the Kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein." There are some people—even some professing Christians—who seem incapable in believing in disinterested goodness, but our Lord saw hidden possibilities, great capacities, lying buried in the most unpromising. This quality of love enables us to cheer and strengthen men and women of every class, while jealousy, slander, and cynicism tend to crush hope, courage and faith in very soul they touch.

FOR THE CHILDREN

For the Southern Churchman.

A PRAYER.

Rev. J. M. Buckingham.

O God, I pray Thee,
Enlighten my mind with truth—
Inflame my heart with love—
Inspire my will with courage—
Enrich my life with service.
Pardon what I have been—
Sanctify what I am—
Order what I shall yet be:
And Thine, O God,
Shall be the glory,
And mine shall be eternal salvation,
Through Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.

A Little Boy Named Samuel.

Kathleen Hay.

A great many years ago, in the days of the Old Testament, there lived a little boy named Samuel. And this little boy loved the beautiful things around him, just as you and I do; the flowers, birds, butterflies, trees, blue skies, and the stars and moon that shine at night; and he knew, too, that God made all of these lovely things, and Samuel loved God very dearly. I think he would have loved to sing with us, if he could, the words you and I can sing now, "This is my Father's world."

One day, Hannah, little Samuel's mother, who loved and obeyed God, felt that He, who had given her this dear little boy, must have him dedicated to His service, and so one day, she left home with her child, and went a long way, to a place called Shiloh, where the old priest Eli lived, who she felt could teach him how to serve God. There she left Samuel, to help the priest in the house of God. I wonder if you and I, would have been as obedient, kind and helpful, as that child of other days? Yes, and as trusting and loving, too!

The little boy, Samuel, was ready and willing to take his part every day in doing things for God. He helped old Eli, and was happy in serving him around the tabernacle. Once a year Samuel's mother made the long journey to see her dear child (remember they could not make distances short then by automobiles, as we can), and with her she brought a small coat or dress, made so lovingly during the time she was away from him. The dress had long sleeves and was very like the garment worn by the priest. How he must have looked forward to that visit! And each time she found him obedient and happy, for he had early learned to "trust and obey," you see.

The old priest's two sons were very different from little Samuel; they were disobedient to their father and to God, and lived wicked lives, which of course caused sorrow.

One night, as little Samuel lay very quiet in his small bed, perhaps looking out at the bright stars twinkling afar off, and thinking of how God had been so good in giving such a beautiful world to His children, he suddenly heard a Voice call him. Thinking it old Eli, he ran to him at once to give help, but Eli said he had not called and to go back to bed, and Samuel quickly obeyed; but again, and yet again, the Voice called, and at last Eli understood that it was the Lord speaking to the child, and told him to answer: "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth." And when the Voice came again the little boy answered with those words, and then he listened.

I wonder, if you and I listen, when God speaks to us now, through His Word, the Bible? When Samuel got up the next morning, he went around opening the doors, and doing the usual duties that the day brought, but he was not happy that morning, for he had a message for the old priest whom he loved, and he felt sorry to give it, but when Eli called he went immediately, and told just the truths that the Voice had bidden him, that evil must come on the house of Eli because of the disobedience and wickedness of his two sons, and you know that the Voice that spoke the message, was God's Voice!

What do you think Eli answered? "It is the Lord; let Him do what seemeth good." You see, the old priest loved God truly.

In the battle that followed, Eli's two sons were killed, and when he heard that, and that the Ark of God had been taken, he fell over backwards, and soon died; he was an old, old man, then.

How Samuel must have missed him; he had helped and worked with Eli around the house of God so long, and loved and obeyed him, but, then, too, how happy he must have been to think that he had always tried to help the old priest, and had loved and cared for him as they worked together doing God's work.

And so, you and I, should listen, for God speaks to us today, also, and bids us love, obey and trust in Him, always, and so to live happy lives, busy in doing things to make others happy, too, like the little boy, Samuel, who served Him so long ago.

The Runaway Can.

Bert and Charles went slowly down the road. The sun was shining and the wind in the trees and the bushes set every leaf dancing. How any children could walk, instead of running and skipping on such a day, is hard to understand, unless something bad had happened!

That was it exactly. Bert and Charles had earned ten cents the day before by weeding the onion bed. They planned to spend it for peppermint sticks, though Charles could not decide whether he would not have half of his lemon instead. Then they were called to supper, so Bert put the dime into an empty can for safekeeping and set it on the back porch. Charles tried to stop him, for the can had held salmon, but Bert said that the smell wouldn't hurt the dime any, and even if it did, it couldn't hurt the peppermints.

When supper was over they played jackstraws and then it was time to go to bed, so that they never thought of the money again until morning. When they ran out to get it, the porch was quite as they had left it, but the can and the smell were gone, and the dime with them.

That was why Bert and Charles went slowly along the road. They looked straight ahead of them and on both sides, stooping to make sure that the can had not rolled under the bushes. Though if the can had been all that they were after, they might have hunted quite as well with their noses! And how had the can run off with their money? It hadn't any legs, to begin with, and as for liking peppermints, for all that we know, there's never a salmon can but longs to be a candy box instead!

So they hunted under branches and behind stones and clumps of buttercups, for if the dime had hopped out of the can and rolled off by itself, there was no corner too tiny to serve as a hiding-place.

Just as they began to despair of ever finding their money, they heard a queer clink, clink, for all the world like a runaway can on a stony road. Clink, clink! clink! It sounded dreadfully tired.

Bert and Charles parted the hazel bushes, and they saw a little gray kitten with tiger stripes! She was probably pretty, but you couldn't be perfectly sure, till you saw her head, and that was hidden in the very can that Bert and Charles were hunting for. The head had slipped in easily enough, when she wanted the salmon, but now when she wanted her head again, she couldn't get it out. She was rubbing at the can with both little front paws and shaking it so that it rattled on the stones with the clink, clink that Bert and Charles had heard.

In half a minute Charles had caught up the kitten, and Bert worked gently to get the can off without hurting the little prisoner. Such a frightened, forlorn little scrap as she was!

When her head was free, she set to work at once washing the salmon off her face, taking particular care to rub behind her ears. And her little rough tongue scrubbed away so that soon there wasn't anything to be seen but a clean little cat. She was so very tired, though from her struggles with the can, that she cuddled down in Charles' arms, and it was all that she could do to purr her thanks properly before dropping off to sleep.

"Isn't she a peach?" exclaimed Charles. "She's just the sort of a kitten that we've been looking for."

"Plucky little thing!" said Bert. "Think how far she's come with that can on her head, and working with all her might to get it off."

"It's worth losing a whole candy store full of dimes to find her," said Charles.

Bert was looking in the salmon can.

"It's not lost, and she didn't eat it, either," he cried, as he shook out the missing dime.

So Bert and Charles had their peppermint sticks after all. Charles decided that he wouldn't have half lemon this time. The kitten waked up long enough to refuse the share that they offered her. The home-going road was so pleasant that it was hard to believe it the unhappy one they had taken when they started in search of the run-away can.

"Begin."

Everyone of us has tucked away in his or her heart the dream of an ideal life which we would like to be living. We close our eyes and make schedules and budgets and castles in Spain to come back to earth with a murmured, "Oh, well, some day . . ."

I remember reading once a story of a girl who led a rather dowdy life but with the hope that some time things would straighten out. One day she found a battered motto: "The way to begin living the ideal life is to begin." She decided that all of the motto wasn't there, for they had overlooked telling what to begin.

Most of us are like that. We want some big thing to happen, some jolt, some special directions before we put our ideal into practice. So we wait and wait, and perhaps the big thing, the jolt or the directions never come our way.

There are no special directions. There is only one word: "Begin!"

Pick out the little things in your ideal and try to do them. Perhaps you have always wanted a garden. Get one; even if it's only a few seed in a box. Perhaps your ideal is to have a home; try to make the one room you are living in as near the one you see in your dreams as possible. You can do it: a few books, a gay cushion. If you are one of those people who have always wanted to travel "some day" start now. You cannot go to Egypt or Ceylon, but you can get on your feet and walk. There are dozens of things worth seeing surely around what ever place you may live. Hunt them out and visit them. Be traveled in your own town or city. Watch the people you meet, study them. They will prove almost as interesting as the ones that you would meet thousands of miles away.

Others there are who only want little things to make their lives follow a favorite pattern. Some little thing that seems almost foolish when we think of it; a walk around the block before bedtime; dainty initials on our handkerchiefs, a bowl of flowers on our dining table, a diary. When we stop to think we wonder why we never did them. "I was waiting until . . ."

All we need to do is get started. Squeeze every bit of living that we can from our daily lives. Fill the days up to the top. Get the little things going and the big ones will come. And if they don't, at least we can look back and say, "I tried," and there is a heap more comfort in that than in, "It's too late to try now."

The Black Kettle.

Bun and Bretta had walked a long way without seeing any one when they came to the black kettle. It had stopped being winter and begun being spring such a short time before that snow still lay in gray patches at the roots of the trees and some of the leaves underfoot were silvery and glistening with ice. The woods were very quiet, and Bun and Bretta were beginning to be lonesome. So they were glad when they found the black kettle. They walked round it and Bun asked:

"Why is it upside down?"

They both lay down on their stomachs and tried to look under the kettle, but they could see nothing but blackness.

"It's a magic kettle," said Bun.

"What's a magic kettle? Can you sit in it and have it carry you off like the magic carpet in my book?"

"Let's see," Bun cried, and they both pushed as hard as they could, but the kettle would not turn over.

"It isn't magic a bit," Bretta complained. "It only made our hands black."

"It is so magic. I know it is," Bun declared earnestly. "You wish and your wish comes true."

"Do it then."

Bun put his hand on the kettle, stood on one foot, and shut his eyes. "I wish —I wish—I wish I had a lump of sugar. Aunt Anne never lets me have any."

"You shouldn't wish out loud," Bretta said. "Anyway, it didn't come true."

Bun went carefully through his pockets, but there was no lump of sugar in any of them. His face grew long with disappointment when he had lain down again to look under the kettle and found no sugar there either. Then he brightened.

"Magic works slow," he said. "Come on. Beat you to the house."

Two or three days later Uncle Bob called to them as he came from the woodshed. "Want to come along? I've got some work to do in the woods."

They had never seen Uncle Bob work in the woods. He worked with an auger drilling holes in the trees. Bun and Bretta thought this a very strange thing to do. And he made holes in some of the trees, not in others, and always on the south side of each one. They asked him ever so many questions but he would not answer any of them.

"Wait and see," was all he would say.

So they went back to the wagon on which he had driven them into the woods. In it there was a box full of funny little iron things and piles and piles of small deep tin pails without any handles. They set the pails out in rows and played store with them. Then they went back to Uncle Bob. "After I get through drilling a hole you can put your fingers in and pull out the chips," he said.

The chips they pulled out were moist and something like water began to trickle from the holes. After a while Uncle Bob began to drive one of the little iron spouts into each hole with a hammer. They were called spiles, he said, and Bun and Bretta brought them from the wagon for him. Then they brought the little tin pails and hung one on each spile by a hole in its edge.

"Now what?" Bretta asked, and Uncle Bob would only answer, "We'll come out again on Saturday and then you'll see."

On Saturday they saw something very strange. Bun looked into several of the pails he had hung and cried:

"Look, the pails are full of water. But it has not rained. How did they get full of water, Uncle Bob?"

"I know," Bretta exclaimed, jumping up and down. "It isn't rain, it's sap. It comes out of the trees. I heard Aunt Anne talking about it. Taste it, Bun."

Bun touched his tongue cautiously to a drop that was just spilling over the top of one of the pails.

"It tastes like water," he said slowly, "only kind of sweet. I didn't know the trees were full of sweet water."

"Only some of them. Only some of the maples, Aunt Anne said. Oh, look what they're doing! They've got our black kettle."

Uncle Bob and the hired man had hoisted the kettle up and hung it on a pole which rested on two posts set upright in the ground a little way apart.

"Now you children will have plenty of work," Uncle Bob said. "We want all the wood you can find to keep the fire going. See which of you can find the most."

The fire began to crackle and glow. The hired man heaped on wood while Uncle Bob emptied pails of sap into the big barrel that stood ready.

There was a great deal for the children to do now. They brought wood and helped to poke the fire, they emptied half-full sap pails into the big pails that Uncle Bob carried to the farther trees and hung them up again, and every little while they ran to look into the black kettle. For now the sap that had been poured into it grew hotter and hotter and began to boil.

Aunt Anne brought out a basket of lunch with a teakettle and some tin cups.

"Where are you going to get the water to make tea, Aunt Anne?" Bretta asked.

"You'll see, dear," she said. "I'm going to make tea the way the Indians did sometimes when they were boiling sap."

She filled the kettle with cold sap and propped it over the fire. When it boiled she filled the teapot and then poured cups of maple-syrup tea for the men. The children tasted it—hot and delicately sweet—but mostly they drank the sap cold.

"The sap from each tree has its own special taste," Uncle Bob said. "I used to be able to tell which tree a pail of sap came from by tasting it."

It was a fascinating game. Sometimes Uncle Bob was wrong, but very often he was right.

The sap boiled more slowly and thickly now with a deeper, solider sound. In fact it was no longer sap, it was syrup.

"It's dirty, though," Bretta said. "I see sticks and things in it and yellow foam like soapsuds."

"We'll get all that out at the house," said Aunt Anne. "I'll put some milk in it and that will make it clean and clear."

When the syrup was done there was so little of it compared with the full kettle of sap there had been at first that Bun and Bretta were disappointed.

"Where did it go?" Bun asked. "I bet the kettle has a leak in it."

"Oh, no," laughed Aunt Anne. "Did you see that white steam floating off all the time? That was the water boiling away and leaving the sweetness behind. There's plenty of sap to make more. The pails will be full again tomorrow."

They took the syrup home when evening came and Aunt Anne boiled it again on the kitchen stove. Some of it was boiled a very long time and poured into a pan to stand overnight. When Bun came to look at it the next morning he found that it was not brown and clear any longer but yellow and solid.

"Why, it looks like brown sugar," he cried.

"Taste it," Aunt Anne said, giving him a piece broken from the edge.

"It tastes like brown sugar but ever so much better. What is it, Aunt Anne?"

"Sugar. Maple sugar. Here's another piece for you and one for Bretta."

"Sugar," Bun repeated to himself thoughtfully, as he went off with the crunchy yellow pieces to find Bretta. "A lump of sugar. Why, that's what I wished the kettle to send me. It is a magic kettle after all."

When You Can't See.

Some two years ago I wrote about Pilot Mountain, a round-top peak in the Blue Ridge Mountains of North Carolina. I told how it had stood there through the centuries as a guide post for the people many miles about. Indians used it to give them their direction. Standing on the old church ground, near my home, I could see it clearly that day two years ago, although it was forty miles away.

Recently I stood on the same church ground and looked in the same direction in search of Pilot but could not see it. Clouds and mists had shrouded it, and my vision was cut off, for I was hemmed in by clouds. I could not see it, but the mountain was there, and I knew it was there. It had been there for centuries as a pilot to travelers. I could have taken the winding ways that lead to its summit and found it standing stalwart, high above the other hills. The Pilot had not changed. I simply could not see it.

Sometimes I cannot see God. I walk in the dark. Clouds overshadow me, and my Pilot is invisible, but I need not doubt His reality nor His eternal presence. He is always there, and I can take the winding paths that lead upward with absolute assurance that God has not changed. The Biblical writers have called this working by faith. To me it is working in the dark with the assurance that we are on the right way.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. Henry J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Mikell Observes Eighteenth Anniversary.

Bishop H. J. Mikell observed the eighteenth anniversary of his consecration on All Saints' Day by celebrating Holy Communion at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta, in the morning, and attending a choir celebration at the Church of the Incarnation in the evening. This was a home-coming party in honor of the Bishop.

Bishop Mikell delivered the historical address at St. Philip's Church, Charleston, Sunday, October 27, being the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Diocese of South Carolina.

The Rev. Charles Holding, rector of Holy Trinity Church, Decatur, was elected Dean of the tenth annual inter-parochial Leadership Training Normal, which will be held at All Saints' Church, Atlanta, every Wednesday evening in November. Canon W. S. Turner, of the Cathedral and Church of Our Saviour, was elected assistant.

Courses which will be given at this Normal include: "The Bible," by the Rev. John Moore Walker, St. Luke's; "The Prayer Book," by Canon Turner; "Church History," by the Rev. Charles Holding; "Educational Program of the Parish," by W. W. Davison, All Saints; "Personal Religion," by Dr. G. W. Gasque, Church of the Incarnation and "Church's Program," by Mrs. F. Robin Graham, of St. Luke's Church.

Classes will begin November 6, at 7:30 o'clock and close at 9:45, with a fifteen-minute intermission between periods.

Dr. Wood Receives Bequest to Be Used for Traveling Under Will of Miss Jouet.

In the will of the late Miss Belinda Hearn Jouet, a lifelong member of the Church of Saint Luke the Evangelist, Roselle, N. J., the sum of five thousand dollars was left to the rector, the Rev. Clarence S. Wood, D. D., with the request that it be used for traveling. The gift was made in memory of her brother, the late Cavalier Hargrave Jouet, Ph. D., who was a member of the faculty of Columbia University, New York. Dr. Jouet was a lay reader in Saint Luke's Parish for a number of years and devoted a great deal of his time to church work. It is interesting to note in this connection that the late Hon. Charles W. MacQuoid, D. C. L., Mayor of Roselle and senior member of the firm of MacQuoid & Cody, New York, and also a lay reader in the parish, gave the church the sum of fifty thousand dollars shortly before his death in 1930. Miss Jouet was a painter of miniatures of exceptional ability and died in the Jouet's ancestral home, which was richly furnished with works of art. Much of the furniture was bequeathed to the museum in Newark, N. J.

St. Mary's Retreat House Offers Opportunity to Men and Woman for Soul Refreshment.

St. Mary's Retreat House at 407 West Thirty-fourth Street, New York City, operated under the direction of the Community of St. Mary, offers an opportunity both to men and to women to find here in New York a place where they may, for a brief space, withdraw from the world and refresh their souls in communion with their Heavenly Father. A series of nine retreats are to be held during the coming season. One of these, a retreat for professional women, was held from Saturday, October 26, to Monday, October 28, conducted by Dr. Gavin of the General Theological Seminary; and another for women college undergraduates, is to be held from Saturday, November 9, to Monday, November 11, likewise conducted by Dr. Gavin. These retreats begin at five o'clock on Saturday afternoon and end with breakfast on Monday morning. The exceedingly modest fee for either retreat is $3.

Inaugurate Swedish Services at Trinity Chapel.

A great Swedish National Festival service for Swedish Episcopalians in New York City, will be held Sunday evening, November 3, in Trinity Chapel, Trinity Parish. The service will both inaugurate the opening of Swedish services at Trinity Chapel, Trinity Parish, the work recently transferred from St. Bartholomew's, and will also mark the anniversary of the death of the great Swedish hero and defender of the faith, King Gustavus Adolphus.

Bishop Manning will preach the sermon and brief addresses will be made by the Rev. Frederic S. Fleming, D. D., rector of Trinity Parish; the Rev.

George Paull T. Sargent, D. D., rector of St. Bartholomew's; the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton, D. D., vicar of Trinity Chapel, and the Rev. Eric G. Ericson, who continues his eighteen years' work among Swedish people by being transferred from St. Bartholomew's to take charge of the Swedish work at Trinity Chapel.

The service itself will be in the Swedish language. A Swedish choir will lead the congregation in the singing of the old Swedish Chorals.

Invitations have been sent to the Hon. Wollmar F. Bostrom, Swedish Minister at Washngton, and the Hon. Gustaf Weidel, Consul General at New York City.

On succeeding Sundays a regular Swedish service and sermon will be held in Trinity Chapel at 8 o'clock.

Personal Notes

Appointments Accepted.

The Rev. George St. George Tyner, Vicar of St. Paul's, Omaha, Nebraska, has accepted a call to become Assistant to the Very Rev. Dean S. McGinley at Trinity Cathedral, Omaha, beginning November 1.

Mr. John William Zulch, deacon, formerly curate in charge of St. Luke's Church, Germantown, Penn., is to be curate of St. Paul's Church, Savannah, Georgia. His new address is: 2108 Drayton Street, Savannah, Ga.

The Rev. Francis A. Sanborn has joined the clerical staff of St. Peter's Church, Chelsea, New York City.

Ordinations.

Deacon.

Mr. John Fletcher Ward was ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop of Southern Virginia, on Sunday, October 20. The service was held in Christ and St. Luke's, Norfolk. The candidate was presented by the rector, the Rev. Taylor Willis; the ordination sermon was preached by the Rev. Calvert E. Buck of Washington, D. C. The Rev. Mr. Ward has been assigned temporarily by the Bishop to assist the Rev. Norman E. Taylor, diocesan missioner.

Deaths

Rev. Walter R. Dye.

The Rev. Walter R. Dye passed away suddenly in his sleep at his home, Waynesboro, Ga., Monday, October 21, 1935 Funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon at three o'clock in St. Michael's Church and interment was in the family section in Magnolia Cemetery, Augusta, the Rev. Jackson Harris officiating. Mr. Dye was born in Augusta, Ga. He attended Sewanee University, and was ordained a deacon at the Church of the Good Shepherd on The Hill, Augusta. He was ordained to the priesthood at Christ Church, Macon, Ga. Among the churches he served were: Americus, Ga.; St. Paul's, Columbus, Miss.; Holy Faith, Santa Fe, N. M.; Winchester and Mt. Sterling, Kentucky; St. John's, Howard County, Maryland. He retired September 15, 1935. He is survived by his widow and one sister.

The Rev. Charles Elisha Freeman, formerly in charge of St. John's Church, Thibodaux, La., died on October 1, after a long illness. He retired in 1933, removing to Hammond, La. He had been in the ministry forty-nine years.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

Truth without love is false.

The Bible reveals what men could never discover for themselves.

The next task of the Church is to clear the way for a better interpretation of the meaning of the Son of God.

God has placed no limits to the exercise of the intellect He has given, on this side of the grave.

—Bacon.

We cannot control our external circumstances. That is not our problem. Our real problem is to direct the course of events within us.

If God hath made this world so fair,
Where sin and death abound,
How beautiful beyond compare
Will paradise be found.

—Montgomery.

There is really nothing but encouragement in His Word for His workers: not a precept without a corresponding promise; not an allusion to difficulties without ten times as many clear corresponding notes of hope and help.

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

The soul grows into lovely habits as easily as into ugly ones, and the moment a life begins to blossom into beautiful words and deeds, that moment a new standard of conduct is established, and your eager neighbors look to you for a continuous manifestation of the good cheer, the sympathy, the ready wit, the comradeship, or the inspiration you once showed yourself capable of. Bear figs for a season or two, and the world outside of the orchard is very unwilling you should bear thistles.

—Kate Douglas Wiggin.

A Christian is called to service. A servant is one who serves, not one who idles his time away. Christianity is doing, not feeling. Only those are seen in heaven that continually serve.

—E. L. Andrews.

I've found Thy grace so sure
For all I must endure,
That gladness fills my heart.
I know whate'er beset
Thy strength is stronger yet,
Thy joy will fill my heart.

When the question is put to us as to whether Christianity calls upon us to redeem society by redeeming the individual, or to redeem the individual by redeeming society, we say "both." There must be no retreat from the social gospel. There must be no neglect of the gospel for the individual.

—The Christian Leader.

I am confident that we are passing through a great moral and spiritual crisis, which is inevitable, but out of which will come religious ideas which will give to our spiritual life a new realty and significance.

—Dr. Albert Schweitzer.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED
By
REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Spiritualizing the Every-Member Canvass.

Mr. Editor:

"Spiritualizing of the Every-Member Canvass", in your issue of the nineteenth instant, by the rector of St. George's Church, Clarendon, Va., is most noteworthy. It might well be printed in leaflet form for circulation, and he merits a vote of thanks for writing it.

As he so rightly says: "Our giving to be acceptable to the Heavenly Father must be the outward expression of an inward spiritual grace." Unless it is, it will lack the living quality to make it effective in His service and for the promotion of His purposes.

The trouble with most of our efforts and methods is that they seek the outward visible without the inward and spiritual. Hence the result is disappointing. What spiritual grace is stimulated by a dance, a card party, turkey supper and the like?

I have often thought that it would be "a noble experiment" for a parish to abandon all such ways and means, and have faith that by the development of the spiritual life the people would not only have "a mind to work", but the desire to give abundantly, "not grudgingly or of necessity", but cheerfully, as their hearts are stirred by the inrush of spiritual life, and the worth of that life felt and perceived.

That this is possible Mr. Miller has shown in his paper, which is all the more valuable, in that it is written from experience, and not from theory only. He has certainly proved what is "the more excellent way".

Upton H. Gibbs.

The Church Institutions in Kentucky.

Mr. Editor:

In the issue of October 19 there appears a "Letter to the Editor" signed by Mary Craik Morris, of Richmond, a former Kentuckian, wherein she wants to keep the record straight and corrects an alleged statement in the issue of September 28, to the effect that the Church Home, Norton Infirmary and Boys' Orphanage, Louisville, had been built under Bishop Woodcock's ministrations.

I am not able to put my hand on a copy of the issue indicated, but if such an assertion was made the correction is quite timely.

When Bishop Woodcock came to Kentucky the diocese maintained five institutions, the three named above and in addition the Home of the Innocents and the Girls' Orphanage. They are still being maintained. Bishop Woodcock once said he was guided in his acceptance of his election as Bishop by the number of such institutions in the diocese and he never claimed they were founded during the time he was Bishop. But ,and that is the object of this epistle, Mary Craik Morris, might have admitted a new Norton Infirmary was built, a new Boys' Orphanage was built, also a nurses' home for the Norton Infirmary. The Endowment Fund of the diocese was increased from $20,000 to $120,000 during Bishop Woodcock's term. Indeed, the increase in the endowment was almost entirely the result of his individual efforts, and he has labored hard to maintain the five institutions that were here when he came. They are all in splendid financial condition.

MEN CALL IT WAR.

By Ira Charles Swanman,
Rector of Calvary Church, Glenn Springs, South Carolina.

O love of country, sacred flame—
The noblest passion next to love of God!
Yet, how abused by those who hold the rod
Of power, a power that bids the stripling youth
Go forth, full armed, to slay; and kill, forsooth,
Another lad as guileless as himself.

Men call it War, but lust of gain and pelf
At will can cause the bugle's note to sound
With such seductive tones that, gathered round
Its ensign soon, are great and willing throngs
Of boys and men, all bent on righting wrongs.

Poor wretched dupes of Mammon! Yet none dares
To raise his voice and warn against the snares
With which the greedy, grasping god of gold
Deceives, deludes the patriotic soul,
And blinds the eyes to issues real and deep;
Producing, as it were, hypnotic sleep
Wherein men dream of conquest, fame and power.

But, then, alas, there comes the waking hour,
That awful moment when there stands revealed
The sickening truth that battle's gory field
Is but the place where common folk must die
To bolster up the fortunes of the high
And mighty ones who stand behind the thrones
Of kings and rulers. Unmindful of the groans
Of dying men, they watch with hellish glee
The great alembic (tool of alchemy),
Wherein red gold is made from heroes' blood.

O Lord, we pray Thee for a mighty flood
Of light, that we may see the ugly shape,
(Make all regard the sight, let none escape),
The horrible mien, the color true of this
That men call War. And grant the age of bliss
May shortly come, when men shall dwell in peace
And love, and joy, together. Then shall cease
All hatred, bitterness and strife and woe.
Thy Kingdom come to us on earth below,
O Lord, we pray.

The Use of Christian Understanding.

We have always tried not to be political-minded in a little way. We have believed that, according to their lights, the different leaders of the various political parties in our country have been, for the most part, conscientious men and women who want to make of our country that true land of liberty of which we sing.

But politics is something that religious people cannot let alone, for it involves life, and we are interested in life. Consequently issues must be faced whether we are church people or pagans. But we are wondering whether issues are being faced in a Christian way.

To every president of the United States there comes great criticism. That is a healthy sign, for otherwise we would live in an age of tyranny. But we wonder whether or not the criticism, sometimes voiced by supposedly good Christian laymen, is of a Christian nature. We refer primarily to that type of destructive whispering campaign that is constantly carried on by different factions, regardless of who is president, that implies that the chief executive of our nation is being bribed from abroad, or that he is insane.

Recently we heard a woman of good reputation assert that she had it on the authority of an alienist that a great official of the government was insane. Possibly anybody from this particular woman's point of view would be insane who would dare to propose an increase of taxes. We have sympathy with her in her hope that taxes will not be increased too much, for she has great possessions. But we have no sympathy with supposedly educated, intelligent people who make the most exaggerated claims of special information and who pass on rumors that make only for bitterness and unchristian conduct in the end.

If we have criticism, let us make it by all means that are fair and open. Let our pulpits be wide open to a stalwart stand for truth. Let our conversation be temperate but true to ourselves. But every president from Washington on has been subjected to such rumors and exaggerated "facts" and in the end the only thing accomplished has been more hatred and bitterness.

We must, if we are Christian, learn to talk things over calmly. There are great changes in our social order that are almost revolutionary. Let us give credit to leaders for sincerity of purpose, even when we cannot agree with the method being used. It will only be when men and women grow in understanding enough to talk in Christian decency about mutual problems that we will ever come near to a solution. And here the Church and Christians should take the lead in promoting better understanding.

The Women Enter The Forward Movement.

It is delightful to realize that the women have been given a special place in the great Forward Movement of our Church. Ever since Christianity came into the world, it has been a few devout women who have led the way and proved an inspiration to better living. The meeting recently in Cincinnati of the associate women members of the Forward Movement Commission reminds us that this already successful movement will be finer than ever.

Womans' place, we were once reminded, was in the home. While we never cared for the political implications of that phrase, we still feel that in a very real way woman's place is in the home and Church. No home, as a rule, is ever spiritual unless the woman who is the mother of that home is spiritually minded. And we are glad that the women of the Forward Movement Commission are to re-emphasize the place of religion in the home.

In the revolutionary age in which we live, the home in many cases has at best become a place to eat and to sleep. Even our finest church people have expected the Church to furnish all the religious education necessary in a few minutes of Sunday School each week. Grace before meat is a neglected item. Family prayers are, in the majority of our homes, unknown.

But a new spirit is abroad. Man has found to his dismay that he cannot live by bread alone. Women have found that too great a sense of worldliness has robbed them of the spiritual leadership that once was theirs. And the women of the Forward Movement are to call us back to the thought of the place of religion in the real home that is the true basis of our civilized life.

A Misunderstanding.

In an editorial on this page recently, we took the opportunity to congratulate The Morehouse Publishing Company on the opening of a New York store. We mentioned the fact that for many years the firm of Edwin S. Gorham, Inc., had been a popular place with the clergy and laity. Unfortunately, some readers got the idea that we meant Gorham's was no longer in business, and we hasten to clear up such a misunderstanding. Edwin S. Gorham, Inc., is very much in business at 18 West Forty-fifth Street, New York City. The firm is carried on by associates of the late Mr. Gorham and continues to be the popular firm with the clergy and laity that it has been for many years, serving the Church and church people efficiently and well.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

ENGLISH VIEWS ON WAR.

Church of England Newspaper, October 18, 1935.

The Rt. Rev. Hon. George Lansbury, M. P.

"I appeal to all who hear or read what I have to say to understand that war abroad and class war at home, with all its horrors of depressed areas, hunger, privation and destitution in the midst of plenty, are not the acts of God nor the will of His Son. These evils are caused by the wickedness and stupidity of man. I neither explain nor palliate the evil wrought in the world because of the failure of Governments or individuals to follow the law of God, but I am challenging the action of those who, speaking for the Master, sanction preparations for war, and endeavor to show that in using the bestial weapons of war, men are fulfilling the will of God. Expediency may be the curse of people like me who are politicians; of those who earn their bread in the market place. Those who teach us that God is love and that the law of our life is love cannot without becoming themselves apostate teach us that expediency may be a guiding principle of our lives.

I call you to a holy struggle against war, against the sin of Mammon-worship. I ask you to believe our Lord's message as a message of life here and now, and I beg you all to oppose by every means in your power all war, whether it be national or internation; and always remember that war is a bestial, barbarous, unchristian crime which men adopt because they refuse to believe our Lord's promise: 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.'"

The Bishop of Winchester.

"I know there are some who would argue that as war is always an evil, we should, as a nation, disarm and give a splendid example of non-resistance. I wish, indeed, that I could believe that at the present time such a policy would lead to peace. I feel it would neither be morally right nor likely to attain the end for which it was adopted. War is the greatest of physical evils, but injustice is morally a greater evil than war. It may often be right for individuals to submit patiently to injustice and injury inflicted upon themselves, but it does not follow that it is also right for them to permit others to suffer at the hands of lawless men. A man may be fully justified in enduring unresistingly violence directed against his own person, but it is another matter to stand aside and watch others robbed and tortured. If he intervenes, as he is morally bound to do, on behalf of the innocent and weak, he will almost certainly have to use force to rescue the victim from his assailant: and if a nation is compelled for a conclusive reason to intervene in the cause of law and justice it must not only have force at its disposal, but sufficient force to make its action effective."

The Archbishop of Canterbury.

"At the outset we recognize, though it may seem a hard saying, that peace in itself is not an ideal. It is a state which results from the achievement of ideals. Of these foremost are the ideals of a rule of reason, justice and law within and among nations. These are ideals to be pursued for their own sake. In so far as they are realized, peace will follow. They are primary. Peace is secondary and derivative. There is therefore no intrinsic worth in mere peace if it means acquiescence in the violation of justice and the rule of law. Indeed, the pursuit of mere peace may defeat its own object, for assured peace in the State and between States can only be secured by the vindication and the establishment of justice and the rule of law."

God—Man's Greatest Need.

H. G. Wells, in Christian Century Pulpit.

Until man has found God, and has been found by God, he begins at no beginning and works to no end. . . . Nothing in the universe or in man's life falls into place except with God; with God who fights with man and through man against everything that is evil; who loves us all as a great captain loves his men, and stands ready to use us in his immortal adventure against waste, disorder, cruelty, vice, blind force, nonexistence, everything that destroys.

God is the end and the meaning of the universe, the only King. God's Kingdom on earth is not a dream or an uncertain project, but the inevitable destiny of mankind.

Jewish Aid Promised The Churchman.

Christian Century, October 30, 1935.

Although the appeal of the Churchman against the libel judgment of $10,200 secured by Mr. Gabriel L. Hess will not be heard by the supreme court of New York until next month, an important development has entered the case from Jewish religious circles. Dr. Sidney E. Goldstein, chairman of the social justice committee of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, has announced that in case the libel verdict is sustained and the attorney of the Hays organization insists on collecting his pound of flesh, a committee of Jewis leaders will be formed which will raise whatever money is still required to pay the judgment against the Churchman and its editor, Dr. Guy Emery Shipler. "We shall do this," Dr. Goldstein says in his public announcement, "because of our deep respect for the Churchman, which throughout its long history has rendered great service to the religious life of America.'

Cost of Depression in Health.

Information Service of Federal Council of Churches.

Further evidence of the effect of depression on illness is presented ("New York Times," September 15, 1935) by Josephine Roche, Assistant Secretary of the Treasurery in charge of Public Health Service. It counteracts the views expressed in some quarters that "the depression was good for our health." Miss Roche points out that "recent studies indicate a high rate of acute and chronic diseases and serious physical impairments among families on relief rolls." This is substantiated by data collected recently by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration as well as by the Public Health Service. The F. E. R. A. survey "indicated that the portion of persons on relief who had serious physical defects or chronic diseases was three times that in the same occupational class not on relief." Of those reporting no physical impairments or chronic diseases only twelve per cent were on relief. But of those who had some impairment or chronic disease, thirty per cent were on relief. Among the non-relief population the proportion of those having some impairment or chronic disease is highest among unskilled laborers and lowest among the professional, proprietary and clerical classes. Miss Roche insists that "facts such as these reveal not only condition of human suffering and wretchedness, but economic waste, and challenge us to a swift-moving program of conservation of one of our most valued national resources—the health and vitality of our people."

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

The Soul Is The Unit of Spiritual Power

Wonderful discoveries have been made of late years with regard to the atom which has always been regarded as the ultimate particle of matter. Among these discoveries, and one of the most wonderful of them, is this:—"It is claimed that with the isolation of the atom an inexhaustible store of energy would be released. It has been held in this connection that the disruption of the atom would mean the annihilation of the world." It has been suggested that this inexhaustible supply of energy should be tapped and used for the benefit of mankind, and we believe that research work is being done along these lines. To proceed a step further, and ascending from the inanimate to the animate, it has been stated that a single grain of wheat, by the successive plantings of the seeds springing from it, in fifteen years could produce enough grain to supply the harvest fields of the world.

The Possibilities of the Human Soul.

With such vast possibilities inherent in the atom and the grain of wheat, what possibilities may there not be in the soul? There is, for instance, the fact that the soul is immortal and therefore destined to last forever. It is also capable of being brought into union with God, through our Lord, Jesus Christ, and of thus being associated with Him in the carrying out of His eternal purpose. It was necessary that the eternal Son of God should leave heaven and take our nature upon Him and endure the humiliation and suffering of His Death upon the Cross to redeem the souls of men, and we know that this was to Him worth the tremendous cost involved. We remember, too, the words of our Lord, when He referred to the priceless value of the human soul, and that:—"There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." Here we have the value of the individual human soul in the sight of God and the Holy Angels revealed to us.

The Soul's Value to the World.

Turning now to the value of the soul to the world, we remember the words of God's promise to Abraham:—"In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." It would be impossible to estimate the influence which this promise, given to a single individual, in a distant age, has had upon the world, for we all share in the blessing which was grst given to him. We may take another individual instance to show how one single soul may be used by God to influence the world. I refer to St. Paul. His life and letters have been an inspiration and a mine of spiritual wealth to all Christians, from his day to our own, and will continue to be so to the end of time.

The Atom and the Soul.

We greatly wonder at the revelations made to us by men of science with regard to the atom and the inexhaustible energy which could be derived from its isolation. But what are the possibilities of the atom in comparison with the possibilities of the soul, even in this present life? Men of science have opened out to us a new world through their researches into the secrets of Nature. If Christianity is to hold its place, and more than this, to take the lead in human progress, it must be able to reveal even greater wonders than those which modern science has given us. The latter has been busily occupied in converting possibilities into actualities and we Christians must do the same with regard to our religion if we are not to be hopelessly left behind.

The Development of the Soul's Possibilities.

The possibilities of the soul here on earth must be developed, and if this is to be done, it must be by those who have faith in God and a full assurance of our union with Him, through our Lord, Jesus Christ. St. Paul could say:—"Whereunto I also labour, striving according to His working which worketh in me mightily." Men may talk of the inexhaustible energy to be found in the atom, and we are willing to accept the accuracy of their estimate. Why then, cannot we believe in that power of Christ which worked in and through the spiritual nature of St. Paul, in an inexhaustible power, and that He can use it through us for the benefit of mankind, as He did through His servant, St. Paul? The possibilities of the soul are incalculable when the Spirit of Christ sets it in motion. These possibilities must be fully realized and then Christianity will become as mighty a power in our day as it was in the time of the aposotles.

The Thousandfold Prayer asks God to make us a thousandfold more useful to Him, so that His Power and blessing may flow through us to multitudes of others who are in need. This prayer represents a venture of faith which we believe will help to release more and more of the inexhaustible spiritual power inherent in the soul of man, in union with God, and thus be a blessing to the world.

The Call to the Church.

O Bride of Church! beloved by Him,
Why are thine eyes of faith so dim?
Dost thou not know His mighty power
Is thine to use this very hour?

The world in awful anguish lies;
And heavenward lifts its pleading eyes;
Body of Christ—His hands, and feet—
Thou must the mighty issue meet

Fulness of Him who filleth all,
Who never heedless hears thy call,
His glorious gifts are thine to share
With all His creatures everywhere.

O Church of God! why does thou deem
His promises an empty dream?
Shake off thine unbelief and be
His angel to humanity.

The Cuban Revolutionary Movement

By A. HUGO BLANKINGSHIP.

Dean of Holy Trinity Cathedral, Havana.

THE CUBAN REVOLUTION, which began August 12, 1933, resulting in the downfall of the Machado regime was much more than a flare up of the Latin American temperament against a disliked individual. It was a climax of a long and widespread dissatisfaction with existing political and economic conditions. The strongest motive for the Revolution was economic, the immediate cause was the usurping of power by Machado.

While the Revolution has been put under control, the Revolutionary Parties are still actively working for the goals, which they consider have only partially been realized. The leaders now in power have become conservative. Batista, the commander of the army, has undoubtedly proven to be the strongest man of the Revolution. Although he was put into power by the extreme left wing, "The Autenticos," he has himself become conservative and is now in disfavor of those who placed him in the command of the army. The present government under Carlos Mendieta considers itself a revolutionary government and it is enforcing most of the laws decreed under the short regime of Dr. Grau San Martin, who is now the leader of the Autenticos.

The inspiration and leaders of the Revolution came from the students and the A. B. C.'s, a secret society made up of many outstanding Cubans. The Autenticos was formed after the movement had gotten well under way and the party is accused of having communistic ideas. It was this group which made the coup d'etat, putting the Cespedes government out of power and putting in its place the rule of "The Committee of Five." It seemed to have been the intention of this group to have a regime similar to the Soviet system, the council rule. They adopted at this time the revolutionary flag; this flag still flies alongside of the national flag. It was soon realized, that it would be impossible for "The Committee of Five" to win popular approval and recognition from foreign governments, therefore the committee was forced to select one of its number as president; they selected Dr. Grau San Martin. This selection met with approval of the army, at first, but Dr. Grau and his followers were also unable to gain recognition of the foreign powers. Due to this, they lost the support of the army, as the army feared the non-recognition would bring intervention by the United States. It became clear that a man had to be found who could win recognition for his government. Finally Dr. Carlos Mendieta was persuaded to take the presidency. He had been a political enemy of Machado, but he did not belong to the more radical group. He was a compromise on the part of all factions, but he did gain the recognition of his government. From the viewpoint of the left wing his election meant the loss of some of the gain which had been made by the Revolution. Since he has been president, the radical element has been silenced and the country has been prepared to hold a constitutional election; this election is scheduled to be held this December. The revolutionary parties claim that the election will not represent the will of the people, but that it will go the way the army wants it to go.

THE REVOLUTIONARY program had three principal objectives, first: The overthrow of Machado and making impossible the return to political power of any of the old-line politicians. Second: The doing away of all foreign control and interference, both political and economical. The slogan for the Revolution has been, "Cuba para los Cubanos"—Cuba for Cubans. Third: The improvement of the status of the working class. Around these three objectives the revolution was planned and executed. The revolt has failed to reach these objectives entirely, it has, however, been partially successful. The failure of complete success keeps the revolutionary parties active and it is the opinion of some observers that another attempt will be made to carry to its final goal the original revolutionary program. The first objective has failed in that the government has not been entirely relieved of the control of the old-line politicians. The coming election will be between the old political parties; the radical parties will not be represented by any candidate, they do not appear strong enough to hope for victory at the polls. The first objective has been successful in that Machado was forced into exile; and it is not likely that he will ever return to power. The second objective has also been but partially successful. It has been successful in that, by persistent demands aided by "The Good Neighbor Policy" of President Roosevelt, the Platt amendment was abrogated. It was this amendment, which gave the United States certain responsibilities, and from the viewpoint of some Cubans, too many privileges. This amendment undoubtedly induced some foreign investments to be made in Cuba, and on the whole it can be said that these investments have proven beneficial. With the repeal of the amendment, investments can no longer look to intervention as a means of protection. This action on the part of the United States begins a new Latin American policy, and it is a wise one, as it relieves our government of responsibilities which were becoming increasingly difficult to fulfill, and it has helped to make our relationship not only with Cuba, but with all Latin America more cordial. Foreign investments in Cuba run no more risk than they do in any other country. The trade treaty made with Cuba this summer, which gives reciprocal duty reductions has also been helpful in establishing goodwill. We must, however, credit the passing of the Platt Amendment as a fruit of the Revolution.

A more direct and drastic method of dealing with the foreigner is the enactment of what is known as the Fifty Per Cent Law. By this law no commercial company in Cuba can have in its employment more than 50 per cent foreign employees; the law goes much further by stating, that no foreigner can be employed, other than the 50 per cent already employed, in Cuba. This makes the law in time a 100 per cent law, as all replacement of employees must be Cuban. There are some exceptions made, but on the whole the law is rigidly enforced and it has already caused the exodus of many foreigners who no longer can make a living in Cuba; the American colony in Havana has been cut about half during the last several years. This law was not the sole cause for this reduction, but it is partly responsible. There is every reason to believe that the exodus of foreigners will continue. The revolutionary parties are not satisfied and they feel that their anti-foreign program has failed; they say that the foreigner still has too much to say in Cuban life, and they would enact more drastic measures to limit his power and influence. Such action would prove to the disadvantage of Cuba, but it is easy to understand this desire when one realizes that most of the major industries and businesses are owned and managed by foreigners. The banks, railroads, power and light company and about 80 per cent of the sugar industry as well as a good part of all retail and wholesale business are in the hands of foreigners. Most of the lucrative positions in these industries are closed to Cubans, so the ambitious Cuban has little to look forward to outside of politics and the professions.

The third objective, the improvement of the status of the worker, has not been fully accomplished, but the conditions of the worker have been improved. The labor wage scale has been increased, and indeed in some cases it was grievously needed, as in some instances a laborer before the Revolution was receiving as low as twenty cents per day. This of course w but little short of slavery and starvation; there is no question but many did suffer the pangs of hunger. Hunger was the basic cause of the Revolution. While one cannot approve of the method of reform, no just person could possibly be blind to the need of a change. The tragedy is that no leader or party offered any practical solution which would have made the Revolution of no point. In addition to wage increase the hours of labor have been regulated and in some industries pensions have been adopted under governmental control. While adjustments must be made to give business a chance to survive, on the whole the worker has been helped and industry has not suffered appreciably.

THE REAL WEAKNESS of the Revolution has been the lack of an adequate educational program and that no leader has been developed who could unify the movement and present it as a definite and simple program. And the movement has had the fault of being too partisan, it has brought the class issue to the front and it has worked with a spirit of revenge lacking a proper balance. But it is true to say that the Revolution has done for the Cuban people what the New Deal has done for the United States; it has stirred Cuba to a social consciousness, which it has never had before this time. Whether this consciousness will result in constructive social action still remains to be seen. The next few years will be fateful ones for Cuba, as they will be for many other parts of the world. The possibilities for advancement are great in Cuba, but the possibilities for retrogression are dangerously imminent.

The Churches, Roman and non-Roman, have taken no official part in the revolutionary movement, the policy of the Churches has been one of hands off. During the greater crisis when civil conflict threatened Cuba, the Churches did plead for calmness and restraint. The Churches cannot claim the partial victories which have been gained. The Revolution has not changed the status of the Churches in Cuba, it has neither hindered nor advanced their welfare. If the more radical government under the leadership of "The Committee of Five" had remained in power it is most likely that some of the Church's activity would have been limited. In general the revolutionary parties have been indifferent to the Church and it is this indifference which is the real problem of the Church in Cuba. The Church is needed in Cuba to help to develop an intelligent citizenship with moral and spiritual stability, it faces a great challenge, a most difficult task, one which demands much courage and faith. Cuban Christians need to feel the warm fellowship and sympathy of Christians of other lands. The solution for Cuba's problems is the religion of The Christ applied to life. Will Cuba accept this solution? Will the world accept this solution of its problems? This is the question which The Church must help Cuba and the world to decide.

The Validity of Prayers for the Departed

By Upton H. Gibbs,

Retired Clergyman, Washougal, Washington.

THE WHOLE QUESTION of the validity of prayers hinges on the origin and primary purpose of prayer. Why do men pray? And why is prayer necessary for them and their fellowmen?

Prayer, or communion of the soul with God, is not an arbitrary requirement of God, but naturally arises out of the relationship we bear to Him, as His intelligent creatures, entirely dependent on Him and His will, and with capacities for knowing, loving and obeying Him. Our true life consists in this knowledge, love and obedience. "This is life eternal to know Thee, the only true God" (John 17:3), and "In Him we live and move and have our being" (Acts 17:28).

Prayer, then, is vitally necessary, if we are to grow after this order, for otherwise we shall never learn to know, love and obey God, no matter if we should read the Bible from cover to cover, year in and year out.

Prayers for one another arise from the fact that we are members one of another, in this dependence on and capacity for knowing, loving and obeying God.

Prayer maintains, strengthens and develops this mutual relationship between ourselves and God, and between ourselves and one another in our relationship to God. Thus we mutually grow in grace and in the knowledge of His love and in obedience to Him.

Prayer, and the spiritual growth that arises from and is promoted by it, are social in nature and character from the very constitutions of our human nature, which we share in common. So the model prayer bids us say, "Our Father who art in heaven; Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us; Give us this day our daily bread" (Prayer Book).

As long as this mutual relationship to God and one another exists, we cannot do otherwise.

THE question arises, is there any ground for thinking that physical death causes a severance in this relationship? This is unthinkable, for it is unaffected as regards God from whom death cannot separate us, and in mind and heart, the relationship with one another, is maintained as before. We neither cease to think of the departed as our mother, father, wife, husband, child or friend, nor cease to love them as such. This would at least make it highly probable that prayer for them should continue.

Those who have passed over, for whom we may confidently pray, are the faithful departed. Not dead, in God's estimation, but living souls, and as such, still growing in grace and the knowledge of Him and His love, and increasing in obedience to Him. Growth in these respects must be thought of as continuing throughout all eternity, if life be eternal. We shall never exhaust the knowledge of God or His love. And as we eternally thus advance and progress, our obedience to Him will correspondingly increase as well. The admonition, "Pray without ceasing" (1 Thess. 5:17), receives new meaning and force from this thought.

But must we cease to pray for those who, we fear, are spiritually dead? This is a question that at times is pressing. If they are really spiritually dead, prayer probably would be unavailing for them. But we do not know whether they are in such case, and we have no right to pass judgment on them. The final decision is

Should a Christian Participate in War

By RANDOLPH ROSEWELL PAGE,

Layman, Columbia, South Carolina.

THERE we enter one of the oldest questions in Christian civilization. One that has been intricately interwoven with the march of this enlightened state down through the ages. Each succeeding generation has been perplexed with this question, until, now in our day, if not the greatest one, it forms the basis from which our greatest national problems arise. Thus in equal magnitude should the fervent attention of Christians be given to it.

The appeal of this article is not directed to the Mohammedan, Brahminian, Buddhist or Jew. Or yet to the nominal Christian, but to the really consecrated ones who have elected to walk after the pattern of the saints of God; who with willing and devoted hearts, loyally place the will of Christ, foremost and above all.

In The Book of Revelation it is written:—"With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication." Acknowledging the limitations of my meagre judgment, this was enacted by the Christian nucleus about three hundred years after Our Lord's ascension, when The Church of Christ became merged with the government of Rome and thus The Bride of Christ cast off the garment of her chaste estate and became the bride of temporal and imperial Casear. Confusion has been great from then until now as to a Christian's place in government, generally, and to military service in particular. With the ever-recurring tragedy of war, there has been found, as it is today, many great men, and multitudes of lesser souls, facing each other from opposing sides of this great, challenging, and society-molding principle.

In a large measure, I believe this confusion to be accountable to the fact, that in this amalgamation of The Church and the world, the Christian has lost his identity and therefore the arguments have been placed upon obscure premises.

We can never answer this question by requiring the submission of the worldly man and the saint, the Mohammedan and the Christian to the same criterion, which by the very nature of their classification, they have inately declined to allow. Obviously, there must be different standards for the Mohammedan and Jew, the righteous and the Christian. Therefore, we observe, that which may be proper for the Mohammedan, may not be permissable to the Jew and that granted to the righteous may be denied the Christian. So here we reach, in this article, the point of declamation at which I affirm:—That a genuine Christian, accepting the path of Jesus as his goal, cannot rightly and with pure consistency participate in war!

IMMEDIATELY the debate is on and the walls resound with retorts. Bowing to the need of conciseness, let us pick out some of the predominatingly salient ones for answer. Here are listed ten, and others which might be given from time to time, could be subdivided under these headings.

One. Should this be the accepted principle, then the President could not declare war in the defence of the country; or the governor use the militia to preserve peace. Two. Some of our best men have been soldiers. Three. With this accepted as the correct rule, there could be no Christian civilization. Four. It is our duty to support the government and submit oneself to its decrees. Five. If a country is worth living in, it is worth fighting for. Six. We must defend the helpless, our firesides and homes. Seven. We should not ask someone else to fight for our security and that of our loved ones. Eight. We have a right of self-defence. Nine. Had it not been for war, The United States would never have been free. Ten. Nowhere in The New Testament is one told not to be a soldier.

The stumbling block is this.—We have lost sight of the separation of the saints—"in the world and not of it". There is an ever-present and upward ethereal course, charted for the real Christian that is unknown and unrequired of any other creed, caste or code. The law of this path is that of love from which is born a pure, burning zeal which makes this selection. There is no law or right about it. This way is that of a volition which will accept martyrdom for Christ with thanksgiving. The following of this calling is very likely to end in martyrdom. Normally, it is beset, in some measure, with derision and persecution.

The Christian does not say that a man should not have anything to do with governmental affairs. There have been certain numbers who thought this. Should the follower of The Nazarene be allowed to follow his own dictates, there may be the strong argument of consistency in this position. However, the World War has taught us better. It taught us that in the final analysis, a government claims the right to withdraw the freedom of thought, speech, will and conscience as it deems necessary. Therefore the efficient thing to do is to be busy in state matters, using all our ability in endeavoring to shape the course of public affairs more in accordance with our consciences and ideals, hoping thereby to overcome the clash, which otherwise might exist, between allegiance to government and our consecration to the pattern of Christ.

I take the view that it is correct for the President of the United States to advocate efficiency in arms and to declare war in the defence of the country. This position is taken because the nature of this retort is not altogether a true parallel—the executive position is somewhat different. Otherwise, it would be necessary to deny, to the government, the services of great, Christian men, which would be contrary to the leavening influence good is supposed to kneed throughout society. Then again, the President does not declare war in his own name, nor in accordance with his personal feelings, wishes or ideals. It is an act apart from himself—personally. The care of the country, according to the worldly code of its people, has been put upon him by its citizenry, and their welfare has been solemnly entrusted to his care, according to their ideals, not his. In declaring war or taking military measure, he is merely keeping this sacred trust in honor, according to the people's own will, ideals and dictates. He is, in fundamental analysis, letting them declare war according to their own ideas and will, supported by their constitutional right. The real nature of this query seems to be a matter of keeping or not keeping a trust of solemn proportions, rather than a matter of selecting a personal course. The same argument is proportionately true of the governor of a state or chief magistrate of any domain.

SOME of the world's foremost Christians have also been its most conspicuous generals. Probably the two names most frequently heard illustrating this paradox of history are the names of Lee and Jackson. Great men indeed! And how I love them! When I speak of them I speak of my own. In the end, however, it merely means this:—That they lived consistently, conscientiously and nobly, according to the best ethics of their day; that they were true to their time. These men were of the generation associated with slavery; with that caste of persons who partook of The Holy Communion on Sunday and fought a duel to the death the succeeding week. Slavery has been abandoned; our backs turned on duelling. When will we cast away war? These men were true to their time. Likewise we must be true to our day.

"Yet I doubt not thro' the ages one increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of men are widen'd with the process of the suns."

Too,

"Our little systems have their day,
They have their day and cease to be.
They are but broken lights of Thee,
And Thou, O Lord, art more than they."

The hero-worship of such great men should stimulate us to noble lives, but in making the ultimate conclusions in the path of life, Christians can only focus their eyes on The Risen Lord If we can not progress must we ever remain in the conventions, customs and maxims of past ages, then obviously we should lock our college doors and close The Book of Life. This we are not going to do. We insist on advancing. In this movement though, we are to be guided by the precepts of This Book of Life, so that this change will be one of progession and not one of retrogression.

Then the thought that Christian civilization must defend itself by force of arms or else be lost by the subjugation to savagery. This I doubt to be true. We do know that sometimes the power and will of The Christ is better served by our death than is done by our insisting to live. History is in accord that the primitive Church of Jesus conquered more of the world for its Lord in the three hundred years of its early martyrdom than has been done in all the subsequent sixteen centuries in which it exchanged its wedding garment of non-resistance for that of the persuasion of carnage.

There is no body of persons that render to their government the loyal and edifying support that is so given by the Christian brotherhood; no group that means so much for the permanent establishment of all that is best in that government. At the same time they recognize a limit beyond which they cannot go. Nothing must be allowed to take precedence of The Cross of Christ. For the sake of their Master they give obeisance to government as long as its decrees do not contravene the teachings of their Lord.

That a country worth living in is worth fighting for is an adage of the world approved for the worldly. A Christian looks beyond the boon of this ephemeral realm and lives to mold the lives of his fellow man to be fit for that state which passes not away. Consequently he cannot content himself with bringing to an end a life of whose fitness for eternity he has no knowledge. Rather than do this he would prefer to see his earthly possessions taken away. For he lays not up for himself treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal. Those who establish the Christian precepts are the ones who have made the said country fit to live in. Therefore the followers of The Galilean are worthy of their hire.

THAT we should defend our homes and that we ourselves should take up arms in defense of our loved ones and not ask others to do so for us, is answered as follows:—There would be no need for defense if the worldly-minded would accept the teachings of Jesus. Those of the world do not appropriating these principles give to the followers of Our Saviour an opportunity to themselves submit to death rather than kill any for whom He died. Those of the same family accorded in these feelings select the same common end of sacrifice. Those who do not, in the spiritual sense, are not really members of the said family and do, in its truest sense, belong to the worldly and therefore should be by such taken care of.—The world should take care of its own and does. Whether worldly person or Christian each is entitled to the end of his selection.

That one has the right of self-defence is not denied but rather affirmed. The Christian does not claim self protection wrong. He is even willing to admit that, under possible conditions, it may be righteous, but—it is not Christian. The consecrated one is willing to forego this right in order to experience with his Master—the love that passes knowledge.

Christians essay not to disprove the statement that had it not been for war, the United States should not have been a free nation. Here again we answer with the obvious fact that this is a worldly government and by constituents of like nature, should it be established. The Christian is the only one who knows the perfect law of liberty. It is he alone who has learned fully the meaning of those scintallant words, "stone walls do not a prison make." While he gives all his best, freely, to establish all that is worthwhile in the land of his sojourn, yet he cannot draw, with blood, earthly demarcations. For in the fullest consideration he knows no limitations other than the universal brotherhood of The Body of Christ. His kingdom is not of this world.

Assertion is not here made that the New Testament teaches it is wrong or unrighteousness to be a soldier or to engage in war. To fight on certain sides in some wars, might possibly, be moral and righteous but,—it is not Christian. For the disciple it is not a matter of law and right. I think it is a matter of the heart whose pulsations are so fired by The Spirit of God, that the desire of salvation for his fellow-man becomes so consuming, it paralyzes the sensibilities which would kill one for whom Christ died. Rather choosing death itself than jeopardizing the eternal bliss of his brother man.

HERE a practical test is made:—The call to arms results in the Christian being in the front line trenches, rifle in hand, gaspingly seeking life in a mask. The zero hour has come. The air over top seems to be composed of and vibrant with, death-dealing metal, interspersed with life-taking gases. Into this the command of "over the top" places him. It is not this though, that makes the crisis of the moment. Not the apparently inevitable death of the present that gives the insurmountable arrow-shaft to his breathing, for, Oh, it is this!—Facing him is an antagonist of like unsullied youth whose face discloses the blamelessness of his life, carrying still its boyhood grace into which plastic texture lingers the impress of his mother's caress embedded in prayer. Through the flame of shell, in a flash of time, he sees one who also has come from a home of tenderness and love, built around The Family Altar. Who is as blameless as himself. Who like himself is trying to be true, in whose soul is no evil passion. Then as the Judean darkness is pierced by bursting shell, from out of the rift there comes the vision of Golgotha with Jesus of Nazareth King of The Jews looking down from the cross. He just can not do it—just cannot kill this boy—consequences come as they might.

No, the world may be filled with discourse and argument. When it is all over, the pros and the cons being all given and taken, yet, I simply cannot picture Christ in arms. Nor can I see The Apostles, nor early Church fathers, neither can I see the company of saints so engaged.

Emphasizing, I conclude by stating,—Moses can rightly lead an army—and has. But, Jesus Christ,—Never!

THE VICTORY OF FAITH. By Bishop Stewart of Chicago. Pp. 121. Published by Harper and Brothers, New York. Price, $1.

This is the Thirty-Seventh Book in Harper's Monthly Pulpit, containing ten sermons by Bishop Stewart. All of them are very good and thought-provoking but the sermon on "Overcoming Selfishness," the reviewer thinks is the best. Another topic is "The Victory of Faith." This is a fine and very suggestive sermon on what faith can do if properly used—it gives victory over everything. The sermons for Christmas and Easter are also typical of Bishop Stewart's preaching.

MODERN METHODS IN THE CHURCH SCHOOL: By William Grime. Pp. 99. Published by The Round Table Press, New York. Price, $1.50.

The author of this fine little book is the rector of Saint Paul's Church, Great Neck, New York. He wishes to share with others his experience in dealing with difficulties of trying to impart Christian knowledge in the Church School. This he does in a rather classical manner. He uses the dialogical method as the classical writers did. We think of the famous Plato Dialogues, for instance. The dialogues are spoken between pupil and teacher, thereby revealing the mind of the average boy and girl with regard to religious knowledge.

We recommend this book for the teacher of boys in the junior department in particular. It is a helpful and suggestive study.

SNOWDEN'S SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS, For 1936. Pp. 382. Price, $1.35. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York City.

This is the Fifteenth Annual Volume of Dr. Snowden's expositions on the International Sunday School Lessons appointed for 1936. They are free from sectarian elements, entirely evangelical and profoundly practical. We do not know of a better textbook for Bible classes. A helpful companion for all who teach religion.

THE VALIDITY OF PRAYERS FOR THE DEPARTED.

reserved to Christ alone, and until that is known, they have the benefit of the doubt. Though we may not speak with assurance, we may cherish a hope. We may commend them to His loving mercy and care, trusting that it may be possible for Him yet to save them as brands plucked from the burning. Anyhow, prayer must be free to express all the longings and desires of the heart no matter if some be foolish and impossible to gratify.

The unity of the universe as expressed by Sir Oliver Lodge, the English physicist, in his book, "Raymond, or Life and Death," is much to the point on this question of prayer for the departed. He states:

"The Universe is one, not two. Literally there is no other world except in the limited and partial sense of the other planets. The Universe is one. We exist in it all the time; sometimes aware of a group of facts on one side of the partition, sometimes aware of another group on the other side. But the partition is a subjective one; we are all of one family all the time, so long as the link of affection is not broken. And for those who believe in prayer at all, to cease from praying for the welfare of their friends, because they are materially inaccessible—though perhaps spiritually more accessible than before—is to succumb unduly to the residual evil of past ecclesiastical abuses, and to lose an opportunity of happy service."

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mrs. W. Shelley Humphreys —

What it Means to be a Member of the Woman's Auxiliary

What is the meaning of membership in the Woman's Auxiliary? What is the answer we would give to the woman who either is new in the Church's ways or has never cared sufficiently to ask, but whose awakening interest now prompts this question? Since it is hoped such interest will manifest itself, it is worthwhile to consider this and prepare to give a clear, comperhensive reply.

Among treasured papers is one on the work of the Woman's Auxiliary, which, to one member at least, embodies our ideal. It is Bishop Lloyd's answer as to the meaning of membership in this body, and from it the following is quoted:

"Over and above practical things it ought to mean a worldwide view of what the Church of God is sent to do, and a deep and real sense of personal responsibility for sharing in that mission. Do we think of the Church as the Body of Christ, doing the mind of its Head? Are we, as members of the Woman's Auxiliary, constantly seeking to learn the mind of Christ, that we may obey it in our own lives and interpret it to others? The question is not so, What are we doing? as, How are we doing it?"

Working In His Presence.

Do we work on our knees, doing our work so consciously in the presence of God that it receives His blessing, talking over everything with Him before we try to do it? Do we ask Him always to show us what His will is, and to empty us of self, that we may be filled with Him, so that He may work in and through us?

We need great ideals. We need to realize the Christ working in us. We need to commit ourselves to infinite things, and then to put such a spirit into the Church as shall cause the things done to be done in the spirit of Christ. If we would all put he emphasis in the right place it would be a tremendous source of power.

The Bishop closes by saying that if this is what it means to us to be members of the Woman's Auxiliary, there will be no dull or uninspiring meetings, and that every Holy Communion will become for us a service of intercession. Finally he points out that it is no our field, but our faithfulness that counts.

Do we not all know how easy it is to lead new members into the practical work? But to lead others to know the power of prayer, to know that meetings are for prayer as well as for alks, reports, sewing; to know that the high task must be one of selfless service —all this can be done only through His help.

Woman's Auxiliary Active in Philippine Islands.

Although we have only two branches in our diocese we are proud of those two. The Cathedral branch has an average attendance of about eighteen or twenty women, and they have carried on several good works, contributing generously to the Altar Guild and giving various parish entertainments. Also they support a blind boy in the Government Blind School. Their greatest work is their hand-sewing for hospitals and schools, which has risen to enormous proportions. They sew one morning a month, throughout the year and in Lent, every week. These are busy, useful times and we see results wherever the Bishop and I go in the dioceses.

The Bontoc branch is splendid. The members are mostly graduates of our All Saints' School, and many are married. They make Altar linen and care for it. And they care for the clothes of little needy girls in our school. They have a Bible class, have regular dues which they pay, and they learn about the world-wide organizations to which they belong.

Fanny S. Mosher.

Preparing for More Effective Service.

There are those who claim so many clouds are darkening the skies of life today that it is difficult for religion to make much progress. But there is a brighter side, and it is this which women of the Church see as they plan and pray for a wider extension of Christ's Kingdom in parish, community, diocese, nation, and world.

Over against superficial manifestations of failure and even against stern, discouraging facts, Churchwomen set their knowledge of the hunger felt by many for something stable in life, for a faith that will strengthen and support. And our branches take courage. We know that we meet in our homes and in a business and social way, women who need the Church and who might accept her comfort and her challenge if they could know more of what Christianity means, and perhaps if they could see in us the constant proof of its attractiveness, its peace and joy.

A thirst for sincerity, for reality; a desire for truth in spiritual values, is apparent; especially, perhaps, is this seen in association with young people. The stirring message of Stanley Jones, delivered in London following his visit here, tells of his having observed this Portions are quoted from the message of this wise Christian who should be able to get a fair view of life on our shores:

"I think we are on the eve of a spiritual awakening," he said. "Someway I sense it among classes that one would think had no spiritual longings or yearnings. I was recently at Columbia University in a students' meeting, and the subject assigned to me was this, 'My Personal Religious Experience.' Now, of all the places in the world where I would hesitate to strip my soul bare, that place would be mechanistic Columbia, but before I had gone far I discovered that we were just folks, that mechanistic philosophy or psychology had not gone so deep that it uprooted those things that are elemental, for before we are psychologists we are people, and sometimes we survive the psychology and remain people."

In the Student World.

"Students are supposed to be blase and hardened. I found if one could get to it there was a deep, underlying hunger in the student world. They were impatient of bunkum, cant, hypocrisy, and they loathed veneer. But I found those students looked one straight in the eye and said, 'Is there anything real in it? If so, tell us.'

"I feel we are on the verge of one of the greatest spiritual awakenings, if we can meet it, that the world has seen in many a century. There is an upsurge of spiritual craving throughout the world."

Is it not this our leaders in the Forward Movement see that we are on the eve of a great spiritual awakening? And is it not this for which the Forward Movement is preparing our people, that by prayer, study, increased emphasis on Holy Communion and on Bible reading and meditation, we may each be prepared to take some part?

CLOSING OF HOSPITAL IN ANVIK WORKS HARDSHIP ON STAFF AND ENDANGERS LIVES.

Anvik, Alaska.—Since the closing of the mission school at this place last June, and the consequent dispersion of the children and the departure of the housemother, teacher, and nurse, the duties of the work in this isolated station upon the two remaining missionaries, Mr. M. S. Chapman and his wife, has fallen heavily.

Scientists, explorers, tourists, and others come every summer expecting to find shelter and hospital facilities, but this year it was necessary to turn them away, since all supplies of food, beds and mattresses were sent to Nenana and Fort Yukon.

But ministering to the needs of unexpected travelers is not the most trying or even the primary object of a mission hospital; sickness and accident are here as elsewhere three hundred and sixty-five days in the year.

On the closing of the school the only white trader and his wife moved away, and Mr. Chase, who came to the mission in 1902, a disappointed miner looking for work, and who has been an invaluable helper during all the years since as builder, mechanic, repairer, neighbor, and lay reader, has been retired because of the lack of funds.

Mrs. Chapman says, "We are beginning to be doubtful about getting a nurse this year, and we had counted so confidently upon her coming. We needed her terribly last summer. I was called upon to meet several emergencies alone, and was not fitted or trained for the tasks. It was a heavy nervous strain as well as requiring physical effort."

JUNIOR COLLEGE IN TOKYO TO BUILD NEW DORMITORY.

Tokyo, Japan.—The activities during the summer of 1935 of a determined and strong Parent's Committee resulted in a total of 50,000 yen, which is one-half of the amount undertaken by the Committee.

The object of the fund is to supplement 100,000 yen already in hand to erect a large three-story dormitory for the Junior College of 750 students of St. Paul's University.

This new building is to replace an old temporary barrack type building erected shortly after the earthquake, and when the new dormitory is finished the Junior College will have its own plant separate from the University proper.

When St. Paul's University opened this fall with 2,000 boys on the campus, when the first corporate communion was held in All Saints' Chapel, it was a glorious sight to see every pew filled. Probably few collegiate chapels in the world have maintained a more definite weekly service in which men and boys participate more whole-heartedly than do the students of St. Paul's.

Dr. Reinheimer asks this vital question: What are we doing to bring the knowledge of God to all men?

St. Margaret's School for Girls, Pelotas, Brazil, is under construction, made possible by the United Thank Offering.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

PRAYER FOR EASTERN OREGON.

O God, whose fatherly care reacheth to the uttermost parts of the earth, we humbly beseech Thee graciously to behold and bless all our missionaries, near and far, especially do we now remember the Bishop of Eastern Oregon and his staff of workers. Defend them from every danger of soul and body, and grant that both they and we, drawing nearer to Thee, may be bound together in Thy love, in the communion of Thy Holy Spirit, and in the fellowship of Thy saints; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CALIFORNIA CHURCHMEN GO ON PILGRIMAGE TO CELEBRATE OAKHURST ANNIVERSARY.

Fresno, California.—Delegates from Madera and Fresno, together with visitors from other places, made a pilgrimage to Oakhurst, on October 1 to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of Christ Church. The local congregation had freshly painted the interior of the simple building, provided a new carpet strip, and decorated the altar with flowers and candles. The dossal and altar cloth made by the embroidery group of St. John's, Stockton, was used at this service for the first time.

The Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, and two addresses were made, one by Dean Farlander who reviewed the past, and the other by the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Fresno, Luther E. Stein, who spoke of the present and future.

Following the service, tables were set on the lawn under the pine trees where residents and visitors enjoyed a basket lunch. There were no set speeches or formal program, but one of the older members of the congregation, Mr. Whiteley, recited an original poem written for the occasion.

It is not possible for either the Episcopal Church of the Presbyterian to maintain regular services at this place, but the two religious groups working together are able to provide pastoral care and direction. The people are anxious for a Sunday School and for services, and by following this procedure, the community is not without the Church.

The Pilgrimage was such a happy affair that many expressed the hope that it may be an annual occasion.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION GIVEN IN AGAWA PUBLIC SCHOOL, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Agawa, Mountain Province, Philippine Islands.—Religious instruction in the public school of Agawa was recently started under the leadership of Mr. Robert Pekas. This is the reorganization of the voluntary classes conducted by Mr. Didaco Olat, recently resigned. Mr. Pekas brings the advantages of thorough training in catechetical work at the Sagada High School.

Interest in religious instruction, and the hearty cooperation of the teachers of the school, has resulted in an unusually large enrollment in the classes.

This interest is especially gratifying since at first the unbelieving children showed no interest in the subject.

The parish priest, the Rev. V. H. Gowen, who has had charge of the work for several years, urges the importance of this catechetical work in connection with the public school, and in his parish work among the parents he suggests that they command their children to take part in the classes.

With the active interest of Father Gowen, the head men, the teachers of the school, and parents, the religious instruction classes this year has enrolled all the students in the school.

Instruction in the first two grades is in dialect, because the younger children do not understand English very well. The instruction includes personal religion, the Bible, confession, baptism, the Holy Communion, the Prayer Book, and the Church.

HAWAIIAN PRIEST AUTHOR OF ORIGINAL CHRISTMAS PLAY.

Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands.—The Rev. Joseph Clarkson Mason, Vicar of the Epiphany Mission, Kaimuki, has written an original Christmas play, "The Completion of Bethlehem," which is ready for distribution.

The theme, "Every Altar is Another Bethlehem," is not new, but the dramatic presentation is novel and effective, and at the same time simple, easy to present, and devotional.

Any Sunday School, Bible Class, Service League, Auxiliary, or other Church organization which would like to see a copy of the play should address the author, at 1041 Tenth Avenue, Honolulu. It is offered on a postal card request, and any Church group wishing to present the play may do so without paying royalty. It is suggested, however, that if it is used one-half of the proceeds be sent to help in the work of Epiphany Mission.

(Editor's Note: It is further suggested, not by the author, that every one requesting a copy of the play send one or two dimes or more. Paper, printing, and postage cost money.)

A senior warden of a large city parish expresses his opinion: When a man becomes a true Christian he is an enthusiastic missionary.

"All things come of thee, O Lord, and of Thine own have we given Thee." How much have we given, brother?

If we haven't a conviction, we don't produce very much action.—Lewis B. Franklin.

Our Silent Missionaries

Different customs have arisen at various times in the world's history, and today, when scientists tell us that the sounds of our city streets are louder and more continuous than ever before, it seems appropriate that the custom of a minute of perfect silence should be kept in memory of the World War dead in many places. Probably it arose from the "silence so loud you could hear it", that came when the guns were first silenced on the first Armistice Day in France.

But those of us who have tried the minute of silence remember how long it seems, especially the first time, and how difficult it is not to laugh or do something else that will not be appropriate. Imagine then how difficult it would be if that silence were prolonged to a half hour, an hour or a day, and how lonely we would be if we could hear no music, no birds, no laughter and no voices. Yet the deaf live in perpetual silence, and are thus alone, even though many are about them. When any one wishes to talk to them they are apt to shout and the deaf feel conspicuous, and that is even worse than being lonely in many cases.

When the deaf go to the movies they cannot now, as formerly, enjoy the silent pictures, for there is talking, or music, and they miss a great deal of the story from not being able to hear. So that entertainment is now denied them as far as full enjoyment is concerned. At their business they feel their handicap at all times, and even at church they cannot hear at the ordinary services, so that they seldom go. Yet Jesus was one who sympathized with them and opened their ears, so that we, His followers, should certainly try to care for them.

In 1852 the Rev. Dr. Gallaudet, a clergyman of our Church, started work among the deaf in Baltimore, Philadelphia and Washington. Gallaudet Academy for the Deaf is named after him, and most of those who attended school in or about that section have seen the Gallaudet boys play football. They always put up a good, scrappy game, and one that all, whether spectators or players, enjoyed. It is true that at times difficulties about the whistle, which they could not hear, would arise, but that was a difficulty that their trainers managed to circumvent, so that it was hard to realize that they were not in possession of all their faculties.

We now have in our Church five churches provided exclusively for the deaf. These are in New York, Philadelphia, Birmingham, Durham, N. C., and Burlington, N. C. All of these have vested choirs. But in most places services are held in the parish churches. The vested choirs "sing" with their hands and it is a beautiful sight to see them all together going through the motion in a perfect drill and harmony of motion, singing "Nearer, My God to Thee", for instance. Of course in the schools they learn to talk the sign language with their hands with each other, and to read the lips of people who do not talk the sign language.

At times one will see the deaf who are also blind. When the missionary visits such a person he lets the blind person hold his wrists. Then the missionary talks the sign language to him and he understands perfectly. When there is a congregation, the missionary has the blind person sit next to a person who can see and the blind takes the wrist of the deaf, who can see, and the deaf goes through the motions he sees the missionary make, and the blind person understands perfectly.

Most of us do not know that a deaf person, if properly trained, can follow the minister through an Episcopal service by watching their movements near the altar, reading the Prayer Book, and watching the congregation. They will know his sermons come from the Epistle or the Gospel for the day. Automatically they can kneel and stand when the congregation does. The numbers of the hymns for the day are always posted on the wall. The priest makes many signs through the Holy Communion service. Also the deaf can look at the candles and other symbols in the Church and meditate on them. The pictures in the windows tell of the doings of the Christ. Each picture, symbol or emblem can be a sermon in itself. The signs used when the priest blesses the congregation, baptizes some one, and when the Bishop confirms are very plain in their meaning. There is so much action which can be prayerfully watched by the eyes of the devout deaf. The Episcopal Church is the Church for the deaf.

We have now several thousand communicants among the deaf. They are ministered to by seventeen priests. Incidentally there is a young man now in training for this special ministry to the deaf in our Seminary in Chicago. If a person be only slightly deaf they naturally would go to the ordinary churches, but when the deafness gets very bad they call in those who do not have to be heard at all. Usually four or five dioceses combine and get a clergyman to travel over them for this special work. But five dioceses have the exclusive use of a missionary. These are North Carolina, Missouri, Ohio, Michigan and Los Angeles (this latter temporarily vacant). Then the two Florida dioceses have one together, a retired missionary to the deaf, the Rev. F. C. Smielau, who lives in Orlando.

The Church's Mission to the Deaf has an excellent little paper that is published monthly. It is called the "Silent Missionary". It costs a dollar a year and is well worth reading, being most interesting.

There are 89,000 deaf people in the United States. In the Province of Washington alone there are 13,000. Most of these are widely scattered. Of course the clergymen of the mission are paid salaries. But these are never large and their traveling expenses must come out of them as a rule. As their work is largely with individuals who seldom see any other clergymen with whom they can talk and feel at home, it is most important that they do a great deal of traveling.

In the Province of Sewanee, the Rev. Robert C. Fletcher is constantly traveling. He lives in Birmingham. But he regularly visits nineteen churches and responds to calls from eight different States. He writes: "I plan to have lay readers in every diocese and large city in the Province in order to keep services going until more missionaries can be provided." During the past five years he has established thirty-five missions, and since this time last year he reports 242 isolated deaf called upon, 236 services, to which 10,046 people came, and 45,000 miles traveled by train or car. Mr. Smielau is his assistant in the Florida dioceses.

In the Province of Washington there are three missionaries to the deaf. The Rev. Henry J. Pulver, in Philadelphia, has charge of three dioceses and ministers through three cities. The Rev. Warren M. Smaltz, in Lebanon, ministers to four Pennsylvania dioceses going to twelve cities, while the Rev. Hobart L. Tracy, in Washington, D. C., has charge of four dioceses, Washington and the three Virginias. He goes to thirteen cities.

Lectures, many of them illustrated with lantern slides, and motion pictures are given from time to time. Social gatherings and reunions of all kinds are encouraged for the deaf.

The Church assumes the greater part of the financial burden for the work. The deaf give all that it is possible for them to give. Much more, however, is needed to carry on the work to its full capacity, and to provide additional missionaries. To those desiring "Thank Offering Days", the twelfth Sunday after Trinity and the third Sunday in Advent, are suggested, as both of these days have stories of healing of the deaf by our Lord in the Gospels.

The Y. P. S. L. of the Diocese of South Florida last year took as one of its diocesan projects the aiding of the work among the deaf. Each league was asked to send in a dollar and a half towards this. It is hoped that each one of us, whatever our diocese or province, will pray for this most important work that is now going forward in every province of our Church.

As an indication of the way the deaf feel towards the mission, the following poem, by a deaf man, dedicated to Mr. Fletcher is given.

His Plea.

Encompassed by so many things
We cannot understand,
The pain and loss unto the deaf
That lie on every hand.

Master of fear and doubt that fall
When night has spread her wings,
By much unrest and questioning
That his own living brings;

He stands and gropes, our trusting friend
With anxious, seeking mind;
His head and heart bowed down with cares
Sad problems of mankind.

Puzzled, heart-torn, he sends a prayer
Across the starless night,
For faith and trust from God above,
To lead the deaf aright.

PRAYER FOR THE ENDING OF THE WAR IN ETHIOPIA AND FOR PEACE IN ALL THE WORLD.

Bishop William T. Manning of New York has issued today the following Prayer for the Ending of the War in Ethiopia and for World Peace, and expresses the hope that similar prayers may be offered by all Christian Communions throughout the world, both Catholic and Protestant, and by all believers in God.

"O Almighty God, who canst bring good out of evil, and makest even the wrath of men to turn to Thy praise; Grant, we beseech Thee, that just and righteous counsels may prevail to end the present war in Ethiopia; and so guide and inspire the hearts of men that in all the world wars may cease, and that all nations and races may dwell together in brotherhood; for His sake who came into this world to show us the way of justice, and love, and peace, Thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

THE TASK OF THE CHURCH TODAY.

Theologs Will Discuss This Important Question in Their Forthcoming National Conference.

Theological students and faculty of every part of the United States are invited to attend a National Conference of Theological Students, meeting at Butler University, Indianapolis, December 27-28. This, the fifth national conference of theological students will give its attention to a vital theme: "The Task of the Church Today." The dates for this conference precede the opening of the Quadrennial Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement.

The first of these national theological conferences was held in 1923, at Indianapolis. Others, held at intervals of several years, have met at Milwaukee, Detroit, and Buffalo. Thus the forthcoming conference is the fifth in the line of these national gatherings. In addition to national conferences, regional conferences of theological students are held annually in all parts of the country.

As part of its service as a correlating and coordinating agency for the promotion of Christian unity and interseminary cooperation, the Theological Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association is working out the details of the conference program.

The opening session will be a devotional service at 10:30 A. M., December 27, under the leadership of the Rev. George Stewart, D. D., minister of the First Presbyterian Church of Stamford, Conn., and chairman of the Quadrennial Convention. Brief statements by the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, chairman of the Theological Committee and rector of St. John's Church, Williamstown, Mass., and Mr. Hayes Beall, Executive Secretary of the Interseminary Movement and a secretary of the National Council of Methodist Youth, will direct attention to "The Interseminary Movement and Its Relation to the Task of the Church Today." The conference will then hear Dr. T. Z. Koo of China, on "The Church as a Christian Community." By his engaging personality and Christian spirit, Dr. Koo has endeared himself to the theological students of America as well as China. After luncheon together, the conference will be addressed by Dr. Robert E. Speer, senior secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. Harold C. Phillips, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist Church of Cleveland, Ohio, on "The Immediate Task of the Church in the United States." Following these addresses, a panel discussion will be held in which theological students of different denominations will discuss the vital question, "Can the Church Adopt a Program for Social Action?" Theological students who will participate in the panel are: Karl Downs of Gammon Theological Seminary of Atlanta, Ga.; Richard Irving of the San Francisco Theological Seminary of San Anselmo; Roy McCorkle of the Yale Divinity School of New Haven, Conn.; A. A. Medved of the Colgate-Rochester Divinity School of Rochester, N. Y.; and Paul Streich of the Eden Theological Seminary at Webster Groves, Mo.

On the evening's program is an address by Dr. William Temple, Archbishop of York, whose subject is "Dogmatic Faith and Human Freedom." A period for questions and discussion will follow this address.

On Saturday morning a special session will consider the problem of Church Unity. Dr. Samuel Cavert, D. D., Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, will speak out of his wide experience as secretary of the coordinating organization of Protestantism in America, and Dr. Richard Roberts, moderator of the United Church of Canada, will tell some of the lessons learned through the experience of church union in Canada. It is hoped that Dr. Everett Clinchy, secretary of the National Conference of Jews and Christians, will be present to speak on the growing understanding between Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant groups in North America. Many other leaders in the field of inter-church cooperation are expected to participate in what promises to be a most fruitful discussion. The closing session of the conference will be a devotional service led by the Rev. H. C. Armstrong, national secretary of the Association for Promotion of Christian Unity.

Further information concerning the conference may be secured from the conference chairman, the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, Williamstown, Mass.

INDIANAPOLIS STUDENT CONVENTION TO MEET DURING CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.

More arresting is the announcement that the Twelfth Quadrennial Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement will meet in Indianapolis the last of December than is the news of powerful forces attacking governmental policies and menacing international statutes. Twenty-five hundred delegates gathering during their Christmas holiday from several hundred colleges and universities of Canada and the United States, unitedly facing world conflicts and social changes in the light of Christian precepts, is a force to be recognized and valued.

Kagawa, Japan's great apostle, aflame with the message of love, justice, and economic freedom; the Archbishop of York, William Temple, Great Britain's Christian statesman of world repute; T. Z. Koo, often called "the Chinese missionary to the Christians of the Occident"; Mrs. Induk Pak, a Korean of exceptional ability and field secretary of the Cooperative Committee on Work Among Rural Women; Basil Mathews, author, publicist, and lecturer, are overseas speakers who will be joined by nationals and returned missionaries of Canada and the United States. Gonzalo Baez Camargo, Secretary of the National Christian Council of Mexico and John A. Mackay, formerly of Peru, evangelist and author will interpret the tides and problems of the Latin American countries. While Richard Roberts, Moderator of the United Church of Canada, Daniel J. Fleming, Kenneth Scott Latourette, E. Fay Campbell, and Henry P. Van Dusen, are among those who may be termed interpreters of the home base.

It is gratifying that attending this Convention, which may well be called the Golden anniversary of the Student Volunteer Movement, will be John R. Mott and Robert E. Speer, co-founders with Robert P. Wilder of this great Movement that has fired students with missionary zeal and has been a great factor in having over 13,000 of its members sail for service in 110 mission fields.

The program will consist of platform addresses, informal seminars, international teas, musical programs, a missionary play, and motion pictures. "Foreign Missions—Their Present and Future"; "Christian Fellowship and World Peace"; "Basis for Belief in the Uniqueness of Jesus"; and "The Church's Home Missionary Task" are a few of the subjects for seminar discussion. Groups will also consider "The Christian Fellowship in Relation to Current Political Trends," "The Adequacy of the Christian Faith for Human Needs," "Christian Fellowship and Industrial Problems," "Noteworthy Methods and Movements in Contemporary Evangelism," and "Religious Liberty and the Modern State."

It is heartening to note the spirit in which all delegates are asked to approach this gathering and the objectives held before them:

1. To probe with ruthless realism the inner character of the world's suffering and confusion.

2. To confess the presence in ourselves of the same factors which have made the world what it is.

3. To appraise the new crusading forces which are increasingly conscripting men's allegiance.

4. To discern, through a more vivid perception of God's eternal purpose disclosed in Christ, His intention for our generation.

5. To grasp the significance of the world fellowship of the Christian Church in the fulfilment of this intention.

6. To discover how each one may find his place in the world mission of Jesus Christ.

In view of the rapidly changing world events, the poignant sense of the need for the practice of world solidarity, and the continual thrusts made at the very roots of civilization, both speakers and delegates will be afforded an opportunity to weigh seriously the sharp struggle between the Christian faith and pagan tendencies, deciding what part is to be theirs in this new age. Indeed, this conference can furnish a practical demonstration that the vitalizing message of Christ is not shunned by youth; that youth faces the reality of the problems of the world and is willing to travel beyond the "second mile" in the application of the Christian precepts and faith in the meeting of humanity's needs.

REINICKER LECTURES AT VIRGINIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Virginia seminarians, faculty and friends enjoyed two illuminating lectures on "The Authority of the Christian Church" and "Theology and Religious Experience" by a distinguished Oxford scholar and eminent English clergyman, Tuesday, October 29.

The Rev. J. S. Bezzant, canon and chancellor of Liverpool Cathedral, England, and formerly vice-principal of Ripon Hall, Oxford University, was the lecturer. The lectures were the fall series of Reinicker lectures delivered on the foundation establishd in 1894 by the late Mr. George A. Reinicker of Baltimore.

At the outset of his lecture on the authority of the Church, Canon Bezzant defined the two meanings of authority: first, as the right to require assent, loyalty, and obedience; and, secondly, as the power to enforce such assent and obedience. Historically, the Church has exercised both types, he continued, but the second type has in these days been practically abandoned.

The Church's claim to authority in matters of faith and morals is based on its assertion that it is the repository and trustee of a special and unique revelation of God in Jesus Christ, that Jesus Christ was the crown and also the criterion of all revelation, that His work is continued by the operation of the Holy Spirit and the Church is in possession of a more adequate knowledge of God than is elsewhere to be found.

BISHOP HOBSON TO BE ON AIR FOR ARMISTICE SUNDAY PROGRAM.

The Armistice Sunday message of the Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, leader of the Forward Movement, will go on the air from Station KWKH, Shreveport, Louisiana. Station KWKH has 1100 Kilocycles and at that time of day reaches as far as Chicago. Its best coverage is in Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Mississippi.

Bishop Hobson will preach from St. Mark's Church, Shreveport. The eleven o'clock service at this church is regularly being broadcast.

He is visiting St. Mark's for two days in the course of a visit in behalf of the Forward Movement in the Dioceses of Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

RHODE ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. James De Wolf Perry, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. G. G. Bennett, D. D., Assistant.

More Important Than Canvass Diocesan-Wide Mission.

Even more important than the Every-Member Canvass, which is now under way in some parishes, seems to be the preparation for the Diocesan-wide Mission to be held February 2-16, 1936, a spiritual adventure without precedent in Rhode Island, and, it may be, in any part of the Episcopal Church. As the details of the large plans are becoming more and more known the interest is widening. In a few months, it is expected, the mission, which will usher in the twenty-fifth anniversary of Bishop Perry's consecration as Bishop of Rhode Island, will be recognized as the most notable expression of diocesan response to the spiritual appeal of the Forward Movement. The eyes of the General Church will most likely be focussed upon this prophetic project of the Presiding Bishop's diocese.

The Rt. Rev. Granville Gaylord Bennett, D. D., auxiliary bishop, who is leading the movement, outlined some of the plans at the meeting of the Providence Convocation held last week at All Saints' Memorial Church. In brief they are:

A large number of missioners, among them some of the oldest preachers and teachers in the General Church, will come to Rhode Island for the mission, which will be held in every parish and mission station in the diocese. Where a clergyman has two mission stations, or an independent church and a mission, the missioner's time will be divided equally between them, one week in one and the next in the other. Between twenty and thirty priests in Rhode Island will supplement the staff from outside, being assigned, as a rule, to some parish other than their own. It will be a teaching mission with the emphasis on the fundamentals of the history and faith of the Church.

Bishop Bennett was doubtful whether the committee could do much for children's missions, regretting that the number of children's missioners in the Church is small. However, he left all that to the rectors of the parishes.

Later in the session the Rev. Charles H. Temple, chairman of the Department of Christian Education, strongly urged the clergy to begin making plans for children's missions. With careful preparation through interest and study, he argued, all difficulties could be surmounted. His department would be glad to cooperate. In his own parish, the Church of the Transfiguration, Edgewood, the emphasis would be placed on the children's mission.

The mission will be finished through offerings at each church. The committee has taken over three-fourths of space of The Diocesan Record, the official organ of the Bishop and Council, for disseminating information about the Diocesan-wide Mission, and for that purpose four or five times the usual number of copies will be printed for the next three months.

On the last evening of the mission it is planned to gather everyone within or outside the Communion concerned with the adventure in the largest auditorium Providence can provide, and there give expression in one united meeting of the spiritual meaning and power of the Presiding Bishop's Diocesan-wide Mission which is already beginning to engage the attention of the whole Church.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

Visit of the Archbishop of York.

The Right Honorable and Most Reverend William Temple, Archbishop of York, is to spend a month in this country preaching in different cities and lecturing in some of our universities.

The Archbishop's appointments while in the diocese have been made by Bishop Manning, whose guest he will be while here.

The bonds between Old York and New York are close in many ways. In 1927, at the invitation of the Archbishop, and of the Dean and Chapter, Bishop Manning preached at the thirteen hundredth anniversary of the founding of York Minster, which is one of the great Cathedrals of the world.

As a result of curious and interesting developments in earlier centuries, the Archbishop of York holds the title of Primate of England; the title of the Archbishop of Canterbury being Primate of all England.

Archbishop Temple's visit here is anticipated with keen interest and pleasure. He is known as a great Bishop and Leader of the Anglican Communion, and also for his leadership in social and public movements and in movements for Christian Reunion. Recently his utterances on the question of War and Peace have attracted wide attention.

The Archbishop's stay in New York City is so brief that the arrangement for his appointments has been a matter of great difficulty. The schedule as arranged, which carries out the Archbishop's own wishes, is as follows:

Sunday, December 15.

11 A. M.—Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

4 P. M.—Trinity Church.

8 P. M.—Special service at the Cathedral under the auspices of the five leading international agencies for the promotion of Christian Reunion: The World Conference on Faith and Order; The Universal Christian Council for Life and Work; The International Missionary Council; The World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches; and The World Student Christian Federation.

Monday, December 16.

10:30 A. M.—Visit to Union Theological Seminary.

12 noon—Address to faculty and students of the General Theological Seminary.

1 P. M.—Luncheon at the General Theological Seminary.

4 P. M.—Convocation and conferring of degree at Columbia University.

7 P. M.—Dinner given to the Archbishop by The Church Club of New York.

At the dinner given by The Church Club, of which Mr. Edward K. Warren is President, the speakers will be: Archbishop Temple, Bishop Manning and President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University. It is expected that a very large gathering of the clergy and laymen and women of the diocese will be present at this dinner.

Bishop Parsons Speaks at C. L. I. D. Luncheon.

Bishop Edward L. Parsons, of California, was the guest of honor at a luncheon held in New York October 31 by the Church League for Industrial Democracy, of which he is president. The ideal of democracy, Bishop Parsons declared in his address, grows out of the spirit of Christ and His teaching that every personality is sacred. The C. L. I. D., he said, holds that this ideal must underlie the industrial as well as the political order, and the League's function is to show all Church people the need for a new social order based on Christian principles. The Christian belief, Bishop Parsons said, is that the cooperative commonwealth is an expression in social and political life of the inner spirit of Christ, a spirit which must prevail if the cooperative order is to be Christian. A fundamental requirement for a Christian order is freedom. The lure of dictatorships blinds many to what they do to the individual in their suppression of freedom, he went on, contrary to the essential Christian requirement. In the industrial order, Bishop Parsons said, each worker must have opportunity for full expression of his personality, and a social and industrial order which will make this really possible is necessary.

The luncheon was attended by 100 members and friends, among them Bishop Robert L. Paddock, Rev. Dr. W. Russell Bowie, Rev. Dr. J. Howard Melish, Rev. Dr. Howard C. Robbins, Rev. Dr. Granville Mercer Williams, S. S. J. E., Rev. Dr. Henry Darlington, Mary van Kleeck, Dr. Adelaide T. Case and Mrs. Mary K. Sitkhovitch, who was chairman of the meeting. Students from the General Theological Seminary and members of the Church Army also attended.

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

Dr. Joseph Fort Newton Will Remain in Capacity of Special Preacher for Associated Churches.

An unexpected surprise greeted the communicants and other worshippers attending services of the Associated Churches of St. James and St. Luke and the Epiphany, followed by expressions of gratification, when announcement was made at all services Sunday last, that the Rev. Dr. Joseph Fort Newton will remain as an important link in the program adopted by these two prominent churches in their joint effort to approach a solution of Philadelphia's central city church problem.

Arrangements have been effected, it was announced by the Rev. Dr. John H. Mockridge, whereby Dr. Newton will serve in the capacity of special preacher for the Associated Churches, and as such will be the official connecting link between the two churches which in pooling their resources in the development of the city church plan and in worshipping together, still maintain their separate identity as individual parishes.

Under the arrangement entered into and which becomes immediately effective, Dr. Newton will be known as the special preacher of the Associated Churches of St. James and St. Luke and the Epiphany, and will cease to be co-rector of St. James' Church.

Chapter Meeting of the Church League for Industrial Democracy.

"Fascist Tendencies in the United States or Industrial Democracy in Reverse" was discussed in a meeting held last week under the auspices of the Philadelphia Chapter of the Church League for Industrial Democracy. This Philadelphia group is a branch of a national organization of clergy and laity of the Episcopal Church to bring together for study and action those who seek to apply the principles of Christ in industrial society.

The meeting was held in Holy Trinity Memorial Chapel, and plans were discussed for the winter's program of the Chapter in this city and vicinity. The main subject for discussion on Friday night was presented by the Rev. L. Bradford Young, assistant to the Rev. Dr. J. Howard Melish, rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Young is the clergyman who recently achieved the record of holding the rectorship of a parish for probably the shortest time of any priest of the Episcopal Communion in this country as a result of attacks made on him in the Hearst newspapers in connection with his activity in labor troubles.

Last summer Mr. Young received and accepted a call to the rectorship of Trinity Church, San Francisco. Publication of newspaper articles followed. Mr. Young meanwhile had resigned his position as assistant to Dr. Melish, had packed his household goods, purchased his tickets to California and had said his farewells to his Brooklyn friends, when he received word that the vestry of the California parish desired his resignation. In the meantime the Bishop of California, the Rt. Rev. Edward L. Parsons, who is National President of the Church League for Industrial Democracy, succeeded in having the vestry to withdraw the request for a resignation and to confer with the Brooklyn clergyman. Mr. Young went to California and conferred with the vestry. Finally on September 17, at another meeting, by a vote of 5 to 3 the vestry renewed its request for Mr. Young's resignation, which the Brooklyn priest gave. In this situation Mr. Melish stepped into the picture and recalled Mr. Young to resume his former position as assistant to him at Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn.

Dedication Service in New Church.

The nave and one of the transepts of the new Church of the Holy Comforter, in Aronimink Park, Drexel Hill, were dedicated November 4. Bishop Taitt officiated at the dedication, assisted by the Very Rev. Dr. Charles W. Shreiner, Dean of the Chester Convocation, and the Rev. Dr. C. W. Schiffer, rector of Holy Comforter.

The new church, when completed, will add aotnher of the many beautiful churches in and around the city's suburbs.

Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Mission at Hanover.

A teaching mission of unusual interest was conducted by the Rev. Henry E. Batcheller at St. Paul's Church, Hanover, October 20-25. Mr. Batcheller is one of the most sought after missioners in the Church. His timely sermons and answers to questions held the interest of large congregations, among which were many who were not Episcopalians. He is a loyal scholarly churchman who has the happy faculty of interesting all kinds of people.

NEWARK.

Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. B. M. Washburn, D. D., Coadjutor

Suffragan Bishop Elected.

The Rev. Theodore R. Ludlow, rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, South Orange, New Jersey, and an associate member of the Forward Movement Commission, was elected Suffragan Bishop of the diocese on October 22. The election took place at a special convention held in Trinity Cathedral, Newark. Mr. Ludlow was elected on the eleventh ballot. Other candidates were the Rev. W. O. Kinsolving, of Calvary, Summit; the Rev. Canon W. O. Leslie, Jr., of Trinity Cathedral; and the Rev. J. F. Hamblin, of St. John's, Newark; all in the Diocese of Newark. The convention voted a salary of $6,000 a year and the use of a house for the suffragan. The post was created to assist Bishop Washburn, now coadjutor, who will become bishop of the diocese when the resignation of Bishop Stearly is accepted by the House of Bishops at its approaching meeting. Mr. Ludlow was born in Sherman, Texas, and is fifty-two years old. He will confer with Bishop Stearly and Bishop Washburn before accepting.

CONNECTICUT.

Rt. Rev. F. G. Budlong, D. D., S. T. D.,

The Venerable Frank S. Morehouse Retires from Archdeaconry.

A memorable session of the Archdeaconry of Fairfield was held on September 28 at St. Luke's Church, Bridgeport, when the Venerable Frank S. Morehouse, retired from office, having been Archdeacon for eleven years. From the large assemblage of delegates one cordial note of appreciation for his splendid service was sounded and a unified mark of affection expressed. He leaves the Archdeaconry to assume the rectorship of St. James' Church, New London, Conn. His successor, recommended to the Bishop for confirmation, is the Rev. William H. Jepson, pastor of St. Luke's Church, in which the session was held.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Largest Assemblage in History of Diocese.

Forty-six hundred persons, the greatest number ever assembled under the auspices of the Church at one time in the history of the diocese, met in Forward Movement Mass Meetings Sunday night, October 27, in three diocesan centers, Harrisburg, Williamsport and Altoona. The meeting in the State Education Building in Harrisburg, where 2,100 persons, including a choir of 500, filled the large forum, was addressed by the Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Chairman of the Forward Movement Commission; Mr. Charles P. Taft, of Cincinnati, member of the Forward Movement Commisson, and the Rt. Rev. Wyatt Brown, Bishop of the diocese. The Rev. Arthur C. W. Pfaffko was chairman of the meeting. A priest of the Macedonian-Bulgarian Church and a priest of the Rumanian Church in their vestments walked together in the procession. The meeting was broadcast from a local radio station. Fourteen hundred persons, including a choir of 350, filled the Capitol Theatre in Williamsport, where the speakers were the Rev. Oliver J. Hart, D. D., of St. John's, Washington, D. C., and Dr. Larkin Glazebrook, member of the Commission on Evangelism. The Rev. J. Moulton Thomas was chairman of the meeting. Eleven hundred persons, including a choir of 150, packed St. Luke's Church, Altoona. The speakers here were the Rev. Don Frank Fenn, D. D., of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, and Mr. John I. Hartman, of Lancaster, member of the Forward Movement Commission. Canon Lewis D. Gottschall was chairman of the Altoona meeting.

New Memorial Organ Dedicated.

A new memorial organ, erected by M. P. Moller, of Hagerstown, Md., the gift of Miss Helen Kapp, in St. Mark's Church, Northumberland, the Rev. George H. Toadvine, Jr., vicar, was dedicated on the evening of St. Luke's Day by Bishop Wyatt Brown. The sermon was preached by the Bishop. The Rev. Herbert Connop and the Rev. William E. Kunkel, former vicars; Archdeacon Robert T. McCutchen and many of the clergy participated in the service. Professor J. Lewis Roberts, of Sunbury, gave an organ recital. After the service a reception was held at the home of Miss Kapp.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. M. S. Barnwell, D D., Coadjutor.

Executive Council Meets.

A meeting of the Executive Council was held at Christ Church, Savannah, October 25, preceded by meetings of the Departments. Only routine business was transacted, the meetings having been called primarily to set the budget for the coming year.

It was shown that the improved financial condition of the people in the diocese is reflected in increased and more consistent giving and the budget for the year was increased about $1,000 over last year's. Bishop Barnwell presided over the meetings, but Bishop Reese was present at several of them.

Bishop Reese Celebrated Eighty-first Birthday.

Bishop Reese spent October 23, his eighty-first birthday at his office in the morning and in the evening his family gave a buffet dinner in his honor at which, besides the immediate family, were Bishop and Mrs. Barnwell and the local clergy and their wives.

Bishop Reese received an overwhelmingly large number of congratulatory letters, telegrams and personal greetings from friends who love and admire him.

Y. P. F. Will Make Survey.

The Young People's Division of St. John's Church, Savannah, the Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, rector, has decided to have a social service program this year and is going to make a survey of the local industries, institutions, the housing problem, etc.

Rector's Sixth Anniversary Celebrated.

The congregation of St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Savannah, gave their rector and his wife, the Rev. Joseph Burton and Mrs. Burton, a surprise party Wednesday, October 30. The party took the form of a miscellaneous shower, and was in honor of his sixth anniversary as rector of the parish.

Julia St. Clair Moore.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Peace Services in Chicago.

At the instance of the Diocesan Department of Social Service, Dr. Herbert W. Prince, chairman, several peace services will be held in the diocese on November 10. A sectional service is scheduled for Church of the Epiphany in the evening, with west side parishes and choirs participating.

A special service in which foreign consuls and color guards will take part, will be at St. James' Church. In Lake Forest, at the Church of the Holy Spirit, Dr. Prince will have the American Legion and similar groups taking part in the service.

Canon Bell Has Mission.

The Church was urged to interest herself in politics and social problems by Canon Bernard Iddings Bell during a week's mission at St. Luke's Pro-Cathedral, Evanston.

Canon Bell commended the restlessness of youth at the present time, saying such is a sign of progress and an indication that the younger generation is seeking something in the way of a challenge to fill the vacuum individual lives.

"Our young people are living empty lives," said Canon Bell, "largely because the Church hasn't supplied a challenging task. Unless the Church does supply such, youth undoubtedly will turn to Bolshevism, Fascism and Hitlerism. These elements are religions, whether we like to admit it or not. They are a poor quality of religion, in our judgment, but they offer a way out of the empty existence for many."

Canon Bell proposed what he termed a "New Crusade for God," which he said would make religion a definite part of the daily life.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, D. D., Bishop.

Alumni of Virginia Seminary Hold Meeting. Dean Walace E. Rollins is Guest of Honor.

Alumni, sometime and present students of the Virginia Theological Seminary at Alexandria, who are now resident in the North Carolina Dioceses, gathered in annual session at Christ Church Parish House, Raleigh, yesterday.

In the absence of Bishop Edwin A. Penick, who found it impossible to be present, Bishop Thomas C. Darst of the Diocese of East Carolina was toastmaster at the meeting which followed the serving of a luncheon by the Christ Church Service League.

Dean Wallace E. Rollins of the Seminary, guest of honor, spoke on the improvements at the seminary, the changes that have taken place and plans for the future. Many of those present had been students at the seminary during the time that Dean Rollins has been at its head.

The Rev. David Yates, rector-elect of Saint Philip's Church, Durham, was reappointed secretary of the alumni association, and Raleigh designated as the place of meeting for the fall of 1936. In addition to that of Dean Rollins, there were impromptu speeches by several members of the group.

Announcement was made of the acceptance by the Rev. Henry F. Kloman of Farmville, of the chaplaincy of Saint Mary's School.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew Meets in Diocesan Assembly.

One hundred boys and young men attended the meeting of the Diocesan Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, held at St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, October 25. Practically every chapter in the diocese was represented and gratifying reports of progress were made. The Rt. Rev. W. Blair Roberts, D. D., Bishop of South Dakota, addressed the Assembly, telling of the work being done by the thirty Sioux Indian Brotherhood Chapters in his field. Leon C. Palmer, of Philadelphia, General Secretary, spoke on the challenge of the Forward Movement of the Church for earnest personal service by each man and boy, and showed how the Brotherhood Chapter in the parish can be made an effective agency for carrying out the program of the Forward Movement.

Following the public meeting, conferences with local leaders were held looking toward the holding of a provincial convention of the Brotherhood Chapters, followed by a series of conferences on life adjustment problems of youth.

Church Clubs Meet.

Men of the Church were called upon to combat compromise and to stand firmly for their Christian beliefs in business and social life by representatives of Church Clubs at the thirty-third annual conference of the Federation of Church Clubs, held in Cleveland last week.

"We ask the earnest and prayerful support of our Bishops and other clergy in bringing to laymen a deeper sense of their material and spiritual obligations to the Church and the Master in these days when religion is being challenged as never before, and a general breakdown in the moral fabric of our society seems to threaten," declare resolutions adopted by the conference.

"We challenge the men of the Church to combat the spirit of compromise which is rampant on every hand, in our churches and without. We ask them to stand firmly for Christian principles in business, in the home and in social contacts."

The conference took steps toward the establishment of a permanent, full-time office of the Federation in New York or Washington.

DELAWARE.

Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop.

Harvest Home Festival.

The Bishop made his usual fall visit to Sussex County on October 27, and went to old Prince George Church, Dagsbro, where a church full of people met him on a lovely afternoon. The service was a Harvest Home festival, and it is the plan to hold one such service each year. There is also a plan on foot to have three big services in the three old churches in the county—Rogation Day at St. George's; Whitsunday at Old Christ Church, and the Harvest Home service at Prince George.

St. Andrew's Dedicated.

On Sunday, October 27, the Bishop visited and dedicated St. Andrew's Community Centre, which was built to replace the old church that was burned in 1933. Here the church is that happy combination of a church and a plant that meets all the social and religious requirements of the people.

* * *

October 24 and 25 will stand out as great days in the diocese throughout next year, for the clergy and a fine group of lay men and women met the Bishop and a budget of expectancies was made and then it was spent in a tentative program so that every place in the diocese knows what it ought to try to give and will know what assistance to expect from the general budget of the diocese. Some very decided steps were taken towards a larger social work in connection with the rural life of the diocese. There is a large tenant farm population in the diocese and these people have become isolated until their social conditions are in need of some drastic help. The clergy of Sussex County have formed a deanery and are trying to work so that every acre of the county will be covered as far as is possible in so thickly settled a country; the average farm has only 83 acres. Many of the rural children are in need of clinical attention, but there is only one hospital in the county.

The Church Schools of Sussex County are going to enter the International School at Georgetown, November 8 to December 13. The Rev. Joseph Wood, the rector of St. John's, Milton, is the dean of the school.

A memorial service for the late Bishop Gailor was held at St. Mary's Cathedral, Memphis, All Saints' Day. The Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, Bishop of the diocese, delivered the address.

Service of Installation.

The Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon was installed as Fourth Bishop of the Diocese of Tennessee Sunday night, November 3, in St. Mary's Cathedral, Memphis. Clerical and lay representatives from many of the parishes and missions of the diocese were present for the service. The Very Rev. Israel Noe, dean of the Cathedral, was the officiant at the service. The Bishop was conducted to his chair by the dean and by the Chancellor of the diocese, S. Bartow Strang, of Chattanooga.

Convocation of East Tennessee.

Characterized by a feeling of greater confidence than has been displayed in years, the Convocation of East Tennessee met in St. John's Church, Knoxville, October 23 and 24. The reports of all the parishes and missions contained some mention of the Forward Movement and what it has accomplished among them. Every mission and mission station was reported to be having services regularly.

The Convocation opened with a conference of the clergy on certain parish problems and Convocation plans. This meeting was held at the Tyson Memorial Student Center, the old home of Senator Tyson, recently given to the diocese by Mrs. Kenneth Gilpin, of Millwood, Va., daughter of Senator and Mrs. Tyson. It was decided that Convocation could be greatly improved if there were less sameness in the reports of the clergy and if practical problems were presented, rather than the conventional

For the Southern Churchman.

HOW SHALL I KNOW?

Monica Williams.

How shall I know what God wants me to do,
What I should say—where I should go:
Where is He whom you say is near,
How shall I know 'tis His voice I hear,
How shall I know 'tis His hand you say
Is waiting to lead me into His Way?
How shall I know His eyes though bright,
You say, with true inward light;
How shall I know, for many there be
That look just the same—just the same, to me.
So how shall I know?

Will you not listen then, while I speak,
For Jesus will come to those who seek,
Not that I know Christ, as I should,
Nor can show you Him at all, if I would,
But through me He may point you to the Way,
For it may be me He will use today;
If He come through me, I will not know.
If through praise or reproof, then lovingly so,
For 'tis only through Love, Christ comes to men,
And only through Love—they look back again,
With eyes that can see and ears that can hear
And see and know that the Christ is near.
Oh, listen, dear Friend, if you'd see His face
The Christ is here and in every place;
He lives in you and even in me.
But He only comes forth, when we love, you see,
Both ourselves and others—for all are—He,
Don't you see—don't you see?
'Tis "He" we should love in that which is "I",
Then all things for self, just for self, we'll deny,
And all things to others for which they have need,
As to Christ, we will lovingly give our first heed.

"But how do I know what God wants me to do?"
You ask again and quite rightly so;
Oh, first be sure that your heart is sincere
For the secret is great and the price is dear—
For, following Christ demands that you give,
Not half, but all, if in Him you will live.
First be sure that you want to know Him,
Truly to see, though your eyes be now dim.
Truly to know what He wants you to do—
What He wants you to speak or where to go.
In this at least be well assured,
For it is only thus, you will find the Lord.
God never forces His children to come,
He makes only conditions whereby Life is won!
Oh, make up your mind you want to find Him,
Then you'll win—you will win!

Now begin at the bottom, right at the start,
Just as you do in any art.
The ladder is strong that you must climb
For faith forms the beams of the upward line.
And holds the cross-beams which in space
Would be nothing to us without her embrace;
But within her hold they are steps to tread,
Upward the Way, the Saviour led.
The cross-beams are rounds of daily tasks,
But when bound by faith they wear different masks.
Within the first is the step of prayer.
Which can change all outward look of care
Here we will pause awhile and rest,
For this of all tasks is the one most blessed.
Oh, let us learn to pray aright,
For through prayer, most of all, comes inward light.
Indeed all we do must through prayer be made strong,
For this is the way God helps us along.

Oh, let us now pray as Christ taught us to pray,
Not seeking for self, but Gods Kingdom each day;
For this is the secret, there's nothing beside,
In this truth alone, all good doth abide.
But here upon Faith you must grasp with firm hold,
And climb—and be bold—Oh, be bold!
It's not easy to pray that God's Kingdom shall come,
That His will for you and in all, be done,
Remember, through all, God careth for thee.
As rain and the sunshine are one in God's plan,
So sorrow and joy are alike good for man.
'Tis we who are thinking of self we would please,
But remember, all good comes not through self-ease;
All good comes at last to those who persist,
Oh, read of this truth in Gods Word, if ye wist.
Tis we who are selfish and see not the Way,
We ourselves blind and like sheep go astray.

But now come back to the work of prayer,
And you will find God waiting there;
vHe is waiting to show you what to do,
Oh, praise Him, bless Him and thank Him, too:
Then stop and listen a thought has come
Of a task unfinished, which should be done.
A word of praise which might well be said
To lighten some sorrow you gave instead.
Ah! do you know tis His voice you hear—
Are not those loving accents clear?
And as you arise and go do His will
A peace will invade you, a new joy, thrill:
And you will know through each daily round—
The Way through which the Christ is found—
You will know—You will know.

The Glory of the Unfathomable.

We need to be on our guard against the oft-repeated plea—which is made with a good deal of winsomeness and sincerity—that our holy religion needs to be simplified and brought within the reach of "the man in the street." The Gospel itself, of course, is essentially lucid and simple. It is a message to wayfaring men: it announces something which is within their competence and understanding, and within their power to appropriate. This does not mean, however, that it will be possible for them, in this finite existence, to understand all the deep, underlying truths of the Gospel, even though they may wait with patience for the fulfillment of the promise that what they know not now they shall know hereafter. It is, indeed, a good thing, from time to time, to realize that there are some facts in our holy religion which we can receive, but cannot fathom. Lord Balfour once said that if we could understand everything about God, God would at once cease to exist. We cannot compress the infinite ocean of the Godhead into a sentence, or even into a creed, however long and elaborate. One of the joys of eternity is that we shall continue to explore the glorious Person of Christ, and continue to know more deeply the nature and the meaning of His work for sinful men.

As an illustration of the unfathomable, we may take a statement which fell from our Saviour's lips: "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father" (John 16:28). Four thoughts are suggested by His words, and each thought is like some abysmal depth. We can look down a little way: we can see something of the mystery, but we cannot fathom the deeps.

The first depth we cannot fathom is our Lord's statement: "I came forth from the father." It is a little strange that while so many thousands of sermons have been published in Christian periodicals and in book form, so few sermons have been preached upon the words we have quoted. Not only so, but few of us can remember ever hearing a sermon preached about Christ's eternal pre-existence. This is not to suggest that the omission is equivalent to a denial, but it does seem to indicate that other phases of our Lord's life make a greater appeal to the popular mind. We have all listened to many sermons about the Man of Nazareth, and, of course, a great many about the Man of Sorrows, who was crucified at Calvary. Our Lord has been set forth as Teacher, and Leader, and Saviour; but very few preachers devote any time in the pulpit to a consideration of the place and position occupied by our Lord Jesus Christ before His advent to our world.

In support of this, we may think of the many Lives of Christ that have been written. The Nineteenth Century witnessed a remarkable revival of interest in the life of Christ, and nearly all the notable biographies of Jesus were published during that century. We have only to mention the names of Renan, Strauss, Edersheim, Farrar, Hanna, and many others. Of recent times we have had helpful volumes along the same line from David Smith, R. J. Campbell, Giovanni Papini and Bruce Barton. Great as is our debt to all these various authors for the way in which they have set forth the earthly life of Jesus, there is, for the most part, one significant omission: their stories do not begin early enough: they do not go back far enough. They begin with the Nativity of Jesus: they do not begin with His eternal pre-existence.

For some students it seems hard to believe that their Saviour, the meek and lowly Man of Nazareth, was from all eternity alongside the bosom of the Father. It seems difficult to believe that Christ has always been the timeless, limitless Son of God. Even the ordinary historic tenses do not apply to Him, for on one occasion He made a statement which, on the lips of another, would have been bad grammar or worse sense: "Before Abraham was, I am." The only way in which we can describe the Lord Jesus with theological exactitude is to speak of Him as He "which was, and is, and is to come." He is the eternal I am. He always has been. He is from all eternity. All that He did and all that He became during the days of His flesh must be viewed in the light of that eternal preexistence. While He is the Lamb slain, He is the Lamb slain from the foundations of the world. He is from everlasting to everlasting: He is from the vanishing-point to the vanishing-point. When He came to our earth, He came from the Father

This is a depth of truth into which we can see a little way, but it is a depth we cannot fathom. It will, however, do one practical thing for us: it will make Unitarianism for ever impossible. Of no other man can we say that he was from all eternity. We cannot speak in the same way of the eternal pre-existence of Confucius or Socrates. We know that Jesus is more than a man because His origin was so different from the origin of man. His biography must begin where no other biography can begin: it must begin before He was born of a woman, and born under the law. Once we grasp the profound truth of the eternal pre-existence of Christ, we shall be quite sound on the deity of our Lord.

Here is a second truth we cannot fathom: "And am come into the world." That phrase clearly indicates His Incarnation and His human birth. It speaks to us of a specific kind of entrance into this world of sin and woe. It tells us that God became manifest in the flesh. It reminds us that, at a specific moment of time, God sent forth His Son born of a woman.

This is brought out with great clearness in the Greek of St. John's Gospel, where we read that "in the beginning He was." And there we have the thought of continuous existence. But in the fulness of time He came to be. And there we have the thought of His Incarnation. We shall never be able fully to fathom this profound mystery. He who was from all eternity, became Man for us men and for our salvation. He became the God-Man, and in His sacred Person eternity and time were wedded: Divinity and Humanity kissed each other. It was the supreme miracle of history: it had never happened before: it will never happen again. He who was with the Father from all eternity: He who was co-equal with God: He who was the Second Person in the Blessed Trinity—came into the world, and because He came, the world has been different ever since.

It is certain that nothing would more quickly give us a right view of the world, and of the right relationships that men should have with each other, than a new understanding of the Incarnation. Such a wonderful emergence in the realm of time must involve results which have not yet been realized. This, however, is an aspect of Christian truth with which we are increasingly familiar in these days. Even those who do not accept the orthodox position of the Christian faith, are persuaded that in the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ we have a clue to the solution of world problems which, if accepted and used, would lead us onward to peace and brotherhood.

BE LISTENING.

Among the things that this day brings
Will come to you a call,
The which, unless you're listening,
You may not hear at all:
Lest it be very soft and low,
Whate'er you do, where'er you go,
Be listening.

Then whatsoe'er the call may be,
To service small or great,
To cross the seas and speak God's love,
To smile, to rule a state—
When God shall come and say to you,
"Here is the thing that you must do,"
Be listening.

Hymnals and Prayer Books

FOR

Thanksgiving and Christmas

With the approach of Thanksgiving and Christmas each parish should make provision for an ample supply of Hymnals and Prayer Books. A gift of a number of copies might be made by some generous parishioner or by groups within the parish.

In the interest of improved congregational singing, the General Convention has urged all churches to place the musical edition of the Hymnal in the hands of the congregation so far as possible.

As publishers of the authorized and approved Hymnal of the Church, as well as the Prayer Book, in behalf of the Church Pension Fund, we solicit your order.

HYMNALS

Standard Musical Edition at $1.20 per copy (or $1.00 per copy in lots of 100 or more .

Special Choir Edition, heavily reinforced, at $1.50 per copy (or $1.30 per copy in lots of 100 or more).

Word Edition in red or blue cloth at 40 cents per copy.

PRAYER BOOKS

Pew Edition, 3½x5½, in various colors, at 35 cents per copy.

Chancel Edition, 5x7½, in various colors, and with larger type, at 60 cents per copy.

Gopal Finds the Thieves.

(Founded on fact.)

Gopal Singh looked up from his games on the river bank and saw that the sun had set. The twinkling lights of the ferryboats were dancing up and down on the waters. He waved good-bye to his companions, wriggled his toes in the shallow water to clean off some of the mud, and ran off toward the town.

Supper would be over by now, and he had really meant to be on time, for it didn't help his family to believe in the "Jesus doctrine" if he kept on being late for the evening meal. His mother had warned him only that evening and said that he must stop going to the mission Sunday school, if he were not back early.

As Gopal ran along it seemed as if he and the night were having a race together. There had been a faint, pink glow in the west when he stopped his game, but now tiny oil lamps were flickering in the bazaar streets. As he ran he happened to cut his toe against a sharp stone. In a dark archway hidden from all passers-by he looked at his foot, and then he heard voices as two men walked past, so near that Gopal heard his father's name mentioned.

"Yes, I know the money is there in the house. Did not I see Matthma Ram at the goldsmith's shop changing all his family jewels into money?"

Then the men turned a corner and Gopal heard no more. Still wondering what it meant, he reached his own courtyard to find the door shut. He thumped hard on the outside panels, for he could hear his mother scouring the brass supper trays ,and his sister Loti in the kitchen. After a time the door was opened and his mother looked very vexed at her small, mud-stained son.

"Go wash," she said sternly, "the supper is all eaten and cleared away." Gopal hurried over to where a big pot of water stood at one side of the house, and when he was clean he called out in Indian fashion, "Bring food!" His eldest sister brought him some chapati (flour and water pancakes) and a heaped dish of rice.

"It is a pity you are so often late," said Loti; then she whispered, "Great news, Brother, our father starts off on a long journey to Madras tomorrow. I head him tell our mother he is going to buy a shop there, and if all goes well we shall soon leave this poor little mud-walled place for a fine stone house in the city."

"Oh! Loti, when shall we go there? Won't it take a lot of rupees for us to travel all that way?"

"Yes," said his sister, "almost as many rupees as there are rice grains in your bowl. But our father can get nothing to do here, and some relative in Madras told him of this good bargain, so he must go quickly to secure it." Then, with a swift glance around, she whispered, "When our father locked the inner room door this morning I peeped through the little hole in the wall, and I saw him scoop up the mud floor and take out the treasure box that guards our jewels. He put them all into a leather bag and went out. Oh, dear, what will happen when I become a bride—not a gold anklet, not even a nose-ring? No one will want a beggar-girl like me," and Loti sighed.

"Don't worry, Loti, by the time your wedding day arrives our father will have made piles of rupees in Madras." Just then their mother called, "Time to sleep!" and soon the house was still for every one was tired out after a hot, sultry day.

Gopal slept in a little room with Loti which was near the courtyard door and opened on to the street. As a rule nothing ever awakened him till their mother loudly announced the coming of the day and flung cold water on his face. Tonight, however, Gopal fell asleep only to wake and find the moonlight streaming through the small square hol which served as a window. Through it he could see the courtyard and everything as plainly as if it were daylight. He lay half awake, half dreaming of the wonderful new life in the city to which they might all be going so soon. Then in a flash he found himself wide awake listening, for he heard a strange scraping, cutting noise not far from the window. Getting up from his charpoy ("string bed") without disturbing his sister he crept over to the window. Then came the sound of soft whispers, "Who sleeps there? Look quick, and see!" He flattened himself low against the wall as a head filled the window space. Happily Loti was snoring loudly. Then the man vanished, and Gopal shivered with fear.

He knew the voice belonged to one of the men he had seen in the dark archway, and now they had come to steal his father's money. They were dacoits (armed robbers), and would possibly kill or wound him if he gave the alarm. Now they had begun to cut through the wall into his father's room. Gopal opened the door softly and peered out, his heart beating wildly. "O Jesus, give me strength-of-heart," he prayed. "My father says Christians are weak-of-spirit. Help me to show him you can make me brave."

There was no time to lose, for the dacoits were already entering the room. Across the courtyard were rooms occupied by some relatives, but, how could Gopal get over without being seen, as one thief was standing by his father's window? Waiting till the man turned slightly, Gopal dashed over, flinging himself against the opposite door as he called out, "Dacoits! Dacoits!" A big lame crow, a family pet, in a tree above added to his frantic cries. Oh! would they never open the door? thought Gopal as he saw the thieves tumbling out and making toward him. Just as they reached him, the house door was swung open and his uncle and cousins came rushing out. The dacoits just managed to get away, without stealing anything.

"Truly, my son, you have saved your father tonight. The money means almost our last hope, for had it been stolen I could never have got enough together to buy the shop in Madras. You showed a brave spirit, and I am proud of my son," said his father, and Gopal looked very happy.

"I, too, rejoice, my father, but it was God who helped me to throw off my fears, for my heart trembled like a leaf."

"Yet thou didst not obey them, my son; truly, the 'Jesus religion' must be better than I thought, if it can make even a small, weak boy act like a lion. I shall read your book on my long journey which, but for you, my son, I should not have been able to take."

Gopal joyfully lent his New Testament, and while he prayed at home his father carefully read it on his way. Soon after Gopal's father was baptized and became a faithful Christian.

School Troubles.

Only a week of school has gone—and it seems like a year!" sighed David.

"Don't talk that way yet," said Jonathan—"cheer up, and get ready for the ten months ahead!"

Now David and Jonathan—as you might guess by their names—were the best friends in the world. Jonathan's real name was John, of course; but his uncle had named him Jonathan when he was five years old, because he and David were always together; and Jonathan he had been in the village ever since.

"No wonder you like school," Jonathan," said David—"you're smart. But I'm dumb, I never can learn anything—Teacher said so."

Jonathan looked up quickly. "When did she say that?" he asked.

"W-well," said David, his face turning red as Jonathan's honest blue eyes looked straight at him, "sh-she didn't exactly say that. She said she was afraid if I didn't change my ways, I—I'd never make much of a man."

"What's that got to do with being smart or dumb?" said Jonathan, looking at him keenly. "I'm afraid I know what Teacher meant, David."

"I got to go," said David quickly, with a frightened look, grabbing for his cap. "Got to go to the store for Mother before supper."

"Poor old Dave," said Jonathan, looking after him. "It isn't like him to fall into such tricks as that. Wonder if I can help him to get over it."

The next night David had the same story to tell about school, and the next, and the next. But he told his mother—he didn't dare to tell Jonathan.

"Wonder what's the matter with David," said little Joyce Farley to Jonathan one day at recess. "He's got such a sneaky look. Even when he gets his problems right, and Teacher gives him 100, he looks so funny."

"Sh-h," said Jonathan, looking round. "I'm worried about David, Joyce, but I'm waiting for my chance."

That afternoon Teacher wrote in beautiful letters on the blackboard, "An honest man's the noblest work of God." She told the children to write it in their copy-books, over and over again—to fill a whole page with it. She had never asked them to do anything like that before, and the children thought it very queer.

Jonathan happened to glance over at David, and his face was as red as a peony. Just then Teacher strolled by, and bent over David's desk to whisper, "Are you sick, David?" He murmured, "No'm," without looking up, and scribbled on.

When school was out, David rushed home without even looking at Jonathan. Now, Jonathan was a little hurt; for he and David had gone home from school together every day since they were five years old. But he was a manly lad, and only said to himself, "David's in trouble—wish I could help him."

David and Jonathan had a private mailbox in the hedge, and that evening Jonathan slipped in a letter. On the envelope was scrawled in big boyish letters, Master David Hall. This is what the letter said:

Dear David:

I feel sorry for you, old pal, because you're in trouble. Don't hide it, Dave, but out with it—that's the best way, my mother told me so. Be a man—tell it out—and Teacher and the rest of us will trust you as much as ever.

Yours ever,
Jonathan.

David ran sobbing to his room, and his mother found him there late that evening. He looked at her piteously, and handed her Jonathan's letter. They had a long talk then, and David told her just what his trouble was—every bit of it.

The next morning at school, just after the chapter and prayer, David walked up to Teacher's desk. He was trembling, but his shoulders were squared back like a man's.

"Teacher," said David in a clear voice, "I have been copying my answers from Joyce—every single day—and—I'll—never—do—it—again." He spoke very fast, and big tears rolled down his face.

Teacher looked kindly into his eyes, and putting her hand on his head said gently, "That's my brave man, David—I asked God to help you to do it. We will gladly forgive him—will we not, boys and girls?"

"Yes, yes!" cried the children whose tender little hearts were touched. Jonathan threw up his eraser and caught it and shouted, "Hurrah!" (And Teacher forgave him.) And big Jack, in the back seat, said in his deep voice, "An honest man's the noblest work of God!"

A Queer Barber Shop.

James and Ross were waiting their turn in the barber shop. They were watching the barber use the electric clippers.

"Keen way to trim hair," remarked James.

"I'd say," agreed Ross, "but you should see the barber shop at Uncle Frank's. I'm going to help him next week after school closes."

"You!" laughed James. "Hey, fellows," he called to the boys in the barber chairs, "hear that? Ross says he's going to turn barber down on the farm next week."

"Lucky fellow," mumbled George.

Ross chuckled. "Bet you I have more fun than you do! I say, James, ask your mother to let you go with me."

All the week James teased Ross about the barber shop on the farm, but Ross only laughed, and said, "Better come along. More fun than staying in town."

James didn't think so, but he was so curious that the day after school closed found him on the way with Ross.

"Here we are," said Ross, as the car turned into a drive shaded with old elms. "Welcome to the barber shop!"

"And welcome to strawberry shortcake," added Uncle Frank.

All during dinner James wondered what the men meant as they talked of sheep dips and rounding up the flocks in the north and west fields; but he would not ask one question.

After all the shortcake had disappeared, the boys followed them out to the long shearing sheds. Along one side were many clippers attached to tiny electric motors. The men were bringing in the sheep, one to each man.

James began to chuckle. "Now I know what you meant by a barber shop on the farm, you old rascal."

"What's that?" asked Uncle Frank.

"Why, sir," answered James, "Ross has been telling me all the week he was going to work in a barber shop on the farm. I couldn't think what he meant."

Uncle Frank laughed. "I promised Ross last year he might help with the shearing this summer. He did well rounding up sheep last year. Here you are, Ross," he added, as he walked over to the end of the row of men and sheep. "Let's see what you can do."

Ross grasped the clippers, while Uncle Frank held the sheep. The wool came off in sheets and fell to the floor as Ross guided the buzzing clippers over the body of the sheep.

"Not so bad for the first one," said his uncle. Ross, however, was not satisfied, for it had taken him twice as long as it did the men to clip the wool.

"Here's your next one. You can do it alone, I think," and Uncle Frank walked down the long row, inspecting the wool as it was piled deeper and still deeper on the other side of the shed.

The afternoon went by quickly. James and Ross were glad when suppertime came.

"Do you suppose your uncle will let me help?" asked James, as he tumbled into bed that first night.

"I think so," sleepily replied Ross.

It seemed only a short time till they heard someone calling. "Hey, you fellows! Roll out! I need you to help round up sheep this morning. James can ride Gray."

A little later, with breakfast over, the boys mounted the ponies and rode off to the north field.

"Whew!" exclaimed James, "riding isn't so easy as I thought."

"Oh, you'll soon learn," returned Ross. Lots of fun, you know."

The boys topped the rising ground where the north field began. "I say, Ross," exclaimed James, "how many sheep does your uncle own?"

"Oh, around a thousand, I think. Now we must help the men over here." They soon were very busy cutting out part of the flock. At last, with the help of the big collie, the sheep were going down the long lane to the shearing sheds. The boys followed close after.

"Good work, boys," said Uncle Frank. "This afternoon, Ross, you show James around, and then tomorrow I shall need your help again."

"Let's watch the sorters," suggested Ross. "Uncle sorts his wool into three piles. One is the wool from the old sheep, another that of the yearlings, and this is from the lambs. The fleeces are fine this year, I heard the men say."

"What kind of sheep are these?" asked James.

"Merinos. Their wool is shorter and brings a better price than that from some other kinds of sheep. Short wool makes better cloth, too, than long wool."

The boys watched the men baling the wool to ship to the mills. Bale after bale was piled onto the big trucks, ready for the trip to the depot.

"Uncle sends his wool to mills in Connecticut. He will have a lot to send this year."

"Wasn't it in a Connecitcut mill that George Washington ordered the goods for the suit he wore when he made his first speech in Congress?" asked James. "Hello!" he exclaimed, before Ross could answer. "What's going on here? What are they doing with that water?"

"Where? Oh, those are the sheep troughs where the sheep are dipped to free them from insects and diseases. The men drive the sheep into the trough at this end. Tomorrow you and I are to keep the sheep walking through the trough into this big yard, where they dry off. They put poison in the water, you know, so we have to keep the sheep moving."

The boys stood watching the men as Uncle Frank came along. "Ross, you take Red's place while he helps load the trucks. Then you boys may go to the depot with me."

The big trucks went rumbling to town. "Well," asked Uncle Frank, as they rode along, "how do you like it on a sheep farm, James?"

James grinned. "Just fine, sir. I'd like to stay longer."

"We will drive around and you can ask your mother."

It did not take long to get his mother's consent, and all summer James worked with Ross and the men. He learned to ride, and he could sort wool so well that the old sorter remarked, "You'll do, for a young un," which was high praise for James from him.

Not only did he learn how sheep raising was carried on on this big farm, but he learned that thousands and thousands of acres in Argentina, Mexico, Australia and South Africa are devoted to sheep raising. He learned that more wool clothing is worn in this country than any other, and that millions of pounds of wool are imported every year.

He found out also that in some countries sheep are kept for their milk, from which cheese is made, and that in New Zealand sheep are raised largely for mutton.

"Well, James," said Uncle Frank, "do you want to spend another summer on the farm?"

"I surely do. I've learned more than I did last year in school, and had heaps of fun besides."

"Be sure you come back in time for the first shortcake next summer," said Aunt Grace, as the car took the boys back to their homes and school.—

For the Southern Churchman.

I MUST BE RETURNING.

Florence Van Fleet Lyman.

A day dull at its dawning
Made me feel wistful too
Till I beheld up in the sky
The sun a-shining through.

The rays so brightly radiant
Lit with glory below,
This earth that I live on
And its sheltering I know.

And the song birds hymned praises
And breath of all the flowers
The wind carried as incense
To sweeten the hours.

Being grateful, I bethought me
That from my heart and soul
I must be returning
Thanks for the day and its gold.

During a recent examination at a public school one of the questions set was the following:

"If King Alfred were alive today, what would be his views on (a) Conscription, (b) Universal Suffrage, (c) the Press, (d) Polo?"

A boy with a very logical and practical turn of mind wrote:

"If King Alfred were alive today, he would be too old to take any interest in any of these things." —Ex.

Hospital Trustees and Members Elected.

Members of Bishop Clarkson Memorial Hospital Association elected thirty new members of the Association recently. These are outstanding professional and business people from every part of the state. They in turn elect the Hospital Trustees of whom the Bishop of the diocese is always the chairman. The resignation of Mrs. Jessie Lamb MacDonald, who has been superintendent since 1929, was announced, and the appointment of Miss Mildred Constantine of Cambridge, Mass., as her successor. Mrs. MacDonald is retiring and will live in London, Ontario, her former home. A dinner was given at the Paxton Hotel to these two ladies last Saturday by the Trustees and Medical Staff of the Hospital. It was announced that during Mrs. MacDonald's period of service the Endowment and Building Funds have been materially increased and the Nurses' Training School brought to a very high state of efficiency. Clarkson Hospital, Omaha, has been approved by the American College of Surgeons, at a recent Hospital Standardization Conference in San Francisco.

Personal Notes

Change of Address.

The address of the Rt. Rev. John McKim, D. D., will be Lunalilo Street, Honolulu, Hawaii, after November 15, 1935.

Captain Sydney K. Evans Will Join the Staff of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

The Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of New York, has adnnounced the appointment of Captain Sydney K. Evans (Ch. C., U. S. N., Retired), to the Staff of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City.

Chaplain Evans retired from active duty on October 1, shortly after completing his sixth year in the Bureau of Navigation as Head of the Chaplains' Division, his previous post being the Naval Academy, of which he was Chaplain more than twelve years.

When appointed in the Navy by President Theodore Roosevelt in 1907, on the recommendations of the Bishops of New York, Washington and Central Pennsylvania, he was an assistant at the Church of the Heavenly Rest, New York City, and retained his membership in the Diocese of New York during his entire Naval career. He will take up his duties at the Cathedral about December 1.

Government Appointment.

The Ven. Henry Jouette Geiger, Archdeacon of the Convocation of East Tennessee, has recently been appointed as Chaplain to the Veteran's Hospital, Johnson City, Tennessee. His chaplaincy allows him time to continue his services to some of the places which he has served in the past.

Becomes Honorary Canon.

The Rev. Stuart F. Gast, rector of St. Paul's, Bloomsburg, Penn., has been appointed an Honorary Canon of St. Stephen's Cathedral, Harrisbug, Penn., to fill the vacancy caused by Canon Hiram R. Bennett becoming Dean of St. John's Cathedral, Wilmington, Del.

Accepts Post as Chaplain of St. Mary's School.

The Rev. Henry Fletcher Kloman has accepted the chaplaincy of St. Mary's School, Raleigh, N. C., for the remainder of the school year.

The new chaplain will begin his duties November 10.

Mr. Kloman, veteran of the Church, succeeds the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, young minister who resigned last spring.

The new chaplain's last charge was in Cumberland, Md. Since he graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary he has held charges in Baltimore and other Maryland cities, in Virginia, in Maine and in North Dakota, where he was dean of the Fargo Cathedral from 1916 to 1932. During the World War he served overseas as chaplain for the American Red Cross and now holds the rank of major and chaplain in the Officers Reserve.

Calls Accepted.

The Rev. Ernest E. Piper, assistant at St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City, has accepted a call of the vestry of Christ Church, Williamsport, Pa., to become rector. He expects to take charge the first Sunday in Advent.

The Rev. E. Victor Kennan, for the past five years rector of Grace Church, Freeport, Illinois, has accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Des Moines, Iowa. Mr. Kennan will take up his duties at St. Paul's on December 9. At the Des Moines Parish, Mr. Kennan will succeed the Rev. Harry S. Longley, Jr.

The Rev. George Wilson, formerly of the Diocese of Chicago, has been called as rector of St. Paul's Church, Fairfield, Conn. He has been serving in Texas.

Does Every Churchman Know This?

THE asking Program and Budget of the General Church for 1936 was set by the General Convention at $2,700,000. To restore the work of the General Church to the level of this figure will require an income from pledges of $1,967,474. The balance will be provided by an income from the United Thank Offering, trust funds and miscellaneous sources.

The sum of the Objectives which the dioceses have adopted for this year's Canvass, in lieu of Quotas mathematically calculated, is $1,429,201.

This means that the people of the Church are being asked by the dioceses for the support of the General Church Program of 1936 $538,273 less than the amount needed to restore the work to the $2,700,000 level.

What is perhaps more important is that the dioceses are asking less than the amount needed to hold the General Church Program where it was pledged by the General Convention.

The amount needed from pledges to keep the present Emergency Schedule in effect in 1936 is $1,580,589. The sum of the Objectives reported by the dioceses to the National Council is $151,288 short of this figure.

The Church should realize, therefore, at this date, before the beginning of the Canvass, that even though the diocesan Objectives are attained in full and subsequently paid 100%, the National Council, meeting on February 11, 1936, will lack approximately $150,000 of the amount needed to balance the Emergency Schedule.

Will the dioceses secure for General Missions an amount which is $150,000 greater than the sum of the Objectives which they have accepted?

If not, will our Church consent to a further cut of its General Work of $150,000 below the Emergency Schedule; a schedule that is $1,381,918 below the actual expenditures of 1931?

The Every Member Canvass is a Church-wide referendum. It will settle the question of the Budget for 1936 long before the National Council meets next February. There are three choices:

1. The Program and Budget of Restoration—Figures set by the General Convention, $2,700,000. The sum of the Objectives is $583,273 less than the amount needed.

2. The Stand-Still Program and Budget—An Emergency Schedule set by General Convention at $2,313,115. The sum of the Objectives is $151,288 less than the amount needed.

3. The Program and Budget of Disaster—Failure by the Church in this Canvass to provide the funds needed to maintain work at the figure of the Emergency Schedule. General Convention ordered "that the National Council shall under no circumstances incur debt to meet the shortage, but shall make such reductions in appropriations as may be necessary to bring them within expected receipts reduced by a reasonable factor of safety."

An increase of 11% in the pledges for 1936 will raise the Budget and work of the general Church above the stand-still basis it occupies at present.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

This is a Christian duty—that we rejoice. Joy is "the flag hoisted to signify that Christ is believed and loved indeed.

Bishop Chase once urged his clergy to be "pastoral students and student pastors."

The first evidence of the grace of God in a person's life is a longing for the salvation of others.

I do not know any way in the world to live above doubt except to live a high spiritual life. The clouds shadow the low lands. —Dr. J. B. Gambrell.

"Only in prayer and consecration can we be made efficient in life and effective in witness."

—The Sound of Trumpets.

I resolved that I would permit no man to narrow and degrade my soul by making me hate him.

—Booker T. Washington.

"It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinions; it is easy in solitude to live after our own; but the Great Man is he who in the midst of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude."

—Emerson.

To know we must be. To know music one has to be musical. To know art one must be artistic. To know Christ one must be Christlike, share His life, and to so share Him means eternal life in the life that now is.

—H. H. Rountree.

If we hesitate to bring politics into our religion, let us strive to bring our religion into politics.

—Robert Taylor.

Give, if thou canst, an alms; if not, afford, instead of that, a sweet, and gentle word. —Herrick.

I kneel to pray,
But know not what to say;
I cannot tell
What may be ill or well:
But as I look
Into Thy face or Book
I see a love
From which I cannot move:
And learn to rest
In this—Thy will is best:
—Mark Guy Pearse.

Not in a dim uncertainty I go;
What place have they for doubt whose past is filled
With witness of the power of God Himself?
Nay, rather, as I tread a path unknown,
I'll rest my soul upon this thing I know,
That God, who filled my past with certain good,
Is with me yet. This is enough for me.
—M. M. Dexter.

I believe that no morality based on secularism can be satisfactory. It is through the divine life in men, the Christ in us, that ethics belong to the eternal or spiritual world and that moral conduct becomes as it were the sacrament, the outward and visible sign of faith, hope, and love directed to a Being who in His nature sits above the conflict of right or wrong. What is relative and subjective in morality is thus anchored to absolute truth and goodness. Christianity is a divine life, not a divine science.

—Dean Inge.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED
By
REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

No Place for War.

Mr. Editor:

Please accept my personal thanks for your courageous and stimulating editorial, A Real Neutrality. Your statement, War Has no Place in Christianity, admits of no valid argument, and whosoever, by subtle casuistry or otherwise, endeavors to circumvent this burning truth, that "the tenets of the Master and those of Mars are antithetical," most certainly lays himself under the suspicion of being a protagonist of Erastianism, a role essayed by far too many clergy (?) during the Great War.

Be assured that a "saving remnant" joins you in your plea for peace and amity among nations and men, and God grant that professing Christians may speedily discern that legalized wholesale murder (and that for profit!) is incompatible with the Saviour's salient mandate, love one another (St. John 15:12).

With warm regards, and prayers for your continued success, I remain,

Rev. Ira Gharles Swanman.

Death Preferred.

Mr. Editor:

Mr. Swanman, in your October 19 issue, seems one of those remarkable men that cannot understand how anyone can prefer death to "a number of other things I could name," and asks that I name them. They are many, but I will satisfy his curiosity with a few, and, lest I promise too much I will mention five occasions on which I did prefer death, i. e., risked my life. That it was not taken was not my fault. I offered it.

1. A child was drowning, I went after it.

2. A child was thought to be in a burning building, I investigated.

3. My country was attacked by a foreign country, or men subsidized by them. I enlisted in order to do my bit in stopping the war being waged against us.

4. Believing that the surest way to invite disorder in a city is to abolish the police force, and in a nation, to disarm, I am doing my bit as a member of the Reserve Officers Corps of the Army, thus preferring death to inviting attack on my country.

5. A race riot was threatening, and I pledged myself to go unarmed to try to argue the Negroes into going home, if disorder actually broke out. I am glad I was not called on.

To sum up I preferred death to seeing innocent people die, whom I might save, or to seeing my country continuing to be attacked.

From the past or what has happened, we go to the future and I venture to state that under certain circumstances that have never arisen I believe I would choose death (1) to committing an action that would reflect disgrace on my country or my family, (2) to seeing any member of my family in disgrace, (3) to denying my Lord and Master.

In my opinion money is only of use when it may be spent and life is the same. Unless a man feels he can spend his life it is of no use to him or to anyone else. And in conclusion I will state that not only do I believe that ninety-nine out of one hundred people would likewise prefer death to these things, but that my questioner would be among the ninety-nine.

Possibly I should state forcibly, to avoid misquotation, that the above does not apply to suicide, which in my opinion is one of the greatest disgraces a man can bring on his family, unless his mind has gone as is usually the case.

"Letters to Laymen."

Mr. Editor:

In a recent edition of your paper I noted an editorial based upon certain remarks of an outstanding Layman. Not having the original statement before me I shall not attempt to answer my brother. I am however taking this opportunity to impress upon Laymen everywhere one fact;—it is not surprising that we are not more faithful and loyal members of His Church; as so few of us realize our duties, responsibilities—as well as our opportunities and privileges. Recently as a result of my earnest appeal the Morehouse Company has republished Bishop Anderson's "Leters to Laymen" in a very handy pamphlet (15 cents each; $1.20 a dozen). I wish that every clergyman would secure a sufficient number of this valuable booklet and present one to at least every member of his Vestry and that individual Laymen could secure a copy for their use. This is not intended as an advertisement of any book or company; but an earnest desire on my part to arouse our Laymen to a deeper appreciation of what the Church stands for. Away with secular—so-called Church Clubs—but more Parish Men's Clubs, whose purpose is the King's business.

Whittier's "Offense" of War.

Mr. Editor:

In the interesting article, "The English Bible in Public Life" (your issue of November 2, and credited to Mr. Philip Whitwell Wilson of the New York Times), mention is made of the poet Whittier as one of those who "flung themselves into the crusade against slavery." This serves to remind us that Whittier, professedly a Quaker and opposed to war, aided in Lincoln's war of invasion and conquest against the Southern States and peoples and against the principle of governmental "Self-Determination," preached by Woodrow Wilson during the World War and by Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence—a war waged to save the sectional and minority party of Lincoln, the whole course of which party had been to flout the solemn warnings of Washington and Jefferson against such "geographical discriminations" (aggressive sectionalism in politics) as fatal to the (Constitutional) Union of States.

During that war Lincoln's much cited but less understood "Proclamation of Emancipation" (which he applied to only some of the Negro slaves) was a war measure: like that of Royal Gov-

Tenure of Bishops.

The meeting of the House of Bishops in Houston brings to one's mind the whole polity of our Church in regard to the greatest ecclesiastical office. We have almost as many ideas on the function of bishops as we have people who think about bishops at all.

At this session a large number of bishops resigned. Usually, in our country, bishops have died in office, and we are not accustomed to resignations. We forget that translation and resignations are common in the mother Church of England. There it would seem that many a diocesan prefers to lead the residue of his life in study and many a good book has been produced by a retired scholarly bishop. But many bishops of England are scholars in the first place; schoolmasters having often been appointed "by the Crown," while generally our bishops are men who have been advanced from busy parochial life and have not had a book in mind on retirement.

Some of the theories that have been advanced are interesting. Bishop Johnson, in a recent number of The Witness, points out that a large number of our most successful bishops were elected when young in years. His contention is that the office of a bishop is naturally different from that of rector of a parish, and by selecting young men, the necessary experience is acquired that eventually may lead to greatness. The Living Church has suggested that we have too many bishops. But as Bishop Johnson remarks, it is almost impossible to prevent people from wanting bishops or to prevent clergy from wanting to be bishops. But it might seem that there is something in making them young enough to be able to grow and still be vigorous enough to use their experience after it is acquired.

Another theory advanced has been to limit the tenure of office of the bishop. One well known Bishop has suggested that no man should be actively a diocesan bishop after fifteen or twenty years. He claims that no matter how much of a genius a man may be, after twenty years he is burnt out and devoid of real leadership. He has many statistics to show that certain bishops, wonderful in leadership in younger days, have allowed dioceses to fall to pieces in later years, because their real ideas and leadership had died with added years of responsibility.

Of course, the problem arises, if we are to have a large list of retired bishops, as to how they should be retired. In America it is unusual to see a man in bishop's orders rector of a parish. It is not unusual in England. With us, no matter how much of a misfit a bishop may be, he and the diocese must continue to annoy one another until old age or death solves the problem. We do not allow translation traditionally, and we still have a pioneer Church in many places of our country where translation might prove harmful. So unless we can see that some men, whose usefulness as bishops is outworn, could still be used as parish rectors, we will have no solution to the problem.
